Love affairs and marriages are not particularly recommended. Assuming there is a physical attraction, romantic feelings are likely to develop quickly, then just as quickly dissolve away. Relationships of these kinds usually lack a firm basis, sexual or otherwise. The couple are quite capable of drifting and dreaming together, and of enjoying an easily shared affection, but unless painful problems arise that challenge this relaxed stance, their relationship rarely goes deep. Friendships and family relationships are generally much more successful. A broad spectrum of emotions may be expressed here, and the pair's conversation and interaction will range from the most humorous to the most serious. Family members may be close friends, friends may assume the status of family. Work relationships too may be favorable, as long as subjective elements do not intrude. Both partners often have a knack for technical matters, allowing them to deal with serious problems as they arise. Well-defined daily tasks will give this duo structure and direction, while entrepreneurial endeavors may become fanciful and lose touch with financial realities.

ADVICE: Try to stay grounded. Hard work helps to keep you in the present moment. Fight the tendency to focus too much on the future. Face problems and solve them.

CANCER II

An Aura of Wonderment

This combination has a magical quality that can provide inspiration and light to each partner. Discussions will be lively, but an underlying emotional sensitivity can keep them from becoming combative or wounding—the relationship brings out caring attitudes. Its richness in fantasy can make it great fun but also unrealistic or unstable in the long run. Gemini II's should enjoy the lively imagination and sense of humor of Cancer II's but may not care to have financial dealings with them. Cancer II's will probably find elements of the Gemini II personality exciting but may ultimately judge this partner too critical and conventional. Both partners have a dark side that they rarely, if ever, share with others. Should they reveal themselves to each other, they might find a sense of wonder here.

Romantic relationships may manifest as a short fling, in which case vivid memories and perhaps some disappointment or bewilderment are the best and worst to be expected. If a Cancer II becomes obsessed with a Gemini II who is only interested in temporary pleasure, however, hurt will ensue. Gemini II's don't like being chased, and the Cancer II's unrequited love may become a frustrating, even humiliating experience.

Marriage and work combinations may not be advisable: these two are not a practical team. Both of them have an unrealistic side, which coalesces in their relationship and threatens to undermine most of their financial and technical endeavors. Although Gemini II–Cancer II homes are sometimes vividly decorated, the habit of paying for furniture and other household goods by stretching credit up to and beyond the limit does not bode well for family solvency. Friendships and family relationships can work out best in this combination. As friends or siblings, these two can build a magical world for themselves. The simplest activities can feel inspiring, being infused with innovative sparkle. Play in its most basic sense is brought to the level of a fine art here. Separately these two often lack the capacity to share with others; onlookers may not believe it when they see them playing together with such attention and abandon.

ADVICE: Try to be objective. Don't overextend yourself financially. Take things as they come, without expectations. Keep your self-respect.

THE WEEK OF THE PERSUADER
CANCER III

Back on Track

Life direction is a powerful theme for these partners, who seem to have an instinctive psychic link that enables each to understand exactly where the other is in his or her life's journey. Yet they are oddly detached—maintaining their boundaries, they keep a watchful eye on each other from a certain distance. Should one of them veer off course, the other will step in to help. Both have a practical side that their relationship brings out. Authoritarian attitudes should be guarded against here but are sometimes necessary in planning for the future. The pair may find themselves acting out their relationship in the public eye. If well directed and acting in consort, they are capable of steady progress together.

Love affairs and marriages may be affected by Cancer III attempts at dominance. Gemini II's will generally go along with beneficial ideas that lead to greater security, but they want their opinions to be taken into account and are adept at evading a Cancer III's grasp. The couple may have problems in communication: Cancer III's won't always understand a Gemini II's often far-out ideas. And if difficulties arise on the physical or sexual plane, as they may, it will be difficult for the couple to sit down and talk about them. Gemini II's have difficulty getting in touch with their feelings, and Cancer III's, although more sensitive in this area, may be reluctant to discuss private matters.

Work relationships can be excellent here, especially when the Cancer III is boss, giving direction to the highly original suggestions of a Gemini II employee. The pair will have a lot of respect for each other. As co-workers, however, they may have difficulty sustaining a demanding project, since both are likely to grow nervous as deadlines approach. Cancer III's can make caring and nurturing parents for their talented Gemini II children, both allowing them space and supporting them. Sibling relationships, particularly same-sex ones, can feature power struggles and argumentativeness, especially at family gatherings or other public affairs. Friendships in this combination are often forward-looking, egging their social circle on to new initiatives.

ADVICE: Respect a need for direction and authority. Be more cooperative with the leader. Calm your nerves. Take the time to explain yourself.

THE CUSP OF OSCILLATION
CANCER-LEO CUSP

Own Worst Enemy

The emotional side of this relationship is prominent—these partners have the ability to reach a deep level of understanding. “Empath” is the keyword here, signifying a kind of merger or blending of personalities, both for better and for worse. Both Gemini II and Cancer-Leo unfortunately have a nervous and unstable side that is reinforced in their combination, undermining interactions between them. There is usually no end to the energy, enthusiasm, innovation or salesmanship of this relationship, or to its ability to face challenges, no matter how dangerous, but it also generates such erratic, even frenzied energies that it becomes its own worst enemy.

Romance between these two can be passionate and exciting, carrying both partners away. When they return from the trip, however, they may see the relationship in an entirely different light. Travel, fashion, style, art and music are highly valued, and the ability to share in these areas is considerable. Creative or business activities between lovers are not unusual.

In marriage the matchup is likely to lose a lot of its spark. Predictable routines and responsible handling of tasks are not what this relationship is about at all. In a curious way, though, bad marriages may be more successful than good ones, since problems, imbalance and insecurity can fuel the relationship's motor. Marriages that have been falling apart for years, in other words, or that have experienced great stress, somehow continue to interest and unite these spouses. As friends sharing activities and interests, these two are quite emotionally reactive, so that conflicts are likely to erupt spontaneously between them with a certain regularity. Gemini II–Cancer III family relationships, particularly close ones, such as parent-child and sibling matchups are likely to be unstable. If the pair are to form business partnerships, or to work side by side for an organization, they must overcome their sensitivity to each other's feelings. Although helpful up to a point, this kind of empathy often subverts the practical and pragmatic attitudes needed to get the job done.

ADVICE: Stabilize your activities. Find a quiet place within. Grow new buttons that can't so easily be pushed. Develop your practical side.

THE WEEK OF AUTHORITY
LEO I

Regulating the Flame

This relationship can build character. Although a potentially explosive mix, the Gemini-air–Leo-fire combination burns with a bright flame that melts away any dross in the hot crucible of experience. Neither of these two is likely to hold back in their criticisms of each other, but if this testing of each other's personalities doesn't break them apart, it will strengthen their bond (assuming, that is, an equal amount of give-and-take on both sides). Should they form a team or partnership, their tremendous energy is likely to overcome even the most determined opposition. Should they fall out or, through the vagaries of fortune be set against one another as opponents, they are likely to give no quarter and make no concessions to their former relationship.

Love affairs here are likely to be intense, perhaps too intense to last. If the relationship is to continue, the couple may just have to get married, a kind of relationship in which their energies are likely to be more balanced. Friendships between these two may turn to love, or vice versa, as long as their respect for each other remains intact. Platonic relationships in this combination are no less strong than passionate ones, and ultimately may prove more satisfying and enduring.

Gemini II–Leo I sibling or parent-child relationships can form a solid backbone for a family. Should problems or head-on confrontations occur, however, the group is likely to be shaken to its roots. Work projects are highly favored here: Leo I's will allow Gemini II's to lead, and vice versa, as long as mutual respect is maintained. Co-worker matchups are less in the cards for this duo than executive or entrepreneurial partnerships. The verbal and communicative strengths of a Gemini II meld powerfully with the wisdom and implementative abilities of a Leo I, the Gemini II more likely to set up or innovate, the Leo I to see the project through until the fruits of the pair's labor can be reaped.

ADVICE: Relax. Regulate your flame to avoid burnout. Balance your energies, and make sure they are pointed in the right direction.

THE WEEK OF BALANCED STRENGTH
LEO II

A Secret Irreverence

This relationship brings out the unusual side of both partners. Gemini II's and Leo II's respect tradition but do not worship it, agreeing that established conventions may simply be excuses for bad habits; what works, rather than what should work, is uppermost in their minds. In consequence, their relationship is markedly pragmatic in outlook. Unconventional attitudes prevail here, though the partners usually stay within the bounds of good sense. They also exhibit a good deal of humor. The result is a strange mix. Finding kindred spirits in each other, these two may enjoy a good joke at the expense of more traditional associates, or even a bit of gossip, both of these discreetly behind the scenes.

Gemini II–Leo II love affairs are likely to be honest but never fly in society's face. Publicly, in other words, they mute their relationship's uniqueness, sharing it mainly during more intimate moments. Both of them feel that what happens between two people is their business alone. In its physical aspect the relationship is likely to be frank, open and creative, with no holds barred. Kindness and consideration are certainly present here but are often of secondary importance. Marriages in this combination can be successful if the partners achieve a balance between their outlooks. Should they be able to effect a compromise between Gemini II criticality and independence and the Leo II drive toward dominance, lasting harmony can result. If not, expect the worst. Balance is harder to achieve in friendships and family relationships, where the frank and often cutting remarks of Gemini II's can wound and anger Leo II's, who are likely to reply with violent outbursts and then stony silences. Gemini II's are liable to feel misunderstood by Leo II's, who often don't seem to care much about them.

Working relationships in more traditional settings, such as corporations, are not recommended for this pair, given their unconventional attitudes. Their irreverence may well contribute to the success of an entrepreneurial endeavor, however, as long as adversarial tendencies are prevented from coming to the fore, making daily contact difficult and disturbing others in the workplace.

ADVICE: Open lines of communication. Try to diminish conflict. Establish stronger ties with the world. Be aware of your effect on others.

THE WEEK OF LEADERSHIP
 LEO III

Take No Prisoners

This relationship's indomitable facade conceals a bloody battle for supremacy. The overall attitude is "Take no prisoners." The major problem here is Leo III dominance and whether Gemini II's can accept it—not an impossible task for them, as long as they feel that their efforts are appreciated and rewarded. But their inability to keep quiet about whatever is bothering them will often lead to conflict, especially when they accurately accuse a Leo III of inefficiency or incompetence. The Gemini II way of bringing out a Leo III's insecurities may make it difficult or impossible for this pair to live or work together. Yet Leo III's do value Gemini II judgments and opinions and may even come to depend on them.

In their relationship with a Gemini II spouse and in the family hierarchy generally, Leo III's will want to be boss. Gemini II's, however, have a charm, cleverness and seductiveness that often enable them to get their way with Leo III's, who are tough but have an undeniable weakness here. A cycle may recur in which Leo III's try to control Gemini II's by spoiling them, showering them with gifts, and encouraging them to think they are actually in the superior position; should these favors later be withdrawn, Gemini II's are likely to feel helpless and defeated—and may respond by redoubling their manipulative efforts. Love affairs and friendships are not recommended here, since the level of conflict tends to be high, and honesty and depth of emotion will be difficult to achieve.

Work relationships, too, are complex. When Leo III's have to build a team, a sparkling Gemini II may be their single best lieutenant. There is a big problem here, however—not the efficiency of Gemini II's (they will have little problem understanding what Leo III's want and how to implement it) but their insubordination. Together, also, the pair will have an abrasive attitude toward co-workers. Leo III's and Gemini II's do not always work well together on an equal level, since vicious power struggles are likely to emerge between them.

ADVICE: Try to be honest. Tone down abrasiveness. Minimize conflict. Be aware of manipulation. Develop your finest and most constructive qualities.

THE CUSP OF EXPOSURE
 LEO-VIRGO CUSP

Encouraging Self-Expression

The major theme of this combination is seduction—not in the sensual sense, but in that of lulling people into revealing themselves. It is a kind of seduction that encourages self-expression: each of these personalities, and particularly Leo-Virgo, has a dark or complicated side, but each is capable of advancing mutual understanding by persuading the other to reveal him- or herself. In this combination, Gemini II's can resemble salespeople trying to sell Leo-Virgos on the idea that they are worthwhile people who should emerge from their private world. In return, Gemini II's may be able to express themselves as never before: communication is the important thing for them, and Leo-Virgos are certainly acute enough to understand their unique language. Actually, in letting Gemini II's spend so much time persuading them, Leo-Virgos may have been just studying the Gemini II language style.

In love affairs these two can be explorers plumbing each other's emotions. Like Prince Charming and Sleeping Beauty, they can awaken each other's innermost feelings with a kiss. The breaching of both partners' defenses might also be difficult and dangerous, however, since Leo-Virgos seldom want help in choosing what to reveal, or when, and Gemini II's fear self-exposure as making them look foolish. Marriages can bring these tensions to a head: they may be full and rich, but Leo-Virgo resentment over the disruption of their privacy and autonomy can cause periodic outbursts and depressions, resulting in Gemini II frustration over being misunderstood. Gemini II–Leo-Virgo friends must learn to operate on an equal footing, which won't be easy. But if Leo-Virgos can share quiet times with Gemini I's, or join them in social forays—only of their own free will, and because they want to—the relationship has a chance of success. Gemini II bosses and parents can be nurturing and encouraging to Leo-Virgo employees and children. Any hint of patronization, however, will usually make Leo-Virgos go silent, and if more pronounced may damage their self-esteem. Great sensitivity must be shown here, then, and undue praise strictly avoided.

ADVICE: Allow emotions to emerge spontaneously. Toughen your will and resolve. Be as concerned with wants as with needs. Find your heart's desire.

THE WEEK OF SYSTEM BUILDERS
VIRGO I

Only a Finger's Breadth Away

This relationship reinforces air and earth qualities (associated with mental and pragmatic forces, respectively), but reconciling these forces won't always be easy or even possible: earthly drives to succeed, to enjoy and even to control others will vie here with more imaginative, impractical and unpredictable influences. In the best-case scenario, however, the result will be a coalescence in a pragmatic yet deeply imaginative combination. The common influence of Mercury (the ruling planet of both Gemini and Virgo) supplies an additional push toward logic and reasonableness.

Love affairs will feature a sensuous and stabilizing influence, encouraging back rubs, warm baths and cozy cuddling. But an equal, opposing and disturbing force can shatter repose in an instant, sending uncontrolled emotions flying, and it is never more than a finger's breadth away. Care must be taken that passions do not turn ugly and lead to violence, whether of word or of deed.

Marriages and work relationships between these two are often pragmatic and financially successful yet underlaid by instability. Both partners sometimes have a fatalistic feeling that their relationship could change in an instant, with favorable influences and expectations dissolving into thin air. This insecurity, however, may only push them to aim higher in their joint achievements, be these in the familial, domestic, financial or professional spheres. Spouses in this combination can often work together in exciting and imaginative career endeavors.

Friendships and family relationships can bring out the combination's nervous side. Anxiety and even paranoia can rear their ugly heads, making easy communication impossible. Parent-child relationships in particular are likely to bring out the worst, as the Gemini I propensity for relentless criticism and the Virgo I drive for order combine to drive everyone around them to distraction. It is when these two are most in agreement that they will be most trying for the rest of the family; when they disagree, other points of view will have a better chance of prevailing.

ADVICE: Let the good times roll. Don't expect the roof to cave in all the time—one day it will! Follow your instincts and feelings more. Give others some rest.

THE WEEK OF THE ENIGMA
VIRGO II

Mixed Signals

Duality is the theme here, and synthesis in a coherent whole is likely to be the struggle. Each of these partners has two distinct (though not necessarily opposite) sides; thus four different couples can emerge in the relationship, causing much confusion. The combination also has a sibling- or twinlike style, making equality of talents its hallmark. Myths of twins such as Isis and Osiris, the married sibling gods of ancient Egypt, or Romulus and Remus, legendary builders of Rome, are invoked here. Such myths address the existence of a dark side in humanity, and this combination's ultimate goal is grappling with and integrating that dark side—into a creative endeavor of the self or of the relationship. Given the variety of personality aspects involved, and the size of the task, a lot of instability and mood swings are inherent here.

Love affairs, if they develop at all, often lack the tenacity to grapple with all this. Virgo II's are usually inaccessible to Gemini II's, who won't understand their mixed signals and puzzling responses. Although excellent at formulating verbal language, Gemini II's may have trouble translating the silent, highly personal language of Virgo II's. Marriages here face similar problems.

Gemini II–Virgo II friends are on the same mental wavelength but control their emotions tightly. Should Virgo II's withdraw into a depressive slump, Gemini II's usually know when to let them work things out by themselves and when to jump in and help. Work relationships can be productive, but mutual irritation can make everyday cooperation chancy, particularly with regular co-workers. As administrators or entrepreneurs, Gemini II's can provide the insights and Virgo II's the application to forge a unit that can be counted on for solving problems and drawing up agreements. The relationship can be especially strong in the legal sphere.

Family relationships, particularly parent-child and sibling matchups, are rocky. Sharp verbal exchanges are frequent, and should these two be left alone together for long, especially in late adolescence and early adulthood, an edgy feeling will emerge. Making peace, however, will become increasingly important in later life.

ADVICE: Try to live less in your head. Rely on intuition more. Establish a firmer basis for your life. Let go of worries and anxieties.

Opening to New Ideas

This relationship shines in the mental sphere. Its focus is likely to be intelligent conversation punctuated by good feeling. Although both partners can be hardheaded, in this matchup they communicate ideas well, exercise common sense and are adept at making plans for the future. They are also witty and funny. The relationship is likely to embrace team projects involving construction and creativity, perhaps in the areas of craft or design. Both partners are open to new ideas rather than bound by traditional ones.

Flexibility is a trademark of Gemini II–Virgo III love affairs. Nonattachment is generally cultivated here, with freedom of action not just a privilege but a requirement. These open attitudes actually encourage the partners to remain faithful to each other—strict rules might only make them break up. As long as they can breathe free, the relationship is likely to continue in relative harmony.

Marriages are a bit more problematic. Gemini II's are not always physically available, and the temperatures of Virgo III's are likely to rise if they get stuck with the brunt of the work. Arguments are likely not only over distribution of chores but over money and children. Both partners are verbal types, and their repartee can be highly stimulating but can also take a destructive turn toward irony and sarcasm. The dramatic side of both partners usually emerges at such times.

Gemini II–Virgo III family relationships and especially friendships can be outstanding. These two are often bound by strong bonds of loyalty and understanding. Should they become best friends, however, they must be careful not to shut others out. It is only to the extent that their relationship can become inclusive rather than exclusive that it guarantees its own longevity. Work relationships in this combination may shift into the areas of friendship and love, impairing their effectiveness.

ADVICE: Don't shut others out or let humor turn hurtful. Don't neglect tradition. Avoid arguing about money. Be objective at work.

THE CUSP OF BEAUTY
VIRGO-LIBRA CUSP

Needed: A Firm Basis

The challenge here is to find an underlying set of principles that will enhance both the relationship and its individual partners, providing a grounding influence. This source of authority could be financial, religious or aesthetic. Should this pair be interested in popular culture, especially music, film and design, they could easily base their lifestyle on appreciation of and participation in such areas. Because they are extremely caught up in being taken seriously by others and in appearing as "players," matters of style appeal strongly to them, and an up-to-date, modern outlook, together with a bit of snobbery, can be the basis of authority they need. Together they are capable of carving out a creative niche in whatever field interests them.

Gemini II's will enjoy telling Virgo-Libras about current happenings in the popular arts, and Virgo-Libras will like to investigate these areas for themselves. Love affairs, friendships and marriages in this combination, then, can be unashamedly based on activities that others consider superficial: watching films and television, listening to new CDs, reading books or fashionable magazines, cruising the Internet, developing a CD-rom library. For this couple, such subjects mean not only enjoyment but education, for they study them in depth and put the knowledge they gain to creative use. Should these two share a common domestic space, it often shows these influences graphically in its decor, art, etc.

Family matchups here are unlikely to arouse strong emotion. By getting along easily, however, Gemini II's and Virgo-Libras can develop strong bonds and a healthy outlook on life—they don't need anguish to bring them together. When crises arise, this calm affect can work positively on other family members, especially nervous or excitable ones. Should the relationship encompass an entrepreneurial enterprise, such as a shop or business, or should it include freelance work, great care will have to be paid to money matters. Although a career connection with a friend or mate may help to establish the common basis that the relationship requires, fiscal irresponsibility is a constant danger, and financial failure will throw the pair into turmoil.

ADVICE: Adopt a set of principles and stick to them. Be aware of a tendency to act superior. Pay attention to your cash flow—you are probably relying too much on credit.

The strong mental connection between these two makes the sharing of ideas and concepts primary in their relationship. These ideas may be either intellectual or practical, depending on whether the pair share everyday responsibilities. The relationship can be extremely easygoing, and in fact may have to be—dealing with painful or disturbing subjects may not really be possible here. Outsiders sometimes view this matchup as near perfect, but of course they don't know what's going on at its heart. It is a relationship that emphasizes humor, intelligence and ease of interaction more than intensity or passion.

Frustrations can emerge in love and marriage. Gemini II's may be anxious to make contact with their Libra I partner at a deeper emotional level, and will feel defeated when such sharing is refused. Libra I's, on the other hand, may want Gemini II's to be less flaky and more organized. Actually, in both of these areas, the relationship often both demands and gets the best of which these two are capable. Indeed Gemini II–Libra I love affairs are pervaded by unrealistic and undermining attitudes—which can more or less disappear, however, once the marriage knot is tied. Expectation often plays too strong a role in marriage, setting the couple up for disappointment, but enough satisfaction is often gained to keep the relationship intact for years.

Friendships in this combination are comfortable and stimulating, but parent-child and sibling matchups are more apt to achieve true closeness. In fact, a father-daughter or mother-son relationship may resemble a friendship as much as or more than it does a family connection. In these meetings of the minds, mental and emotional sympathies diminish the chances of misunderstanding. A truly unselfish love is possible here.

Work relationships between these two are unlikely to be quite productive or innovative enough. Both of these individuals can sometimes be self-defeating in matters of career or work and should take great care to be conscious of their tendencies in this regard.

ADVICE: Strive for unconditional giving. Selfish attitudes lead to separation. Be prepared to listen. Nothing human is perfect or eternal.

Working Hunches

Rich in potential, this relationship has the capacity to achieve any goal as long as its partners choose to capitalize on its strengths: fidelity, patience and intuition. This pair would do well to proceed on hunches rather than on logic, and either to initiate projects or to point established ones in new directions. The challenge here, in fact, will be to develop a strong, trustworthy and reliable modus operandi for beginning and then maintaining new projects. The relationship promises peaceful coexistence, little friction and few problems, but tension is often the midwife of growth, and if these two want their pairing to be a dynamic one they will need to focus on goals outside themselves.

Love affairs, for example, may just drift and dream. They are pleasant enough, perhaps, but they lack strong conviction. These partners have a sensationalistic streak, and may be looking for the latest new thrill; if so, they are often hunting in opposite directions. If they instead get a bit more serious about the world in general and their relationship in particular, they will open up new worlds of mutual involvement. Discovering the joys of learning and self-discovery, whether through reading, research or life experience, will provide a positive focus.

Marriages here can be highly successful in the eyes of the world. In attending to domestic needs, however, these two may neglect to further their own development, both as a couple and as individuals. In this respect, even the happiest marriage may cheat Gemini II's and Libra II's of their inalienable birthright: personal growth. Friends, spouses and family members in this combination are quite likely to join together in career or business endeavors. These commercial relationships can be trusting and fun, and may go well—but with a bit more push they could do much better. This is the place where it is especially important for the partners to trust their intuition rather than logic or common sense, and quite simply go for it, rather than hanging back and weighing pros and cons.

ADVICE: Develop more backbone. Give structure and directed energy to your work. Make more demands. Don't forget your own personal development.

Tempting, Alluring, Maddening

An exciting relationship is likely to develop here. The crucial factor in whether it will endure is this pair's ability to accept each other, including all of their little imperfections and unpleasanties, once their initial interest in each other has faded. Resembling sometimes a football field, sometimes a battlefield, the relationship is tempting, alluring, maddening, unreasonable—kaleidoscopic in scope. Gemini II energy will attract Libra III's, who don't usually go out of their way to appear interested. Their coolness and objectivity will in turn appeal to Gemini II's and will often provoke their deeper feelings. Neither party is looking for trouble or problems in this relationship, but this is no guarantee of their absence.

Love affairs are likely to be particularly unstable. The emphasis here is on youthful energies and spontaneous displays of feeling. Sex tends to be unplanned and exciting, but there is the possibility that it will bring out some of both partners' more undesirable characteristics. Provocative or inflammatory scenes and downright meanness are quite likely here. Gemini II's may at times feel dominated by powerful Libra III's, but this can have its allure. Libra III's who get caught up in the frenetic energies of Gemini II's will find such loss of control uncomfortable.

Marriage may not be recommended as a next step in these tumultuous relationships. Nor is it often possible for cooled-down or failed love affairs to result in friendships. On the other hand, should Gemini II's and Libra III's meet first as friends, they are quite likely to be able to establish an easy give-and-take. Again, the relationship's solidity and depth will depend on its degree of acceptance.

Work relationships may be much too volatile to succeed. Libra III's have to be given free rein, and should Gemini II's become in any way dependent on them, rejection is inevitable. Parents and children in this combination are usually able to work out their differences over the years; quite loving attitudes may emerge from stormy childhoods, and reconciliations are possible in the maturity of adult life.

ADVICE: Try to be more objective. Concentrate on love's positive aspects. Handle violent feelings with care. Work toward greater understanding.

LIBRA-SCORPIO CUSP

Impacting on the World

This combination could give forthright direction to a wide variety of projects: Gemini II's and Libra-Scorpios do well as a leadership team in clubs, schools and artistic or business enterprises. The emphasis of their relationship is generally less on their interactions with each other than on their joint impact on the world around them. These two have critical and verbal skills that meld, and working together they are likely to be able to achieve great success in publishing, journalism, teaching, work involving languages or translation, and perhaps politics or law. Given the relationship's leadership qualities, however, getting stuck together in a stuffy, boring or academic pursuit would be immensely frustrating. The Gemini II–Libra-Scorpio team must use their talents to convince, to stimulate and ultimately to lead others to high achievement, be it in more popular or more esoteric spheres. Another danger here is that the pair will lose their broad vision, feel unappreciated and retreat into a narrow circle of admirers, preaching to the converted. They do best together, in fact, when capable skeptics disagree with them and put up some real resistance, challenging them and provoking them to higher expression.

Friendships, love affairs and marriages are all possible between these two, but these relationships will almost always emphasize issues greater than the partners' personal feelings for each other. Should external outlets for their leadership energies be denied or unavailable, frustration will often result, and the relationship's energies will turn inward—potentially quite a destructive outcome.

Grandparents in this combination can set the tone for a family over two, three or perhaps more generations. Their forceful attitudes will bring forth feelings of pride and dedication in their children and grandchildren. A sibling duo, particularly of the same sex, may also be extremely influential in determining a family's social and financial direction. Care must be taken not to trample on the feelings of more sensitive and passive family members, for whom personal development has greater importance.

ADVICE: Don't ignore personal feelings in yourself or others. Tone down your rhetoric. Allow others to decide for themselves. Hang back a bit.

THE WEEK OF INTENSITY
SCORPIO I

An Emotional Pipeline

Sensitivities run high here—this pair can find themselves on the same emotional pipeline, both for better and for worse. On the plus side, they can give each other a lot of emotional sustenance and inspiration. Seeing each other daily, however, they easily get on each other's nerves. The challenge here will be getting along, diminishing points of conflict and irritation while capitalizing on the combination's ability to create color, intimacy and even joy. Exchanges between these two are likely to be lively and stimulating, but Gemini II's may find themselves on the receiving end of the strong Scorpio I moral side, which leads these personalities to condemn thoughts and actions that they consider even a tad questionable.

Love affairs here are likely to be intense but fleeting. Even if the partners struggle to accept each other's faults, their extreme temperamental differences, and their relationship's highly critical outlook, are apt to cause problems. The chemistry here tends toward the excitable, with lots of humor and good times but also a degree of instability. For this reason, marriages too may prove problematic.

Friendships are usually energetic but demanding of the partners' attention, at least if they are to endure. A Gemini II involved in a troubled or failing love relationship may turn to a Scorpio I friend for support; whether such friendships turn into love or not, the situation is potentially explosive, since Scorpio I's will be highly protective of their Gemini II friends and risk losing all objectivity in taking their side. The triangles that result can be highly destructive, especially for Gemini II's, who are liable to be the most vulnerable party.

Parent-child relationships in this combination can be empathic and understanding, particularly mother-son and father-daughter matchups. Gemini II parents tend to let their Scorpio I children go their own way, but Scorpio I parents must be careful not to try to control the lives of their Gemini II offspring. At work, these two must be careful not to get hung up on details, or to let critical attitudes slow down the job and promote divisiveness.

ADVICE: Keep it light. Beware of claiming and condemning attitudes. Don't overreact to small problems. Try to keep things in perspective.

THE WEEK OF DEPTH
SCORPIO II

Inside Out

This combination illuminates shadow qualities of the partners' psyches. That is, it draws out and brings to consciousness their darker, least-acknowledged tendencies. In some ways a Scorpio II is a Gemini II turned inside out: Scorpio II depth and emotional intensity actually lurk within Gemini II's, who, however, may not know it. Meanwhile the Gemini II qualities of eccentricity and unusualness exist within Scorpio II's but are rarely exposed for others to see. The focus of this relationship, then, is likely to be revealing hidden truths, especially emotional ones, about both partners. More often than not, the process is unconscious—the partners are not aware that it is happening.

Friends may find these two a strange pair altogether, since Gemini II's are often sparkling and outgoing, Scorpio II's quiet and brooding. Yet at heart they are less different than they seem. A major problem here is that if either of them lacks awareness, or is not striving for it, they will project their own shadow sides, both positive and negative, onto each other, accusing each other of the very behaviors or attitudes that they covertly harbor themselves. Gemini II–Scorpio II love affairs often last and even progress to marriage. For the most part these two are well suited to each other. If difficulties arise, they will come when Gemini II's get hyper or Scorpio II's depressive; Scorpio II verbal reticence can drive Gemini II's to distraction, and potentially to frustration and depression. Dealing with anger and projection are perhaps the hardest problems here. For the most part, however, shared activities, strong sympathy and understanding, emotional support and a powerful physical attraction typify this energetic and usually easygoing relationship.

Friendships are possible, but without an effort to be objective they risk occasional misunderstandings and emotional flare-ups. These two perhaps do better as acquaintances, companions, colleagues or business partners, relationships probably focusing on objective pursuits rather than personal issues. Sibling relationships can be stormy and parent-child matchups difficult; revelation and exposure figure strongly here.

ADVICE: Take the time to understand. Try to be more honest about your own feelings. Trust must be earned. Secretiveness can be counterproductive.

Freed Up

This relationship is bound to be lively and pleasure oriented, without too much attachment. It is unlikely to focus on the material world. Scorpio III's, who often shoulder financial and real-world obligations, will feel some relief in this, although their sense of responsibility may remain high. Finding a less materialistic relationship more natural, Gemini II's may take the lead here, showing Scorpio III's how to free themselves of heavy obligations.

Letting go and nonattachment, both spiritual principles, are obviously important in this relationship. In love affairs, sexual ecstasy will serve a spiritual more than a carnal purpose. Romances of a more platonic nature may also develop easily here, with the physical element absent or quietly subdued. These partners may be excellent candidates for different forms of daily meditation or yoga (including tantric yoga, where enlightenment is achieved through sexuality). Gemini II's help Scorpio III's get started or moving, and Scorpio III's provide the security and stability that Gemini II's so desperately need.

Marriages will benefit from Scorpio III practicality but also from Gemini III astuteness and incisiveness. Parents in this combination are apt to be successful at raising children to be self-realized individuals, able to care for themselves. Family ties are important here, get-togethers with friends and relatives on holidays, birthdays and other special occasions being a particular joy. Parent-child relationships generally work best when the Scorpio III is the parent, usually exerting solid control without arousing a Gemini II child's antagonism. This is no guarantee, however, that subtle claiming attitudes will be absent. In the commercial sphere, a nonmaterially oriented Gemini II-Scorpio III relationship may occupy itself with serving others, community or church affairs, or any other spiritual, philosophic or religious orientation. The pair may find it especially easy—perhaps too easy—to handle money, which they will think of as a fluid energy medium rather than a commodity or possession. There is a risk that their lack of concern for money could bring on financial difficulties, even ruin.

ADVICE: Beware of losing contact with the earth. Material and spiritual need not be opposed. Take money a bit more seriously. Carry out daily tasks.

THE CUSP OF REVOLUTION
 SCORPIO-SAGITTARIUS CUSP

A Refusal to Be Bound

The focus of this combination, and perhaps its greatest necessity, is to give structure to the sometimes wild and unpredictable actions of its partners. Gemini II's and Scorpio-Sagittarians share characteristics that their relationship may magnify, including a cutting, critical and sarcastic side that can lead to confrontation and conflict. A refusal to be bound by the laws of social behavior and conventional morality will constantly land them in hot water, not only with other people but with each other. Their independence and wildness become more pronounced when they are a couple, exposing them to the danger of social condemnation or ostracism.

Love affairs, marriages and friendships in this combination depend for their survival on the extent to which the partners can agree on simple commonsense principles or moral codes that will bring them at least a modicum of stability and support. Marriages have the best chance here, for they usually demand the hammering out of stronger commitments and tougher compromises. Simply setting up daily routines, paying bills and organizing meals and all the other little details of family life will provide both an important element of structure within the relationship and the basis for a more systematic approach to life in general. Also, love affairs and friendships here are likely to blow with the wind. It is not that they cannot be enjoyable—in this sense they are often quite rewarding—but that they are likely to drift, rootlessly and to little purpose.

Workplaces and families again tend to impose some kind of structure. Here, however, Gemini II idiosyncrasy and Scorpio-Sagittarius rebellion are likely to arouse misunderstanding and anger. Co-workers and siblings in this combination will cling together in the face of company or parental fury. But if they can learn to compromise with authority figures and to begin to think of creative solutions, they will at last come of age, learning to coexist through a good mix of understanding and diplomacy.

ADVICE: A refusal to compromise will only close doors. Try to be diplomatic. Let daily routines bring structure into your life. Put your house in order.

Early Retirement

This relationship is highly spirited, but the deep feelings that it also shelters, and the desire to withdraw from the hubbub of daily life, allow it to serve its partners as a true retreat from an often hostile and uncomprehending world. Those surprised that two such outgoing and extroverted individuals would seek a quiet life together are neglecting the more soulful side of both of these personalities—certainly the side that this combination brings out.

Love affairs here can be close. Having previously encountered rejection and misunderstanding in love, Gemini II's and Sagittarius I's in love will feel great relief at finally being understood and accepted. Their ties can go very deep, creating a loyalty that neither partner might easily permit anywhere else. Outsiders may be shocked to see these two free spirits committing to each other so deeply. Perhaps it is because they see themselves so clearly in each other that Gemini II's and Sagittarius I's can empathize in this way.

In marriage these two must be careful neither to close themselves off too much from the world nor to exhibit a bitter or defeated attitude, particularly if they have children. Any such children will have the capacity to play a positive role in keeping their parents interested in the world, and also in keeping them young. Nevertheless, Gemini II's and Sagittarius I's together have an undeniable tendency to "retire" from their multifarious but often unhappy social activities.

Friendships and sibling relationships in this combination are generally physical, being especially devoted to sports, fitness training and other forms of exercise. Enthusiastic and able to translate their intense concentration into a will to win, Gemini II–Sagittarius I partners are likely to galvanize the energies of any team or group of which they are a part. Similar energies will often characterize professional relationships between co-workers laboring for a common cause.

ADVICE: Don't be cynical about the world. Concentrate on life's positive side. Develop your strengths. Be available to help.

Strange Tastes

This is a mysterious and puzzling relationship—even Gemini II's and Sagittarius II's themselves often don't understand how they ever came together. Sometimes they just drift into a relationship, perhaps after being introduced by a friend, meeting at a social event or being thrown together as part of a work team or community effort. Strangely, they can share a love affair for years before realizing how little they have in common and wondering how they could have been together for so long. Gemini II's and Sagittarius II's are directly opposite each other in the zodiac, which means they are polarized. One person's thoughts and actions go in one direction, the other's completely contrarily. The challenge they face is to synthesize their differences into a working whole. This will produce conflict and tension, but an awareness of the process at work will help the pair to achieve their goals, improve their understanding of the give-and-take of their relationship and lead to a great deal of joint creativity. Even then, however, they will have difficulty comprehending the nature of their relationship. It is as if they responded to each other without really knowing why, and found it hard to view the relationship objectively.

As friends and spouses, Gemini II's and Sagittarius II's often develop and indulge strange tastes indeed. Unusual habits are common, as well as singular interests in food, design, music, literature and film. These attitudes are not adopted to shock; the couple genuinely don't see anything offbeat in their actions and tastes—another example of the blind spot in their relationship. Similarly, those around them will think their family relationships border on the bizarre. Parent-child or sibling duos in this combination will pursue activities that have little or nothing to do with the rest of the family. In such pursuits they are best left to their own devices.

This kind of weirdness is rarely tolerated in the workplace, and it is usually best for these two not to make a daily team. If they do, their eccentricity could get them in hot water with authority figures.

Carrying Through on Commitments

These two are deeply involved in the idea of giving their word and holding to it. Truthfulness, honesty and carrying through on one's commitments are important ideas here. Yet because Gemini II's often have their own, highly individual language, and are likely to interpret what others say or write in an unusual way, it may not be easy to bind them to a simple agreement. Similarly, Sagittarius III's, who tend to see the larger line, may dismiss smaller details as petty or insignificant when in fact they have considerable meaning. Thus it may be extremely difficult for these two to come to an ordinary agreement, contractual or otherwise. Generally related to these issues is the fact that the written word will fascinate this pair—newspapers, magazines, novels and poetry will all hold a special place for them.

In marriages and work relationships, where matters of integrity are of basic and vital importance, problems won't necessarily arise immediately. Only when serious difficulties and even partial breakdowns surface does dispute over written or spoken intentions emerge. Gemini II's will try to hold Sagittarius III's to the minute details of any previous agreement, while Sagittarius III's will argue from a broad sense of the overall picture. These differences need not be irreconcilable as long as the partners can agree on how literally such statements should be taken.

Love affairs, family relationships and friendships are also likely to hinge on giving one's word, often in matters of emotional trust. In love and in parent-child matchups, promises made and broken may prove the sticking point—especially if the partner accused of breaking their word, sending mixed messages or leading their child to have false expectations is the Sagittarius III, usually the more dominant of the pair. A Gemini II lover, child or friend can be terribly wounded when a central fact that they have assumed to be true is suddenly called into question or revealed as an illusion. Misunderstandings among lovers, relatives and friends are likely to be much harder to deal with than those between spouses and co-workers.

ADVICE: Try to stay flexible and open-minded. Literal interpretations often miss the nuances. Not everything is as simple as it seems.

THE CUSP OF PROPHECY
SAGITTARIUS-CAPRICORN CUSP

Drifting and Dreaming

These two can get out of touch with reality pretty easily. Both partners are likely to have illusions, about each other and about life in general, and since their relationship synergistically reinforces this trait, its outlook is often clouded. Predictions and attitudes that become self-fulfilling prophecies are common here; particularly hazardous are negative expectations based on past failures, which produce scenarios that are likely to be repeated again and again unless the partners can release them and move on. The challenge is to turn such expectations in a positive direction, and perhaps, ultimately, to drop them altogether, allowing a new emphasis on living in the moment and taking one day at a time. The opportunity that the relationship offers these two is to harness the power of their imaginations so that it will manifest for their good.

Love and marriage here are unlikely to ignite deep passion or to be pleasant and free of strife. Yet they have an imaginative quality that prolongs them: each partner encourages the other's illusions. There is a real danger of these two creating a dream world, becoming a folie à deux. An understanding, insightful, patient and dedicated third party may be able to reveal such illusions and, if the trust is great enough, make the relationship stronger and more whole than it was before.

Friendships and family relationships tend to be a bit more realistic. Even so, if these two limit their responsibilities or refuse to take them seriously, their relationship tends to drift. They can have wonderful times together, but a real focus or underlying meaning tends to be lacking. This deficiency will quickly grow clear in times of crisis, especially if drug use has figured in the equation.

Perhaps working relationships are the most difficult of all—business and financial expectations will be problematic for this pair. But if they can generate imaginative ideas and leave the practical nuts-and-bolts work to another associate or partner, they may prove valuable to a social or community organization.

ADVICE: Periodically review your life story. Examine assumptions carefully. Pay attention to objective signs. Find a realistic basis for your thoughts.

This relationship usually focuses on physical beauty. The partners may be extremely attracted to each other, or may share a love of or interest in beautiful paintings, sculpture, crafts, design or music. The earthiness of Capricorn is felt here, but also the discerning eye of Gemini, and the coalescence of these qualities produces a relationship at once sensuous and filled with desire. The critical tendencies of both partners are invariably prominent, but their relationship usually applies them to aesthetic matters and makes them secondary to personal qualities.

Love affairs may be thrilling and fulfilling, particularly sexually. Gemini II's can be devoted lovers and Capricorn I's will appreciate their ardor. There is an underlying instability here, however, which may well lend excitement but may not augur well for permanence. The set of emotions these affairs unlock may recall Pandora's box: once opened, it may be difficult to shut.

Marriages are more successful. Capricorn I's are pragmatic in outlook, and Gemini II's may learn a great deal about practicality from them. They in turn will learn something about social grace and joie de vivre. Children will benefit from their parents' relationship, which both allows for fun and demands taking responsibility.

Friendships can be marred by communication difficulties. Gemini II's may feel that Capricorn I's only pretend to understand what they say and actually don't completely get it. If comprehension is indeed feigned, and the sham is uncovered at a later date, the Gemini II will be furious. Capricorn I's, meanwhile, may grow exasperated or even write the relationship off if Gemini II's continually miss appointments.

Conflicts may arise between Capricorn I parents or bosses and Gemini II children or employees, since in this combination the former tend to be dictatorial and the latter rebellious. Later in life these children may come to appreciate that their parents did their best, and these parents to accept their children for what they are. Making peace before an older parent dies will be essential for both partners' psychological well-being.

ADVICE: Come to terms with each other. Don't be distracted by externals. Dig a bit deeper spiritually. Try harder to understand and accept.

Healing Wounds

This relationship's energy lies in rejuvenation and healing. The combination may have a reviving effect on its partners, then, after either has been wounded in a relationship elsewhere, or when they are trying to cope with a crisis in their relationship with each other. But while there is a great capacity here for healing wounds both old and new, there is also an inherent instability, since each person's approach to life is very different. This makes the relationship's final outcome uncertain; in some cases these two will come together just to heal, and then move on. Still, this matchup will promote longevity and growth so long as each person is willing to devote time and energy to it, and to let its inherent healing capacity be expressed.

If one of these partners is depressed, perhaps mourning the loss of a marriage or primary love, the other is likely to prove a tremendous comfort in helping him or her to cope. It is important not to expect too much in such situations, however, and to be patient. Gemini II's, impatient by nature, are less likely to play the support role. Should the Gemini II–Capricorn II love affair or marriage itself fail, it is not unusual for these partners to try again with each other after their emotions have cooled down and understanding and acceptance have begun to emerge. Encouraging a slow but steady healing, and refusing to let the flames of passion ignite too quickly, may lead to a successful reconciliation. Should the partners decide to put the relationship to rest, on the other hand, the healing capacity here can help them to move on.

Broken familial bonds, especially within parent-child and sibling pairs, may periodically need mending. Such wounds can take years to heal, but the process of reconciliation will often bring the partners even closer together. Damaged friendships and work relationships may be less open to healing. Keep in mind that such relationships are often formed to help one or both partners move past old wounds, and once this is accomplished, the friendship may not last.

ADVICE: Don't give up. There may still be a chance. On the other hand, recognize when something has outlived its usefulness and learn to let go of attachments.

Meeting High Standards

These two make an attractive pair. Their relationship focuses on perfection, an idea that for them involves the idea of achievement: it is not an aesthetic ideal to be contemplated but a technical exactitude to measure up to, a moral integrity to live by. Capricorn III's play to win and have the steadfastness to do so. This attracts Gemini II's, who are also out to win but have less confidence in their ability and staying power. Still, Gemini II's usually accomplish their aims in their own way, and this affinity to the road less traveled appeals to Capricorn III's, who adhere more strictly to society's standards.

Few, however, could live up to the standards these two set themselves. Together they tend to view the world as terribly flawed, and to keep themselves impossibly aloof. Woe to the partner who fails to live up to the combination's standards: he or she will be damagingly self-punitive, suffering terribly even when the other partner casts no judgments at all. Usually it is the Capricorn III who plays the dominant role here and is better equipped to deal with the relationship's pressures—pressures that may make Gemini II's nervous and upset. It would make sense for these two to soften their perfectionist stance or to direct it to areas where productivity matters. In love, for example, this orientation can only prove harmful. A relationship that virtually hands out a checklist for appearance, sexual performance and emotional control will make the partners feel as if they were taking an exam. This can drive all spontaneity out of a love affair. In marriages and at work, on the other hand, high standards in domestic and professional tasks can be quite productive. Still, these two should drop firm expectations and investigate their relationship's real depth and potential. In doing so, they will also discover themselves as individuals.

Perfectionism rarely features strongly in most kinds of friendship, and the attempts of Gemini II–Capricorn III friends to achieve it are probably counterproductive. In the family, similarly, one family member demanding perfection may be bad enough, but two can be intolerable.

ADVICE: Keep standards up, but beware of unrealistic expectations. Minimize stress. Encourage spontaneity and initiative. In love, the fewer the rules the better.

THE CUSP OF MYSTERY & IMAGINATION
CAPRICORN-AQUARIUS CUSP

Work and Play

This relationship emphasizes being oneself. At least for adults, its focus is rediscovering the child within, the truly natural part of oneself. Nietzsche once defined maturity as "reacquiring the seriousness one had as a child at play," and indeed so-called responsible adults can learn a great deal about dedication to a task from children. Gemini II's and Capricorn-Aquarians may have difficulties with concentration, since they are often so open to the newest exciting developments and diversions that come along. Their relationship can be a good teacher in this respect, and together, perhaps, they may learn how to give their undivided attention to a job, marriage or other life pursuit.

Gemini II's and Capricorn-Aquarians have rollicking times in love affairs, but also quietly intimate ones. In both cases they are usually able to forget themselves and be absorbed in the activities of the moment. True, introspection does not figure prominently here, but one can learn a lot about oneself from watching what one does, and thus the relationship may raise consciousness if the partners are aware enough to learn.

Marriages and work relationships will be grounds for learning how work and play can be related. An integrated connection between these two areas, or at least the partners' ability to achieve a unity or at least see a connection between them, is the key to success here. Success may be judged by productivity, but also by monitoring the levels alternately of stress and of happiness.

Friendships and sibling relationships are apt to be open to and sympathetic to childlike behavior and the spirit of play, both of which receive a high priority here. Not only is the discharging of responsibilities accomplished with the same verve with which the partners engage in play, but an imaginative spirit may be introduced in daily tasks to make them more palatable. Parent-child tensions are considerable and will periodically need to be resolved.

ADVICE: Find the balance between childlike and adult behavior, and let each be a model for the other. Work need not be unpleasant nor play trivial.

Societal Expertise

Although this relationship is unlikely to be deeply emotional, it is strong socially. These well-suited partners make an excellent combination when interacting with others in clubs, family gatherings and community endeavors. Aquarius I quick wits and Gemini II communication skills coalesce to develop an effective and respected social expertise. The relationship is characterized less by empathy for others than by an objective savvy that guarantees the success of group endeavors. And since both partners are original thinkers, it would not be surprising to find them working quietly to bring new or innovative ideas or trends into a more visible social position. Although the relationship shines in certain areas, it is woefully deficient in others: the great challenge will be for it to confront itself, deepening and enriching itself interpersonally. Recognizing and grappling with problems, meeting painful situations head-on and coping with grief and loss will offer opportunities to make the relationship a less lopsided one.

In love, marriage and friendship, Gemini II's and Aquarius I's are usually less interested in their own development and interaction than in leaving the door open for friends and family to join them in social activities. Whether entertaining or just enjoying conversations, video, games, tv or the Internet, they often include a third or fourth party in the group. Going out is a big item, and among a circle of friends they often take the lead in organizing tickets for concerts, shows and films. They should not be seen as superficial by any means, for they often serve an important function in the group dynamic, lending a sympathetic ear to those in crisis and also, by example, helping others to acquire social skills.

Gemini II–Aquarius I pairs are well suited as co-workers and siblings, bringing liveliness to everyday activities. With these two around there is rarely a dull moment.

ADVICE: Dig deeper. Your relationship is as interesting and important as the rest of the world. Work on confronting problems, not escaping from them.

Blazing in the Firmament

Normally easygoing and independent, in combination these partners have a competitive side, particularly apparent in a desire to get the attention of others. Issues of needing and being needed figure prominently here. Both pretending not to need the other person at all and wanting the other person to need them more could be recurrent themes, as well as wanting to be needed by the world at large.

Gemini II and Aquarius II lie trine to each other in the zodiac (120° apart), so that traditional astrology predicts an easy time for this airy couple. Yet their relationship is ruled by fire, associated with intuition, and is therefore apt to involve struggle. By working through issues together, Gemini II's and Aquarius II's become uncharacteristically introspective and can truly examine themselves and their values.

The need to be needed is especially evident in love, family and marital relationships. Acute dependencies can arise here, accompanied by addictions to food, drink or drugs. The need to have a good time is sometimes made the most important value—a highly destructive move. Withdrawal symptoms will manifest if one partner decides he or she has had enough or is seduced away by a new prospect. These situations can spark explosive crises, replete with wide emotional swings but also tremendous opportunities for self-discovery and growth. Even anger and disillusionment may play constructive roles in demanding that feelings be faced.

Friendships are more likely to endure, especially if they practice objectivity and nonclaiming attitudes. The need to be the star will create competitiveness, but the pair are capable of becoming a true team, struggling together instead of against each other to gain attention. The overall process is no less egotistical, of course, but is more conducive to the relationship's longevity and worldly success.

Career matchups are perhaps the best for these two, being able to fulfill the relationship's aggressive and outgoing aspects and its need to blaze a trail in the firmament. As colleagues or business partners, Aquarius II's will often ease Gemini II tension while Gemini II's will encourage Aquarius II's to be more forthright and incisive.

ADVICE: Don't lose the opportunity to grow. Beware of addictions. Try to see yourself clearly. Self-discovery is also a sign of success.

Behind the Scenes

These two might bring out each other's nervous side. Unstable as the relationship can sometimes be, however, its essentially vital and flamboyant character is appreciated by both partners and by others in its neighborhood. Outright theatrical impulses can emerge here, and whether in a figurative or a real stage situation, Gemini II's and Aquarius III's are likely to put on a good show. Indeed, performance is likely to become the focus of this outgoing relationship.

Air, the element of thought, rules this relationship. Although love affairs may be filled with desire and passion, the mind is never omitted from the equation. Fantasy and quick communication characterize these affairs; the couple not only enjoy each other physically but heighten their pleasure through an acute consciousness and awareness of whatever is going on. The emphasis on the mental realm, however, with its constant analyzing and criticizing, can go too far at times, interfering with the unself-conscious or natural expression of feelings.

Marriages and friendships in this combination must be careful not to pull in negative energy. Such relationships are often magnetic, but the people they attract are just the wrong kind for them—disturbing or seductive influences who may prove divisive, threatening their survival. There is definitely a destructive element at work in these relationships, which have a dark side that may not be evident to the partners themselves but that may nevertheless have to satisfy their own deep needs. Should such shadow areas be ignored or pushed aside, uncontrollable impulses or monstrous problems may be summoned up, possibly involving children or mutual friends.

Parent-child combinations can be mutually devoted and on the same wavelength but can also be disturbing and demanding to daily family life. Favoritism within the relationship may be hurtful to other relatives, making them feel shut out and creating envy and resentment. In career matters, Gemini II's and Aquarius III's can go too far in creating drama and may display a disturbing lack of financial as well as of human understanding.

ADVICE: Mute expressiveness a bit. Beware of creating jealousies. Tend to your dark side by confronting and dealing with self-destructive impulses.

THE CUSP OF SENSITIVITY
 AQUARIUS-PISCES CUSP

Groundbreaking Projects

These two may have problems living together day to day, but they are well suited to engaging in enterprising, even groundbreaking projects together. Overall, then, their relationship is likely to be connected with exploration and investigation. Aquarius-Pisces have an aggressive and success-seeking side that will probably meld well with Gemini II energies. They may, however, be too complex for Gemini II's to understand, and their need for silence and privacy may be disturbed by this partner's motor mouth.

Love affairs and friendships between these two are not highly recommended. The emotional depth and sensitivity of Aquarius-Pisces are unlikely to be acknowledged or even perceived by Gemini II's, who find it hard to handle strong feelings, and who may take this partner's silences as rejection. The fact that Gemini II's may well be attracted to such deep individuals does not make these two the best choices for each other.

Marriages may work out better, as long as the spouses have many joint activities to share and do not expect too much of each other emotionally. If this is not the case, they might have the kind of marriage in which they both go their own way, leading fairly independent lives and spending little, albeit quality, time together. Having children must be carefully considered here, however.

Conflict often manifests between these two in the family due to differences in temperament, but a parent-child or sibling pair can furnish the motivation for the family group to move forward in a search for something beyond the ordinary events of everyday life. Inspirational but also a bit kooky, the Gemini II-Aquarius-Pisces pair contributes diversity, daring, expectation and variety to the family of which they are a part.

Working relationships are likely to be excellent. Scientific and technical professions are particularly recommended, either as colleagues or co-workers. Teacher-student relationships may also shine in the areas of research, intellectual discussion and critical commentary.

ADVICE: Try to be more sympathetic and understanding. Differences of temperament can be reconciled. Don't push too hard too fast.

Easily Punctured Balloons

This dramatic relationship is likely to emphasize critical thought and observation. Mental challenges of all kinds attract this pair, from puzzles to chess to computer games. There is often a friendly rivalry as to who knows best and who knows more. The frequent winner is an I-told-you-so. Vivid Pisces I imagination and Gemini II verbal skills coalesce to produce a lively combination. Pisces I's are pleased to indulge their mental capabilities here, for in many of their relationships it is their emotional side that is principally emphasized.

Love affairs may be unstable. The Gemini II–Pisces I chemistry tends to be volatile and expressive, with feelings flying every which way. Pisces I's may find Gemini II's irritating and undependable, Gemini II's may find Pisces I's dreamy and unincisive. Romantic illusions abound and, like balloons, are easily punctured. Marriages that evolve from such affairs require work on settling differences, becoming more realistic and building a foundation.

Gemini II–Pisces I friendships can be stimulating and fun. A mutual love of games will keep the pair busy, and as a unit they tend to have taste and discernment in matters of food, art and entertainment. Play for them is not just a way of passing time but an activity that they can raise to a high technical and artistic level. Competitiveness between these two is usually constructive, urging them on to better their personal and cumulative best. Nor does the relationship neglect intimacy, for Pisces I's usually have a great deal to teach their Gemini I friends about quiet and the sharing of meditative moments.

Family and work matchups in this combination tend to be busy and provocative in nature. Contention may swirl around this relationship, which seems fated to arouse competitive urges in those in the immediate vicinity. Like a catalyst, the Gemini II–Pisces I relationship may get things initiated or moving faster without really participating in the activity or process itself.

ADVICE: Try to be more realistic in matters of love. Be aware of the difference between illusion and reality. Consider the outcomes of your words or actions on others.

A Deep Inward Connection

Unbeknownst to them, these two make a profound mark on their environment. Their relationship is about power, though not of the worldly kind that builds empires and conquers mountains; rather, it is something more personal that these two bring out in each other. This power becomes not only a symbol of but a reason for the deep inward connection here. With the relationship's support, these two can more courageously express who they are and who they want to be.

The quality of the Gemini II–Pisces II connection is often most apparent in their love affairs. This love is often more spiritual or platonic than physical, although sexual passion cannot be ruled out. Problems of communication arise, since Pisces II's may periodically go incommunicado, isolating themselves in their own world, removed from both the stresses of life and the anxious queries of their partner. They may also be made insecure by the Gemini II need to go outside the relationship periodically for comfort or affection, a step they tend to regard as an act of betrayal.

Marriages are emotionally rich and may work, though on the whole they lack the stability to hold together. Gemini II and Pisces II are square (90° apart) to each other in the zodiac, an omen of difficulty. Although that translates in this combination as nervousness, worry or depression rather than overt conflict, these passive states are actually much harder for Gemini II's to deal with than outright anger or aggression. Despite their difficulty in interacting, these spouses may have a hard time letting go of their marriage, which gives them so much in the way of growth and self-expression. Friendships may be a good bet, but can lack intensity and have a tendency to drift. Working partnerships, on the other hand, are powerful and success-oriented, although perhaps not overly ambitious. A realistic outlook based on the relationship's objective strengths and capabilities is likely to characterize these business connections. Parent-child relationships in this combination feature affection and sympathy, but also a tendency for quiet times to be interrupted by bickering and emotional upheavals.

ADVICE: Don't be afraid to push a bit harder. Try to even out emotional moods. Keep lines of communication open. Beware of a compulsion to withdraw.

From Ecstasy to Catastrophe

Profound and intense, this relationship could prove too much for its partners, whose dynamic side it brings out. They may even come to resent it, since it takes so much time and energy, yet outside of it they may never feel so alive. Both of them believe that being unable to feel is probably the worst feeling of all, so that their relationship—painful possibly, boring never—may make them dissatisfied with other areas of their lives, which seem almost lifeless in comparison. Since together they attract a whirlwind of experiences, some joyful, others quite hard, it will seem from the outside that they are extremely lucky, cursed, or both.

Love affairs can range from the ecstatic to the catastrophic. Feelings of joy and sadness, happiness and despair, exaltation and depression may follow each other with bewildering intensity. Not knowing where they are headed or even sometimes where they came from, the couple are buffeted by storms of emotion. Yet their empathy is such that each can read the other's emotional language unerringly. For Gemini II's, whose strongest mode of communication is verbal, the Pisces III language of love can be an unforgettable experience.

Marriages and business relationships are discouraged here, since conflict is likely and intrusive emotional states may be debilitating. A company's smooth functioning can be brought to a halt here as quickly as if a monkey wrench had been dropped into a transmission. Family relationships are prone to breakdown when a sibling or parent-child combination suffers an emotional flare-up. It is best to avoid public scenes and work problems out behind closed doors. Friendships can work as long as lines of communication remain open and arguments and debates are limited. Pisces III's tend to hold forth on metaphysical subjects with almost religious intensity, while Gemini II's are likely to use reason and stick to the facts, often belittling matters of faith; if the pair of them can agree to disagree in a civilized way, and to fall back on activities and topics that are sympathetic to both, the relationship has a good chance of lasting.

ADVICE: Tone down rhetoric without losing intensity. Love can often be fragile and is worth preserving. Show personal respect and consideration.

Being Cool

This relationship is about encountering challenging situations on a daily basis. With this as a jumping-off point, these two might wind up emotionally close, but more probably will move in just the opposite direction: that of suppressing feelings and maintaining strict objectivity in the personal sphere. Free spirits, Gemini III's will tolerate very few rules, but if their relationship has a governing principle it could certainly be, "Be cool—don't get emotionally involved with each other." This is in fact the key to the combination's success. Indeed the survival not only of the relationship but also, in life-threatening situations, of the lives of one or both partners could depend on it.

Why would these independent and adventuresome people really need to live together? Conventional love and marriage may only be possible for unusual, less adventuresome Gemini III stay-at-homes. More typically their affairs and marriages have to allow them the greatest latitude to roam the world in search of adventure—probably alone, or with a non-Gemini III partner. It's true that a friendship or business based on travel, somewhat risky financial dealings, dangerous physical achievement or the like could lead them to spend a lot of time together, but stability, affection and coziness will rarely be the important values here—independence and freedom will remain paramount. One might ask why they would want this relationship at all, but what Gemini III's desire, they will have, and on their own terms.

In the family, more distant kinship ties, such as grandparent-grandchild pairs, tend to work better than parent-child or sibling matchups. Siblings will have great difficulty with the fact that simply growing up together will force them to relate to each other for years, and to face inevitable rules and responsibilities. Such a pair, even when they are twins, should be given as much as possible that is theirs alone and that they do not have to share. Nor should they be responsible for each other or perform the same chores.

ADVICE: Have firm goals in mind. Don't get sidetracked by danger. Allow as much sharing as is possible or advisable. Be emotionally honest.

This relationship will devote its energy to trying to accomplish epic feats. Whether these attempts have a chance of success or will in retrospect be revealed as unrealistic will very much depend on the orientation here. "Epic feats" don't necessarily have to be on the scale of slaying dragons, or making a killing in the stock market; they can include bringing to fruition projects that might ordinarily be out of reach. The Gemini III aspiring outlook and the Gemini-Cancer ability to work magic can synergistically combine in a relationship with just such awesome powers.

Love and marriage between these two are likely to be secondary to their struggle to achieve their goals. Gemini-Cancers must be induced to be motivated here, for their basic tendency in such relationships is to give themselves to romance and the security of a home base. Gemini III's, then, must be able to prove to them what is at stake and how it can be achieved. Should the pair fail in their goals, Gemini-Cancers may grow to dislike and ultimately reject the relationship's values.

Friendships between these two are more apt to be easygoing, with fewer pressures. Gemini III's will usually go off and do their own thing here without trying to involve their Gemini-Cancer partner so much. The large-scale projects and expansive outlooks of friends in this combination may be more spectatorial or appreciative in kind—collecting the complete works of a rock band or author, say, or attending a season's worth of sporting events.

This relationship is likely to work best at work or in the family. Here the desire for epic feats can be put to the service of the group, and both Gemini III success drives and the Gemini-Cancer need for security can be satisfied.

ADVICE: Don't always think so big. Be more realistic about the goals you can achieve. Don't forget to make your home base secure and happy.

THE WEEK OF THE EMPATH

Too Good to Be True

The Gemini III–Cancer I relationship has a magical quality that at times seems too good to be true. Rarely arousing envy, it instead seems to make many of those around it happy, perhaps because they are enchanted by its near-fairy-tale quality. One might expect a certain air of unreality here, but actually a realistic approach often substantiates the magic and gives it direction. Rather, a sense of rightness, a feeling that these two belong together, infects this couple and those who observe them. Such certainty is rare and should be treasured. Cancer I's will find themselves motivated by the electric dynamism of Gemini III's, who in turn will benefit from Cancer I empathic ability and skill in creating a cozy home base.

Romance can hit new highs here. Blissful states may be familiar to feeling-oriented Cancer I's; Gemini III's may have experienced glimmerings of such feelings in the adventuresome pursuit of external goals but now encounter them for the first time in a real live human being. Should such a relationship end, the partners will experience its loss as tragic and could have a hard time getting over it. This is especially true if one of the partners is called back from the affair to another, primary relationship, especially if this is a marriage involving children, career or social responsibilities.

Such a viable love relationship as this one can obviously evolve into marriage, but some of the magic may be lost in the process, resulting in disappointment or disillusion. The spouses may look back longingly to bygone rapture, wondering why pots and pans, bills and diaper-changing ever had to be added to the equation.

Siblings and friends of this combination are capable of a magical relationship. Cancer I's know intuitively when their Gemini III partner needs sympathy or consolation, and the seductive and cajoling manner of Gemini III's can help bring Cancer I's out of depressions. Working relationships generally demand a harder, more pragmatic approach than is possible in this combination.

ADVICE: Don't get stuck. Try to keep a balance. Keep a philosophical outlook. Disappointment follows unrealistic expectations. Don't lose your way.

THE WEEK OF THE UNCONVENTIONAL
CANCER II

Fantasy Versus Reality

The conflict in this relationship will be the struggle between fantasy and reality but also between the inner world and the outer. Compromise is not usually possible here. Gemini III's will want Cancer II's to leave their inner sanctum to join them in the outer world; Cancer II's will want Gemini III's to retire from a life of adventure and relax with them at home. Neither partner is really suited for the life of the other, yet it may be possible for each of them periodically to take the lead in their particular area and have their partner follow them for a time. In this way each can get to rule temporarily, and the need to find a common but watered-down meeting ground is circumvented.

The relationship is likely to stretch the limits of love and friendship. If these two vacation together, the Gemini III will want to go trekking in some God-forsaken outpost. There the Cancer II will take pictures to be gone through sentimentally at home, souvenirs of the trip; the Gemini III, meanwhile, will be off climbing. Later, the Gemini III will be forced to admire the Cancer II's photographs for the umpteenth time, all the while just itching to get away on a new adventure. Given this scenario, informal acquaintanceships or casual companionships are perhaps a better bet than close ties here.

Marriages too will have to demonstrate great understanding. The Cancer II will be the undisputed boss at home, but the Gemini III may not be around much to be bossed. Children will probably know their Cancer II parent better, but in fantasy and memory could elevate the Gemini III parent to a high place, and perhaps will want to join him or her on challenging projects and trips.

Successful work relationships between these two are unlikely. Business partnerships in particular suffer from a lack of practicality and financial acumen. In the family, endless disputes and conflicts are likely to surface between these contrasting personalities, except, strangely enough, when they are same-sex siblings, a matchup that enhances their compatibility.

ADVICE: Work to find more in common. Follow the other's lead whenever possible. Compromise isn't really so bad. Try to be more diplomatic.

Defying Society's Edicts

An empathic connection binds these two firmly. The partners sometimes feel related on a soul level; should they part, they may feel the relationship's loss for a lifetime. Other people will be confused by their apparent incompatibility—there are great differences between them, and they rarely understand or sympathize with each other's ideas and feelings. They usually come together, however, around a drive to control and ultimately conquer their environment. Cancer III's usually exert this drive in their careers, Gemini III's in their immediate surroundings, wherever in the world they happen to be. The relationship is challenge oriented and often hides underlying insecurities.

Cancer III–Gemini III love affairs will defy social edicts in their expression of passionate desire (assuming such desire is present). They demonstrate more than a hint of rebellion, showing little respect for stupid rules and outworn creeds. Both partners believe that what happens between two people is their business and theirs alone, yet curiously they make little effort to hide their affair from outside scrutiny. The exhibitionism and unprotectedness of this relationship may prove its downfall.

This couple is rarely interested in marriage, but a Cancer III who does want a Gemini III as a mate can be powerfully persuasive. Even so, free-spirited Gemini III's will ultimately only agree out of their own choice, and attempts to manipulate or control them may only put them off. Subtler Cancer III's will let Gemini III's think they have come up with the idea themselves, not realizing that it has been gently planted in them.

Gemini III–Cancer III friendships are not immediately suggested, but the relationship's empathic connection can take the pair a long way. A frequent theme in these situations will be talking about feelings. Although they may not see each other consistently, friends in this combination will be there for each other in times of need. Their selfishness in getting their own way often leaves little room for any third party in the equation. The same holds true for family and work relationships, but here, inconsistency of contact will prove much more problematic.

ADVICE: Try to see things from the other person's point of view. Do what you need to do quietly. Don't be guided by rebelliousness—instead, follow your heart.

THE CUSP OF OSCILLATION

Gritty Determination

This relationship has a gritty determination to succeed and to overcome all obstacles that stand in the way. Gemini III's activate the risk-taking urges of Cancer-Leos; their relationship is likely to center around exciting and challenging endeavors, whether in the world of nature or of finance. The problem here is that the relationship may put Cancer-Leos under excessive stress. They need a stable and supportive partner and a secure home base, and are less well suited to the risks and striving that this matchup encourages than their Gemini III partners. The wise course would be to make allowance for this, or else risk a breakdown in relations.

Love affairs in this combination can be highly romantic, but when they come down off cloud nine, Cancer-Leos may be made a little insecure by the Gemini III's desire to get on with the next challenge. The relationship will have to exhibit great flexibility to accommodate its partners' differing needs. Their marriages can be successful and enduring, however, with Cancer-Leos sometimes joining Gemini III's on their adventures, sometimes concentrating on the home base. Cancer-Leos may not be capable of handling parental, domestic, financial and nurturing activities completely on their own; some negotiation may be required as to the level of the Gemini III's involvement.

Gemini III–Cancer-Leo friendships are likely to work out well. They tend to include challenging activities, especially physical ones—sports, fitness, martial arts, travel. Business and sibling matchups in this combination are likely to have a destabilizing effect at work and in the family but also to provide a dynamic of encouraging enterprise and success through determination and risk-taking. At home these siblings can only function well if at least one of the parents can furnish stability and a pragmatic commonsense viewpoint. Otherwise there is likely to be periodic chaos.

ADVICE: Don't attempt too much. Recognize your limitations. Build in a safety or security factor. Don't neglect your home base. Try to be realistic.

THE WEEK OF AUTHORITY
LEO I

A Force for Positive Change

This relationship may find itself involved in a social, moral, ethical or religious code or system of belief that champions equality and denounces exclusion or privilege. It might well be politically involved, its partners seeing themselves as champions of the downtrodden. If expansive Gemini III vision and motivating ability can meld with Leo I leadership skills, the relationship can be a force for positive change. Kindness, affection and sympathy are likely here; Gemini III's can often provide the patience and understanding that relationships with Leo I's require, and they also have a sound business sense that is likely to keep shared projects on the rails. The relationship is usually optimistic, but the partners must be careful neither to avoid self-criticism nor to dismiss the valuable suggestions of others as unwanted negativity.

Love affairs may click sexually, and should their romance fade, love of a less heated nature, leading to friendship or marriage, may take its place. These latter relationships often turn out to be more important than the original affair, which in retrospect may be seen simply as the means by which the pair was brought together. Elements of friendship and marriage can intermingle here, with the personal and human element in the forefront.

This duo is capable of highly unconventional work relationships, which they often put in the service of a cause. This endeavor may not be exclusively idealistic and noncommercial; innovative Gemini III's and Leo I's will find ways to make their idealism pay off, often developing a product or service that is a solid money-maker. Even if profits fail to soar off the charts, the relationship will generally function well on a modest but reasonable cash return.

Parent-child relationships in this combination are tricky. Leo I parents can be powerful influences in the lives of their Gemini III children, but the crucial question is whether their influence is entirely beneficial—these powerful personalities are not invariably satisfactory role models. It is also questionable whether flighty Gemini III's can provide the unwavering attention and recognition a young Leo I needs.

ADVICE: Listen to the suggestions of others. Be more self-critical. Beware of getting carried away by excessive idealism or conceit.

THE WEEK OF BALANCED STRENGTH
LEO II

Fraught with Risk

This relationship exhibits a desire not just to achieve its goals but to achieve them totally. Whether the targets are shared or individual, results are what count here. These two are a good match for each other when it comes to exploring, adventure, risk-taking and in general performing feats that others would consider difficult or impossible. For Gemini III's and Leo II's, projects like these may be all in a day's work. Responsibility to each other is often crucial in this relationship, since both partners know that in hazardous situations one slip can be deadly.

Love affairs between these two can be fraught with risk, but Gemini III's are often drawn to danger. Leo II's are generally more stable and self-assured than Gemini III's, and will not hesitate to try to develop and protect the relationship, regardless of any social disapproval it incurs—for often one of the partners is already involved in a long-standing marriage or love partnership. Frowns from others just make Gemini III's rebellious. Rather than forming a triangle with the third person, this couple is likely to carry on in secret for a while, then one day just run off together. Should they themselves marry, this scenario might repeat again with someone else. If so, it is usually the Leo II spouse who remains faithful and is left behind.

Friendships and working partnerships often overlap, particularly in challenging and adventuresome projects. Spurred on by challenge, the pair are likely to achieve great success, whether fighting on the same side as executives in the board room or quietly planning and mapping out a strategy to counter powerful opposition. Unreliability here is viewed as a major breach of trust, and treachery is the worst possible crime. Breakups in such relationships are usually final and can result in animosity or hurt feelings for years thereafter.

Sibling matchups, especially those of the same sex, can be competitive in a positive way, spurring the partners on to better their own personal best.

ADVICE: Ease up in your demands. Appreciate the delights of relaxation or even boredom. Mute competitive drives. Don't be too tempted by danger.

THE WEEK OF LEADERSHIP
LEO III

Achieving Consistency

This relationship is a study in complex emotions and power struggles. The central theme here is likely to be a mixture of persuasion and manipulation—it is often hard to say where one leaves off and the other begins. Within the relationship, Gemini III's are usually the masters in both of these activities, but Leo III's tend to take the lead in dealing with work, family or marital issues involving other people. In these situations the Leo III will treat the Gemini III as a right hand. Gemini III's are not averse to playing such a role, for in freeing them of responsibility and the obligation to fill the top spot, it allows them more liberty.

Although Gemini is an air sign and Leo fire, the Gemini III–Leo III relationship is governed by the element of water, associated with feeling. Many contrary emotions swirl around in this relationship's emotional mix, then, and a difficult blend of interest and apathy, desire and indifference, sympathy and hostility, is likely to dominate most relationships in this combination at any one time. Understanding and empathy are generally constant factors, however.

Love affairs between these two may continue for some time, or at least until either the Leo III or the Gemini III suddenly announces an interest in getting married—when they may as easily separate as proceed on together. In either sphere, sex is unlikely to be a crucial factor; these two enjoy each other's companionship in a wide variety of activities, and friendship is usually the underlying basis of all their personal relationships with each other. They might even be said to agree that without friendship they have little else together.

In work and family settings, Gemini III's and Leo III's may be emotionally close but are not always effective in getting the job done. Leo III's are obviously better in the role of parent or boss—Gemini III's in such roles may not be as effective in directing or parenting a Leo III employee or child.

ADVICE: Aim for consistency and constancy. Solve power struggles by leaving them behind. Take responsibility for your actions. What are you afraid of?

THE CUSP OF EXPOSURE
LEO-VIRGO CUSP

Hide-and-Seek

This matchup might resemble a game of hide-and-seek, with the Gemini III the seeker and the Leo-Virgo the hider. But its focus is better defined as a mutual exploration into the fascinating worlds of mystery and imagination. Conflicts for domination of this realm are never far off. Leo-Virgos are often somewhat secretive and hidden personalities, just waiting for someone to find the key. Gemini III's are generally less interested in psychological exploration than in striving for success and recognition in the external world, but their relationships with Leo-Virgos usually have the effect of attracting them to emotional, spiritual, creative or even supernatural worlds worthy of their investigatory skills. Research into these areas may prove a strong and lasting bond for this pair.

Love affairs here are vivid and alive, but also quite intimate and private, possessing many meditative moments. This is one relationship in which Gemini III's can forget about their many tasks and lose themselves in a maze of feelings and sensations. Often they won't want to come out again. Getting lost together in the corridors of love may become a common experience for Gemini III–Leo-Virgo partners.

Marriages here tend to be more humdrum, losing the imaginative spark that the couple had as lovers. Friendships, on the other hand, although lacking a strong sexual or romantic component, can be intimate and creative. Leo-Virgos' sense of worth may get a big boost from more confident Gemini III's, who for their part will learn from this partner how to increase their personal power by keeping their thoughts and feelings private.

Sibling and parent-child matchups are unlikely to contribute much to family life, but these two may enjoy interactions outside the family setting. Parents must take care not to dominate children, especially when at play. At work, Leo-Virgos tend to be critical of the idiosyncratic methods of Gemini III's, even while they themselves tend to dwell in a private internal space where it is hard for this co-worker to communicate with them.

ADVICE: Keep the flame alive. Try to understand yourself better. Meet problems head-on without running away. Work on communication.

THE WEEK OF SYSTEM BUILDERS
VIRGO I

Need for Compromise

This relationship is likely to be unsettled, involving constant oscillations of mood. Much of the fluctuation is the result of changing or inconstant ideas or information within the relationship; a focus on practical matters will be necessary if that tendency is to be kept in check. This will always be an uphill battle, for Virgo I's are prone to unrealistic and even catastrophic partner choices, particularly in love and marriage, and a Gemini III might, unfortunately, represent just such a choice. Gemini III's are usually much too busy with their own activities to fit into the kind of structured life that Virgo I's require. They will rarely feel comfortable in a domestic situation marked by the kinds of rules and ordered physical setups that are the Virgo I trademark, and their inability to live by fixed schedules, or to compromise their freedom of movement in any way, will drive a Virgo I to distraction.

Friendships in this combination can work out much better. They will have their ups and downs, but the absence of rigid responsibilities, and the ability to express preferences without imposing them, create a greater chance of success. Virgo I's enjoy a relationship in which they are free to watch and even chronicle the activities of their unpredictable partner; Gemini III's like being able to relax periodically in an atmosphere where they know that everything is taken care of and under control. Differing attitudes do not conflict in these situations and are, in fact, appreciated.

At work and in the family, the kind of order imposed by Virgo I parents and bosses can be reassuring for Gemini III children or employees unless it is rigid and uncaring, when it will prove intolerable. Rebellion is often the consequence. Gemini III–Virgo I sibling or co-worker pairs usually get along well, often because of their differences rather than despite them. Brother-sister pairs are especially favored here, since their respective strengths can dovetail well in the family setting, and also because they often demonstrate empathy and understanding for each other.

ADVICE: Learn the value of compromise. Beware of rigid attitudes. To insist on freedom is to be inflexible. Lighten up. Be kinder.

The Eternal Student

The Gemini III–Virgo II relationship is likely to focus on the mental plane. Relationships between teachers and students, career colleagues and even more distant family relatives may be most successful here. Areas of study or interest in the humanities, perhaps in art, history, sociology or politics, are attractive to this pair. Whether their contacts take place in or out of school, discussion of written material can be stimulating and fulfilling to them. Gemini III's are intensely physical individuals, but they often try to overcome earthly limitations to find what lies beyond, and it is in this more metaphysical area that their relationship with Virgo II's may reach fruition. These two are unlikely to achieve deep union in the emotional and intuitive sphere, since neither will have enough patience or interest to delve deeply into the other's personality. It is in the more objective sphere, the world of thought and ideas, that they have the greatest chance to make contact.

This is not to imply that Gemini III's and Virgo II's should not become romantically involved. In their affairs and marriages, they usually keep their emotions tightly under control and in a secondary position to more intellectual activities; relationships that follow this pattern can easily be successful. Marriages can certainly be productive but are more likely to occur when the partners are older and have more appreciation for the matchup's mental orientation. Gemini III–Virgo II friends may lack the dedication and depth of understanding to make real contact and are usually better off as casual companions and acquaintances, perhaps as students or trainees in a learning or apprenticeship situation. Whatever the case, these two often have a catalytic effect on each other's ability to learn, and their relationship may be particularly well suited to supporting educational endeavors. Work relationships between these two can be excellent, especially in technically oriented fields. In close family relationships, however, particularly between siblings, Gemini III's and Virgo II's are likely to argue a lot and indulge in I-told-you-so or one-upmanship game-playing. Wise parents of such children will find more constructive outlets for their mental competitiveness.

ADVICE: Balance mental and physical urges. Try to redirect game-playing. Deepen your emotional ties. Don't be afraid to show your feelings.

Hammering Out Basic Principles

Since these two lie 90° apart in the zodiac and thus form a square or hard aspect with each other, traditional astrology predicts struggle between them—and in fact one does find them vying for leadership. But although it is true that they are tough with each other, respect and understanding often emerge after several confrontations. The relationship's focus is likely to be finding an authority acknowledged by both partners. Should a basic set of principles be agree upon, perhaps hammered out on the hard anvil of experience, the relationship may become a firm and enduring bond.

Passion can certainly sweep both partners away in love affairs, but for the most part willpower and common sense master emotion. Mercury, ruler of both Gemini and Virgo, is especially strong in this particular combination of them, guaranteeing quick responses and giving the relationship a logical and discriminating outlook. Rarely will either of these partners allow their feelings to urge them into activities ultimately counterproductive to their best interests, either as individuals or as a duo.

Marriages can be based on pragmatic principles as long as both partners contribute equally. The constant difficulty is that Gemini III's may be gone a good deal of the time, or may skip out on work, leaving their Virgo III spouse to finish things up. These partners are capable of being excellent parents, both inspiring and educating. Setting up open channels with their children, and keeping these avenues open throughout their adolescent years, will be a great and rewarding challenge. Although capable of being good friends, Gemini III's and Virgo III's may not have either the time or the need to develop this kind of relationship. At work, on the other hand, these two can make excellent business partners, with Gemini III's contributing financial and worldly skills and Virgo III's the hard work, dedication and application needed to bring an enterprise success. Family relationships in this combination, particularly parent-child matchups, are fraught with emotional difficulties but are often more positive than either partner is prepared to admit.

ADVICE: There is more to life than hard work. Take frequent, pleasurable and relaxing vacations. Try being a bit more sympathetic and affectionate.

THE CUSP OF BEAUTY
VIRGO-LIBRA CUSP

Serendipitous Occurrences

This easygoing relationship is likely to feature serendipitous occurrences that charm and delight. Just such an occurrence, in fact, probably brought these two together in the first place. Psychic or electric connections are likely to emerge between these partners, each of whom often knows what the other is thinking, and who can anticipate each other's actions before they happen. Seekers in search of beauty, Gemini III's can quickly turn their sights from that distant mountain to an attractive Virgo-Libra similarly occupied. Before you know it they have engaged in conversation, and a new relationship is born.

Romantic relationships have a feeling of destiny about them, as if they were meant to be. The upside here is that the relationship can run perfectly well by itself, without interference; the downside is a tendency to drift or stagnate, with neither partner having the willpower to do anything about it. This curious malaise may have to be cured by a good healthy kick in the pants from fate, often in the form of a somewhat threatening situation that demands prompt action. Such disturbing events occur with a certain frequency here, but their revival of a sleeping or dormant relationship is necessary from time to time.

Marriages can last for years, with both partners more or less devoted to each other. Their common love of beauty will be reflected in the furnishings and interior design of their home. Virgo-Libra possessiveness may lead to frustration and insecurity over what they see as an inability to get a firm grip on their independent Gemini III partner, who, meanwhile, may actually be perfectly happy with the love of their Virgo-Libra mate.

Friendships in this combination often demonstrate a love of both the natural and the artificial worlds, the former in most cases favored by Gemini III's, the latter by Virgo-Libras. Sharing and seeking to reconcile these interests can be highly fulfilling. In the family, parent-child combinations can show a special interest in aesthetic matters.

ADVICE: Try to exert more willpower. Control claiming impulses. The lessons of fate usually prove beneficial. Bring your worlds together.

Open to Scrutiny

Although this relationship is imbued with endurance and tenacity, it is challenged by the task of balancing its partners' energies so that they can keep their sights on their goals. Gemini and Libra are air signs, connected with thought, but the Gemini III–Libra I relationship is governed by fire, the element of drive and passion. This pair will be involved in leaping large hurdles. Separately neither of them has much staying power, but together they can outlast anyone.

Largely because of their ability to achieve, Gemini III–Libra I relationships can be powerfully influential to those around them. They often harbor a blind spot, however: the partners don't realize how open their private affairs are to the scrutiny of others. Their passionate impulses, for example, are visible to all. Moreover, these are fiery enough that they sometimes threaten to burn down structures—family, business or otherwise—that have taken years to build, probably terrifying the other people involved. The balance needed here will lie in agreements, whether verbal or unspoken, to act in a way that promotes harmony and minimizes upset for all concerned.

Perhaps the most challenging kind of relationship for this pair is marriage, or living together as adults. First, they will have to limit the frequency of their sexual contact to forestall a neurotic effect on other areas of life, and to avoid burnout. Second, they will have to be strictly honest with each other about their activities with other people, and about the time they spend away from home. Third and most important, they must establish an umbrella of mutual trust and respect that will reconcile Libra I critical tendencies and Gemini III vagueness and lack of commitment. Friendships in this combination can work well as long as extremes of feeling are avoided. Career matchups are rarely advisable, however, since the pair's high degree of subjective involvement is detrimental to the quality of their work. In family relationships, Libra I parents may feel they have everything running smoothly with regard to their Gemini III child, when the truth is just the opposite.

ADVICE: Too much control is not the answer. Normalize relationships. Hiding the truth has unseen effects. Cultivate honesty, openness and trust.

A Twinkle in the Eye

The keynotes of this relationship are a free-and-easy, relaxed overall approach, an emphasis on technical virtuosity and a kind of sensitivity or heightened awareness. What a mixture! With air the dominant element here, one can expect these partners to share a mental involvement with each other. Their verbal and technical agility is also enhanced by a kind of psychic connection. There are sensitivities here that can cause tension, but overall the combination is lively, humorous, relaxed and intimate.

Libra II's can have a softening effect on the often frenetic energies of Gemini III's, taking these personalities for what they are, with few reservations. Gemini III's are usually unprepared either to follow a Libra II's social lead or to escape with them in their periodic retreats from the world, but are willing to accept the Libra II personality in toto, on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. The relationship may provide a safe haven for both partners, especially when it emerges in the spheres of friendship and family. Marriages and love affairs, however, may lack that spark so necessary for Gemini III's; they are likely to be easy enough in many respects, but without that indefinable magic they may lack the bite or chemistry to get the partners involved at a deep level.

A tendency to live and let live allows friends, siblings and colleagues in this combination to communicate and empathize with each other despite their differences. Perhaps the greatest strength of these relationships is objectivity: the partners feel no need to influence each other's viewpoints or actions yet take great interest in observing each other's actions, sometimes dispassionately, sometimes enthusiastically, but always with a knowing twinkle in the eye. A lack of antagonism and competitiveness also lends relief here.

In general, the Gemini III–Libra II relationship is probably better off where it is than attempting to be something it is not. Although it can both scale the heights and plumb the depths of human experience, it also loses nothing by carrying on calmly and moderately. Other relationships could only wish for so much.

ADVICE: Let your feelings loose occasionally. Don't be afraid of rejection. Resentments should be openly aired. What is your real interest?

On the Go

This outgoing and energetic relationship is characterized by a lot of dynamism and activity. These two are always on the go—but not always together. When they do find themselves in the same place at the same time, however, they will seek each other out to share their experiences. More importantly, if they join forces they will discover a new talent: together they have an ability to conceive and implement new, exciting and workable concepts. Traditional astrology accurately predicts an easy and pleasurable matchup here, due to a favorable trine aspect (Gemini III and Libra III being at an angle of 120° to each other in the zodiac). Passion lurks within the relationship, however, generating drive but also creating the risk of conflicts and emotional eruptions.

Libra III's are among the few people in the year who can keep up with the adventuresome pursuits of Gemini III's. This pair can make an unbeatable combination at the head of a company, small business, family or social group. An added plus here is that Gemini III money and investment sense together with Libra III social skills and flamboyance are an ideal combination in business. As long as the good of the group remains the highest goal, few problems will emerge, but if one of the partners turns selfish or greedy and tries to turn things to his or her own advantage, expect big trouble. The relationship is often unable to sustain such conflict and may break down or break up.

Gemini III–Libra III love affairs, friendships and marriages rarely remain in the purely intimate realm for long: each partner shows great interest in the other's work and career and is usually itching to get involved. This desire doesn't necessarily improve on the quality of the original relationship, however—in fact, it can create enormous problems where few existed before. Power struggles almost inevitably emerge over who is the leader and what direction should be followed. There is a danger, then, that the relationship's destructive side will emerge here, leaving little in its wake but smoking ruins.

ADVICE: Keep your career and personal life separate. Mind your own business. Realize what you have to lose before starting new projects.

LIBRA-SCORPIO CUSP

The Joys of Anonymity

This couple will attract a good deal of attention, both as a duo and individually, but their relationship tends to be quite intimate and private—few others will know much about it. They share a hunger for experiences of all kinds, and the theme of exploration will figure prominently here, but they carry on their experience-gathering quietly, moving relatively unrecognized on the outskirts of life. Not that they hide intentionally or even consciously; most who view this couple, however, are blinded to the real nature of their relationship by its brilliantly extroverted side. Nor will they go out of their way to correct others' misconceptions about them, being quite content to preserve their privacy and their ability to be themselves when alone with each other. In such moments they taste the joys of anonymity.

Marriages, love affairs and friendships usually present a successful, vibrant and self-confident face to the world. In private, however, insecurities and frustrations emerge. These difficulties are seldom a result of the relationship itself but are personal and social in nature. Both Gemini III's and Libra-Scorpios tend to be somewhat irritable, nervous and angry a good deal of the time over their treatment by the world, and one of their principal functions for each other is to allow the expression of such negative feelings without fear of censure. In this dimension their connection with each other may become essential to their psychological well-being. Their personal feelings toward each other, sexual or otherwise, often take second place to this aspect of the relationship.

Family members and co-workers in this combination are often unusually sensitive to each other's quirks and foibles. Irritation can be a constant problem here, necessitating games and neurotic behavior to cope with unresolved annoyances. Work and family activities also become an avenue of escape. In whatever sphere the relationship manifests, the split between its private and its public personas may be essential for its well-being. Yet its partners should try to deal with their social and personal problems directly, rather than simply retreating to it as a protective or neutral space.

ADVICE: Come to grips with your difficulties. Don't always look for the easy way out. Aim for greater social honesty. Minimize dependencies.

THE WEEK OF INTENSITY
SCORPIO I

A Matter of Honesty

The theme here is determining when to reveal the truth and when to hide it. The issue is not dishonesty but timing: this pair usually has an excellent feel for the right moment to confront or duck an issue, as the case may be. They may not, however, be as much in control as they think, for outside forces too can force revelations. Even within the relationship, upsets or conflicts can lead to explosive outbursts of truth-telling before the time is right.

Whether complete honesty can be achieved here is an open question. Scorpio I's tend to be critical of Gemini III's who may actually be purely motivated, at least as far as they are aware, but perhaps are operating under the influence of unconscious forces. The tremendous Scorpio I sensitivity to such impulses allows them to perceive drives of which their partner is mostly unaware. Gemini III's may easily feel unfairly judged here, then. On the other hand, Scorpio I's sometimes knowingly commit and conceal indiscretions, sincerely believing that they are acting in the relationship's interests. Should the Gemini III find out later, however, the Scorpio I may be accused of applying a double standard.

Honesty is especially important in Gemini III–Scorpio I love affairs and marriages because sexual jealousy often features here. Suspicions can quickly lead to accusations, accusations to argument and open conflict. Putting less pressure on each other to be honest and letting go of possessive attitudes will be a start for these two. Usually under the guise of love, the relationship is prone to fostering a feeling that the partners own one another, a potentially quite destructive attitude. Family relationships and friendships, similarly, tend to overdo the need to get things out in the open. It should be remembered that trying to be honest, on the one hand, and being forced to confess, on the other, are extremely different things: the first emphasizes respect and responsibility, the second is motivated by guilt and blame. Work relationships may escape this problem somewhat, demanding dedication to the task at hand and taking trust and dependability for granted.

ADVICE: Lay claim to yourself. Build a stronger ego. Don't be driven by fear and guilt. Blaming is easy to start but hard to stop. Draw boundaries.

THE WEEK OF DEPTH
SCORPIO II

Self-Sufficiency

How deep will intimacy go? That is the question here. These two have different styles of closeness, and each will try to make the other conform to his or her own mode. The preference of Scorpio II's for removing the veils of their inner selves slowly won't fly with Gemini III's, who will want to jump into the fray of their activities and create closeness that way. By the very nature of the relationship, and through its involvement in the issue of intimacy, these two often become locked in together, making quite a tight pair. Gemini III's may find this a little uncomfortable. They are explorers from the word go, but should they set their sights on the undiscovered depths of the Scorpio II personality, they may find more than they bargained for there—and Scorpio II's are in any case rarely interested in being explored. They are, however, able to give themselves passionately in love, which may leave a Gemini III wanting to find out more.

Initially passionate, love affairs in this combination may soon prove unsatisfying. Scorpio II's will want to please their Gemini III lovers, but it may be months or years before they trust them enough to admit them to their private world. Generally wanting things to move faster, Gemini III's could feel rejected or unloved in this relationship, despite its sensual gratification.

These two can have a highly physical friendship centering around sports, fitness, food or adventure. Their relationship is quite self-sufficient, having little need to become part of a social or family circle. The danger here, and also in the couple's marriages, is that the relationship will cut itself off from normal social contact, becoming excessively isolated. During good times it may work fine, but in times of difficulty the presence of a support group will be sorely missed, particularly if children are involved.

Co-workers and siblings in this matchup can function effectively together at work and at play, needing little if any input from a boss or parent. In fact, an authoritarian presence is quite inhibiting to this pair.

ADVICE: Take it slow, and savor deepening intimacy. Mysteries are better left alone. Keep your social and family contacts alive. Stay open to life.

THE WEEK OF CHARM
SCORPIO III

Supporting or Eroding?

The primary challenge to this relationship will be to structure itself around stabilizing yet engrossing daily activities. Gemini is an air and Scorpio a water sign, but the relationship is ruled by earth, in this case standing for work and application. If their bond is weak, the partners will drift and dream uncertainly; the more grounded the relationship is, the stronger their ties. These two may play all kinds of mental and physical games with each other. Like con artists, they often try to persuade or manipulate each other in subtle ways, without revealing their true intent. In this respect they are an excellent match for each other. Perhaps firm ground rules should be laid, however, to keep this tendency from getting out of hand.

Because of their quincunx relationship (Gemini III's and Scorpio III's are 150° apart in the zodiac), instability often emerges here, making the need for structure all the more apparent. Scorpio III's can find love affairs with Gemini III's exciting and attractive, but should they decide that this partner is not good for them or is working destructively to undermine the relationship (whether consciously or not), they will not hesitate to move on. This can baffle Gemini III's, who will wonder what they have done to deserve such treatment. Marriages carry a high risk of breakup, but the seriousness and responsibility they involve can also help rather than hinder, tying the knot more securely.

The inherent structure of family and work groups guarantees the relationship more stability. The manipulative ploys of siblings in this combination, however, can undermine family structures and subtly erode parent-child bonds. Gemini III's are likely to fit into a company or organizational scheme less well than their partner here, for they tend to be rebellious and lack the superb Scorpio III organizational and directorial skills. Friendships between these two are likely to be short-lived, for Gemini III's need much more space and flexibility than Scorpio III's are prepared to allow.

ADVICE: Don't expect too much from each other. Fulfill your daily responsibilities. Ground your activities. Take the time to care.

THE CUSP OF REVOLUTION
SCORPIO-SAGITTARIUS CUSP

Tireless Dedication

At its heart, this relationship is directed inward. Though capable of being outgoing, its deepest concern is an unspoken spiritual bond ultimately aiming to help both partners become more fully realized individuals. Without the partners' mutual respect and tireless dedication to shared beliefs and principles, it will not work. The combination can gel effectively in the area of implementing ideas; in fact, getting projects off the ground may be its specialty, and keeping them running a constant preoccupation.

Probably the most successful relationships here are between colleagues engaged in social, religious, aesthetic or spiritual endeavors. Both Gemini III's and Scorpio-Sagittarians are usually quite capable of dealing with the financial side of such projects, but financial gain and money management are seldom the chief pursuits here—the relationship's thrust is idealistic. Even so, the duo's practical abilities are usually more than sufficient to guarantee success, unless they disagree on the direction the project should take.

Gemini III-Scorpio-Sagittarius friendships are likely to develop in connection with shared work. The feelings that surface are generally constructive and do not inhibit the work at hand. Care must be taken, however, to keep the relationship's focus in mind: having too much fun and getting sidetracked are constant dangers here. Love affairs in this combination are likely to be short and intense. They rarely develop into marriage, both partners usually being too independent to surrender to such a union, unless it can be structured in such a way as to leave them relatively free of responsibility. Having children may not be ideal for this pair.

Sibling relationships can seem competitive from the outside; few would suspect that behind the scenes they furnish a warm and loving bond of acceptance. In other family combinations, understanding Gemini III's are unlikely to arouse the rebellious streak in Scorpio-Sagittarians.

ADVICE: Keep up your end of the bargain. Don't let differences of opinion interfere with the work. Learn to compromise. Keep your goal in mind.

A Cosmic Dance

No matter how successful this relationship seems, a hidden complexity in its emotional life perplexes and puzzles even the partners who constitute it. No matter how long these two have known each other, they are continually delighted, fascinated and exasperated by their own relationship, which, though rarely turbulent, has many twists and turns. The combination is such that it encourages the idiosyncrasy of its partners' already highly personal endeavors, exacerbating their tendencies in this direction. Building the foundation for a more committed or involved union becomes difficult and elusive under these circumstances. Initially attracted to each other by the number of interests they share, in this combination Gemini III's and Sagittarius I's will tend to become even more involved in their own activities, with the relationship suffering as a result.

Love affairs can be exciting at first and may well evolve into marriage or a permanent living situation. But even while ostensibly settling down to raise a family or share a life, Gemini III's and Sagittarius I's are actually engaged in a private cosmic dance. Observers might think they are leading completely separate lives when in fact they are engaged in a subtle personal interaction. The temptation exists for them to give their relationship over to game- and role-playing, spinning endless variations on this theme. Such activities, although fascinating, are not usually productive.

Gemini III-Sagittarius I friends, family members and mates should not be encouraged to share the same occupation. They are best off with a strict split between their work and private lives, and in careers of the most different sorts. People who know one partner professionally are often amazed when they meet the other. Sagittarius I family members and friends are likely to be exasperated with what they see as Gemini III flakiness, and tend to believe they are the more practical of the two. This is often true, but Gemini III money sense and ability to keep things running, albeit in their own unusual way, should not be underestimated.

ADVICE: Don't get caught up in your private dance. Seek deeper and more meaningful emotional interaction. Don't take too much for granted.

The Integration of Strengths

Empathy and emotional closeness run high in this combination—these partners share an unusual level of understanding and acceptance. This doesn't automatically mean that their relationship is stable, however, or even that it is good for them. In fact, it encourages escapism, entailing the risk that the partners, coming to idolize one another, will choose to live in their own private dream world, a place that will be fanciful, imaginative and creative but rarely grounded in reality. This is especially true if both partners feel misunderstood by the outside world.

Gemini III's usually look to the details while Sagittarius II's see the big picture, and their relationship can either integrate these strengths or be divided by them. Usually intent on survival, Gemini III's stress the importance of the bottom line—exactly what Sagittarius II's are prone to take for granted and overlook. Meanwhile, Sagittarius II's are likely to feel that Gemini III's are too focused on their immediate objective to see the larger context. Such differences are easily worked out in friendships but can prove divisive in marriages and families.

The area in which the partners' individual strengths can most successfully be integrated is that of work, especially when the pair are business partners or executives, positions requiring both attention to detail and a broader outlook. Yet here the relationship evinces a curious lack of leadership strength. In combination these two are better at coming up with ideas, and making plans as a unit than at heading up an aggressive business team.

Gemini III parents are likely to have misconceptions about their Sagittarius II children, although they love them dearly. Trying to protect them against the world is unnecessary and can even be harmful, for Sagittarius II's must learn about dealing with society's often disapproving and rejecting attitudes firsthand in order to toughen themselves and strengthen their resolve.

ADVICE: Work to integrate differing points of view. Try to understand and to accept. Toughen yourself. Be more objective. Don't get carried away.

Touching Base

This relationship has a lot to teach its partners about practical reality. Opposites in the zodiac, they can easily go soaring off on their most recent and expansive undertaking, but fortunately their relationship holds them fast and closer to the ground—probably saving them from a lot of near misses and dashed hopes. Here they learn the value of careful planning and caution, integration of skills, and the objective and literal consideration of any venture. For these two this is no small feat. The relationship constructively activates their energies, encouraging their vision yet adding a solid dose of groundedness, and laying the basis for the likely success of their projects or adventures. Gemini III's know the value of checking and rechecking the ropes before climbing, the tanks before diving, the facts before writing and, in general, of keeping an eye on the details. Sagittarius III's will have a great deal to learn in this respect, but in turn will teach their partner about power and how to wield it.

Sagittarius III's will usually play the dominant role in love affairs in this combination. Gemini III's are quite capable of enchanting them, however, and then of manipulating them, but may not choose to do so, instead confronting their partner head-on in potentially epic duels. Conflicts like this are often prevented in friendships and marriages, where the pair are better able to grant each other unquestioned areas of independent expertise and control. Gemini III–Sagittarius III sibling and parent-child combinations can be argumentative but are rarely destructive to the interests of the family group. Dynamic, stressful, exasperating and exhilarating, such relationships allow few dull moments. In office co-workers or colleagues, on the other hand, those energies might prove disruptive to a company or department; this pair is not recommended as a working team in daily contact. They can function well as a team in the field, however, for example as the managers of a project in which they both go their own way, occasionally touching base to keep track of each other and coordinate and analyze their efforts.

ADVICE: Reduce stress levels. Drop expectations and let things happen. Lessen irritation by being accepting. Don't expect too much from each other.

THE CUSP OF PROPHECY
SAGITTARIUS-CAPRICORN CUSP

A Wake-Up Call

This relationship may involve revelatory, even transforming, experiences. After weeks, months or years of mutual involvement, the pair can undergo something like a Zen revelation in which a truth or realization comes in a flash, although usually only after long periods of struggle, and after they have given up expecting anything at all to happen. Since this kind of experience may be just what Gemini III's and Sagittarius-Capricorns have been searching for all their lives, their relationship, a lightning rod for this sort of thing, should be of great value to them. Yet they often only sense the chemistry between them in retrospect. Ironically, then, the content of the revelation they experience is sometimes just what the relationship means to them, a discovery they frequently make too late.

Love affairs and friendships here are mutually beneficial. Gemini III's bring Sagittarius-Capricorns out of their private world, encouraging a more positive and aggressive approach to life; Sagittarius-Capricorns help Gemini III's to become more thoughtful and quiet. A love affair usually puts both partners in touch with themselves at a level previously denied to them, giving them a chance to become more fully alive to each other.

Marital and working relationships can last for years, and it is here that the experience of revelation is most apt to occur. It may come in the middle of a predictable or boring task, but once grasped it may change the partners' outlook for good, ideally for the better. Should the pair experience an epiphany at the same instant, the relationship may lock in even a tighter bond. Such experiences should not be seen as illusory, harmful or isolating but as just the opposite: a reminder that these two are part of something much greater than themselves, something close to their fellow human beings and to Mother Earth.

Family members in this combination may well have psychic connections, first noticed when they sense each other's thoughts or perhaps both start talking about the same subject at once. Such connections often appear in parent-child matchups, and also in Gemini III-Sagittarius-Capricorn siblings.

ADVICE: Peak experiences should foster self-realization. Aim for deeper levels of experience. Keep an eye out for synchronicities.

Lifelong Dreams

This relationship's attention is largely taken up by a search for an idealized form—a vision of an idyllic place to live, perhaps, or of a vacation paradise or a coveted aesthetic object. These dreams may be beyond the imaginings of either partner alone, but together the pair often long for a beauty that becomes a spur to their ambitions and efforts. In more reasonable or perhaps depressive moments, these longings can also become despairing, the visions being seen as illusions, impossible to achieve. The relationship can actually make the partners wonder what their idealized longings really represent, and what metaphysical source gave rise to them. Such questions might induce a focus on philosophical issues of expectation, openness, self-reward and visualization, an examination that will work to the partners' good.

Friendships and marriages are particularly suited to metaphysical searches. Gemini III's and Capricorn I's who have never dabbled in concepts like mind power, affirmation and visualization come to believe in them in this relationship. Extraordinary results can be achieved here. It can also be dangerous, of course, to make dreams come true, confirming the adage "Be careful what you wish for."

The relationship occasionally exhibits an inability to settle down in one place. To be always looking for the ideal setting or job can become a way of life for this pair. Even parents in this combination may adopt a nomadic existence, although their children will surely resent constantly changing schools and losing friends. Among the partners themselves, Capricorn I's will usually dig their heels in at some point and refuse to move. They may likewise fight to free themselves from the hopes that the relationship arouses, even coming to hate it at times. Gemini III's accept change more easily and may resent their partner's resistance to it. Such conflicts can tear the relationship apart though they may also make the couple sadder but wiser.

At work, other colleagues might see the pair's ideas and dreams as pie in the sky. Bringing their visions to work could lead these two to be viewed as flaky, not to be taken seriously.

ADVICE: Be careful what you wish for. Examine your values carefully. Learn to be content with what you have. Don't insist on constant change.

THE WEEK OF DETERMINATION
CAPRICORN II

A Realistic Assessment

Together these two may hammer out a solid, hard-working relationship based on guts and a will to succeed. A perfectionist streak here places strong demands on both partners; unless care is taken to be sure that expectations are not unrealistically demanding, the stress may prove overwhelming and breakdowns will result. Whether directed inward, toward the partners, or outward, toward others, the relationship has a tendency to tinker with people—that is, to try to improve them, usually under the guise of helping them to grow or learn. Realistic assessments—of each other, of those around them and of the relationship itself—should be a priority for these two.

Marital and working relationships are most favored here. Gemini III's will bring vibrancy and flexibility to the matchup, Capricorn II's a practical hardheadedness. True, Capricorn II's may from time to time find Gemini III's silly and unrealistic, and Gemini III's might resent their partner's rigidity and stubbornness. For the most part, though, these partners' strengths coalesce effectively. In the financial sphere, although they will argue over how the money should be spent, both will be able to uphold their end of the deal. It is particularly important here that they do not try to change each other.

Gemini III–Capricorn II love affairs will often founder because constant harping criticism makes an easy give-and-take in intimate settings almost impossible. In family relationships, too, especially father-son and mother-daughter pairings, negative childhood scripts featuring a threat of rejection or abandonment can emerge, particularly when the Capricorn II is the parent. Friendships between these two should be kept light, and Capricorn II's will have to understand that demanding more responsible attitudes from their Gemini III friends will rarely work out. A better solution is for the pair to pursue a challenging project together, in which case the assumption of responsibilities will grow quite naturally out of the activities themselves rather than being imposed from without. Capricorn II's can easily match their Gemini III friends in daring and adventuresome situations, which may have the effect of making them more flexible.

ADVICE: Remember to relax and have fun. Modify perfectionist attitudes. Beware of making unrealistic demands. Keep criticism positive.

January 10–16

THE WEEK OF DOMINANCE
CAPRICORN III

The Love of Obstacles

These two share a desire to win, even against overwhelming odds. Their relationship will always be involved in social or financial success, but also in working to better their own personal best, both as individuals and as a pair. Its outlook is surprisingly childlike, with enthusiasm and a positive outlook two of its chief qualities. In this, however, it misses the obvious, in that in most situations there is a path of least resistance that a more mature outlook is better able to discern. To a child, everything seems monumental, but this can become a self-fulfilling prophecy.

Gemini III's may simultaneously both resist and depend on the stable aspects of the Capricorn III personality. The relationship may make them assume more responsibility than they like; they sometimes resent this, but it can also give them the confidence they need to succeed. Capricorn III bosses or parents, then, may arouse very ambivalent feelings in their Gemini III employees or children.

Love affairs in this combination are likely to be quite unstable, as the quincunx position here indicates (Gemini III and Capricorn III are 150° apart in the zodiac). But it is an instability that can be exciting, especially in the bedroom. These passionate relationships rarely grow into lasting marriages or develop into friendships but tend to burn out or fizzle—unless, of course, the partners see marriage as an achievement, an “us against the world” view that they might adopt if their union is frowned upon socially or by their families. In such a case they will go all out to win. Gemini III–Capricorn III friends do best when they share physical activities, such as sports, dance, fitness or adventure; their philosophical aspects will also come to the fore here, and the relationship will thrive on investigations of social, technical or scientific subjects.

These partners sometimes assume an adversarial role with each other, particularly as competitors or opponents in challenging endeavors in which they spur each other on to new heights. Whether in commerce or in love, rivalry may bind these two more strongly than friendship, family or work relationships.

ADVICE: Regulate your energy output. Rivalry can bring out the best but also the worst. Balance the physical and the philosophical. Develop maturity.

THE CUSP OF MYSTERY & IMAGINATION
CAPRICORN-AQUARIUS CUSP

A Marriage of True Minds

If anything, this relationship can be too exciting. Luckily, its many social interactions with friends and family are a stabilizing and calming influence. These two can get swept away with new projects and beckoning horizons, and their social contacts can provide them with an anchor. The relationship often tries to seek out and develop its roots, whether familial or geographic; these can offer a further source of stability. Should the partners be of different ethnic or racial backgrounds, the relationship will usually only benefit from such diversity.

Marriages and friendships are especially favored here. Indeed, spouses in this combination may resemble true friends, even seeking to include their children in this category. Both Gemini III's and Capricorn-Aquarians tend to have alert and quick minds, so it is no wonder that together they are attracted to anything mental. Their orientation is generally more intellectual than physical, more intuitive than emotional. As a result, Gemini III's and Capricorn-Aquarians would do well to develop and deepen their feelings for each other, whether in love affairs, friendships or marriages. Because they can easily reach a pleasant camaraderie in any of these areas, it may take a significant event of some kind to awaken them to the deeper value of their relationship, and to the necessity of pain and sorrow in order for spiritual growth to occur. Indeed, a principal weakness of this relationship may be its avoidance of everything unpleasant or disturbing.

In work and family settings, the Gemini III–Capricorn-Aquarius relationship lends spice to the daily routine. Bored easily, these two will always try to innovate, which may well lead them afoul of authority figures who are interested only in results. As co-workers or siblings, the pair may try to shake loose from the predictable job or family schedule and establish their own independently functioning unit.

ADVICE: Life isn't always easy. Learn to confront difficulties. Running away is a temporary solution. Learn to calm yourself. Meditate daily.

THE WEEK OF GENIUS
AQUARIUS I

Hunger for Attention

This generally well-suited pair's relationship can easily find itself at the center of a family, social or professional group. A certain flamboyance points to a need for attention, but the partners will have to realize that preening is not enough—with the attention of other people comes responsibility. Yet leadership potential may be lacking here, and the pair may be incapable of doggedly and persistently supporting group endeavors. Their hunger for the spotlight may not be justified by the amount of work they are prepared to do. In addition, their need for attention is apt to be an issue within the relationship: discomfort or jealousy will be aroused if only one of the partners receives the recognition of other people. They may also be unhappy over the level or type of attention each gets from the other partner.

Gemini III–Aquarius I lovers usually demand a tremendous amount of attention from each other, a selfishness that can undermine the relationship. Its chances of survival are increased, however, by their willingness to work on building empathic bridges and to sacrifice their own preferences for their mutual good. Both partners may resent the relationship, Gemini III's because it restricts their need to explore, Aquarius I's because it restricts their impulsiveness. Such limitations, however, may ultimately prove beneficial to the individual character-building process. Marital and work relationships are not particularly recommended in this combination unless the pair are willing to make sacrifices. But a serious commitment can be made easier if compromises are worked out at every step of the way, with the partners trading off, say, periods of free time, and replacing individual priorities with joint duties and tasks. The rewards of enjoying time together after work or during vacations may help to provide the necessary motivation.

Gemini III–Aquarius I friends and family members will have to learn either to mute their need for attention or else to pursue that need with greater dedication. Their greatest challenge is giving up a measure of their freedom and individuality and acknowledging their responsibility to serve the group of which they are a part.

ADVICE: Hang in there. Attention requires commitment. Justify your position. Compromise will be necessary. Be sympathetic and show that you care.

Party Time

January 31–February 7

THE WEEK OF YOUTH & EASE
 AQUARIUS II

The extroverted tendencies of both partners are brought out by this relationship. Gemini III's and Aquarius II's like to socialize and have fun together, but these gratifying activities may not bring them far in advancing their individual or mutual cause. If they are low in ambition, they may continue in an unabated pursuit of pleasure for months or even years. This may lead them to a somewhat vacuous dead end, in which spiritual, emotional and self-realizing values are severely lacking or absent. One area these two could do well in, given sufficient ambition, is networking, building coalitions or uniting disparate groups of people. Here they can put their social skills and ability to glad-hand to work, ideally for a good cause.

The relationship's deficiencies will become blatantly obvious during times of need and stress, when its characteristic lack of moral reserves to fall back on will prove detrimental in a family, love or marital setting. Learning that pain and struggle are essential to psychological growth is a hard lesson, but an essential one for this pair to learn. It may be inevitable and necessary that their mutual tendency to drift and dream be startled by periodic jolts, shaking them into awareness.

Friendships in this combination tend to be self-protective, appearing successful but in fact being inhibiting. The most telling faults here can be an inability to face the truth and a mutual will toward self-deception. Since work situations tend to make realistic demands that have to be met on a daily basis, they may provide a context that, while perhaps less pleasurable for these partners, will ultimately be more conducive to their growth. On the other hand, bosses and employees in this combination can arouse powerful resentments in other workers who feel excluded from what seems to be a mutual-admiration society. Similarly, parent-child relationships may arouse the jealousy or resentment of other family members. The pair will have to become more aware of the needs of other people in their immediate environment.

ADVICE: Strive to see the truth, however painful it may be. All pleasure eventually comes to an end. Build on a solid foundation. Seek more lasting values.

Being Whisked Away

February 8–15

THE WEEK OF ACCEPTANCE
 AQUARIUS III

This relationship will stretch social and political limits. Already socially conscious, these partners will grow more so in combination, and activism will feel like a grand adventure to them. Of the two, Aquarius III's are the more committed to values; Gemini III's are usually just in it for the experience. For both of them, though, everything is relative, and they will favor one cause for a while, then fly off in another direction. The fun is being the first to adopt a certain position. The real hard work of activism is unheard of—for these two it's all in the romance. Aquarius III's enjoy running the delicious risk of being whisked away by their Gemini III partner on a magic-carpet ride, whether serving an organization or following adventure. Because of the trine position here (Gemini III and Aquarius III lie 120° apart in the zodiac), astrology predicts an easy relationship, and this is usually true, with lines of communication generally open.

Gemini III–Aquarius III friendships and love affairs will persist against social or familial disapproval—in fact, they thrive on it. If threatened, they simply become more discreet or covert. The partners must be careful that hiding does not become a bad habit, though, nor guilt a necessary ingredient for enjoyment.

Marital and working relationships can be productive here. The duo's pioneering spirit rolls back frontiers but at the same time leaves them open to unrealistic and unsettling influences. The courage to fail is a strength, but repeated failures are not at all desirable, and the partners must beware of a tendency to forget about the goal in emphasizing the joys of striving and tackling obstacles.

Gemini III–Aquarius III siblings, especially of the same sex, must be left free to roam and to dream up their imaginative projects. Learning from their mistakes is an essential preparation for their forays into adulthood. In all relationships in this combination, any attempt from a third party to suppress the enthusiasm and challenge-oriented stance of the Gemini III–Aquarius III pairing will usually be doomed to fail or else will inflict psychological damage.

ADVICE: Avoid biding things. Keep your goals in mind. Don't get sidetracked in unproductive struggle. Acknowledge realistic boundaries.

THE CUSP OF SENSITIVITY
AQUARIUS-PISCES CUSP

Style and Substance

This relationship's ideal is to carry a sense of style and image into all its activities. Charming and outgoing, it will be socially in demand. A work ethic is also pronounced here, with standards of quality being a definite priority. Interestingly, the need for style falls somewhat short in the area of communication, where the combination's piercing frankness may prove its undoing. If these two don't learn to criticize tactfully and sympathetically, they will come across as judgmental or blaming. Overall, however, their joint frankness helps them to grow and learn, so that the relationship affects them positively, bringing out their strengths and alleviating their weaknesses. First, it helps to bring Gemini III's to greater awareness of themselves and their feelings; second, it helps to push Aquarius-Pisces more out into the world to achieve their goals.

Love affairs in this combination encourage Aquarius-Pisces to be more open with their feelings and Gemini III's to dig a bit deeper into their own. This process must be allowed to unfold to its own rhythm rather than by applying homemade or textbook psychological methods. Counseling may prove helpful when roadblocks are encountered, but only with a special and perceptive third party. Serious love affairs may easily evolve into marriage, which, however, should only be attempted when personal and spiritual growth have already been demonstrated in the relationship. Friends and especially co-workers might overemphasize money. Business partnerships and executive pairings should place more stress on steady, solid growth and established financial principles of a more conservative nature, and less on high-risk speculative endeavors. Friendships should deemphasize money dealings and instead seek to develop both idealistic and practical goals of a noncommercial nature.

Family matchups in this combination, particularly between grandparents and grandchildren, or between aunts or uncles and nieces or nephews, can be empathic and rewarding, especially in childhood. They can also avoid the kinds of parental criticism and filial judgments apparent in Gemini III–Aquarius-Pisces parent-child matchups. A grandparent, aunt or uncle of the same sex as the child can often be a very satisfactory role model.

ADVICE: Apply positive criticism respectfully. Don't psychologize. Allow processes to unfold. Try not to hurry or force things. Exercise patience.

THE WEEK OF SPIRIT
PISCES I

Turning Inward

Marked by a powerful sensitivity, this relationship has the potential to have a great impact on its environment or field of endeavor, since it greatly enhances its partners' individual power. This may partly be due to the combination's spiritual leanings, which encourage the values of nonattachment and calm; moods of meditation and contemplation are characteristic here and will prove a source of sustenance come what may. Usually directed toward external goals, Gemini III's may find themselves reoriented in this combination toward matters of the soul or a higher power. In this they are following the lead of Pisces I's, retiring types who, for their part, may find that some of the outgoing nature of Gemini III's will rub off on them.

In love affairs a whole new world may open up for these partners. Where the themes of their earlier relationships with others may have been romantic, sexual or emotional, the emphasis here lies on self-exploration, self-realization, empathy, understanding and psychological balance or health. The ability to love another person without flare-ups and disturbances may prove novel for both partners. A romance like this is an excellent foundation for marriage. Gemini III–Pisces I parents can provide admirable role models for their children, provided they can sustain the attitude toward love that they enjoyed before they wed.

In the family this pair, particularly when they are siblings, will urge the group in a spiritual direction but won't necessarily be appreciated for doing so. Tensions may only be increased by their preference for relaxation, peace and compromise, which winds up getting them branded as lazy or lackadaisical. Paradoxically, a relationship that actually abounds in spirit may be accused of lacking it. As a friendship this relationship may be aggressively targeted by other, less understanding friends, lovers or family members who are threatened by its contemplative stance or who feel jealous of it. Gemini III–Pisces I co-workers may not be aggressive or productive enough to suit their bosses. In a personnel department or one concerned with employees' well-being, however, they may prove a helpful and healthful influence.

ADVICE: Don't ignore the reactions of others. Try to understand where they are coming from, but don't compromise your own beliefs.

Peak Experiences

On the surface of it, many problems could be in store for this couple. Pisces II's often dislike the aggressive attitude taken by Gemini III's, who, in turn, are sometimes less than sympathetic to what they view as the withdrawal or hypersensitivity of Pisces II's. The relationship's focus, then, could be mutual criticism—but these two also share a hunger for peak experiences, especially those that raise consciousness and forward the pursuit of lofty goals. Such endeavors may also feature an intensification of the pair's relationship with the natural world. If these two can learn the value of acceptance, a profound experience may await them.

The aim of raising consciousness is an admirable one, but if the means are questionable they may subvert and swallow up the goal itself. The critical attitude inherent in the relationship can be put to good use here, encouraging objectivity and exposing otherwise confused states of mind to the clear light of reason. One problem with Gemini III–Pisces II love affairs and marriages is the danger that drugs and artificial stimulants will be used to gain highs, thereby fostering addiction.

Family relationships (particularly sibling matchups of the opposite sex) and even friendships are capable of intense psychic connections. Peak experiences are likely between such close pairs; being hard to describe or share with others, these may limit the ability of these siblings or friends to get close to others in their lives, so that they sometimes form a closed and somewhat isolated unit. An interest in exploring the natural world often appears, whether during vacations, by living in the country or by keeping pets and reading about environmental issues in the city.

Many work situations are not favored by either this pair's overly critical or subjectively exploratory state of mind. The duo could, however, be involved together professionally in religion, psychology, teaching, or drug experimentation or rehabilitation, for example.

ADVICE: Keep in contact with others. Follow your vision, but stay objective, too. Strive to communicate. Put your critical faculties to good use.

THE WEEK OF DANCERS & DREAMERS
PISCES III

A Surprising Result

This relationship has a surprising effect: though its partners are known individually as dreamers or seekers, together they become producers. Markedly practical and able to get results, the pair will surprise even themselves. They can provide others with a bedrock of harmony and cooperation as they seek their ends. Moreover, their creative and inspirational qualities will generate a never-ending supply of original ideas for them to put into action, manufacture, present, produce or sell. The only drawback in all this bounty is that while each separately is rather a flexible personality, together they are as immovable as a mountain.

The combination favors marital and working relationships, which will provide solid bases for any home or workplace. Gemini III adventurousness and Pisces III fantasy will be solidly grounded in either domestic or professional projects, which demand every ounce of their practical sense, daring and ingenuity. Because Gemini III and Pisces III form a square aspect (90° apart in the zodiac), astrology would predict friction and conflict between them. In this case, however, competitiveness and struggle are limited and, if present at all, are put to a practical use, particularly when the pair are co-workers striving for tangible goals.

Friendships here can feature a tendency toward arguments and rivalries over shared love objects. Yet any triangles that develop could be not only intense but loving—though also hurtful and destructive in the long run, especially to the person who ends up feeling excluded. Gemini III–Pisces III love affairs can easily make space for a third partner, usually a friend, but can also be maintained for years as long as mutually caring attitudes and a good degree of objectivity are put into practice.

Gemini III–Pisces III family relationships, particularly parent-child matchups, can parade uproarious and even riotous arguments before open-mouthed family members but can equally well give tangible support to the group structure.

ADVICE: Don't only believe your senses. Minimize the pain of love triangles. Beware of exhibitionistic tendencies. Rivalry has a positive side.

THE CUSP OF MAGIC
GEMINI-CANCER CUSP

Brimming with Quietude

This relationship is peaceful and harmonious. These two generally have a calming effect on each other, and together their magic is muted to a personal, intimate level brimming with quietude. Interactions are sensitive verging on psychic. Rarely does a couple exhibit as much caring toward each other as these two.

Whether they are married or live together as lovers, the couple establish an empathic world that will tolerate little disturbance. Silences can be shattered by outside intrusions but at the same time are powerful in setting a mood that only the most insensitive would dare to unsettle. The children of Gemini-Cancer parents may be surprisingly outgoing and boisterous, but at home they know exactly how far they can go. They will benefit from the nurturing qualities of their parents and from a home capable of furnishing many or all of their domestic needs. Gemini-Cancer lovers and spouses enjoy having good friends over from time to time, but for the most part they guard their privacy tenaciously and can go weeks or even months without much need for social contact. Obviously, they must beware of leading an isolated existence that will cut them off from the world.

Family relationships between these two, particularly parent-child and sibling matchups of the opposite sex, can be protective to the point of being debilitating. Loving each other a great deal and being extremely close, Gemini-Cancers can at the same time deprive each other of the individuality that both of them need if they are to be their own person. Detaching from the relationship in late adolescence or early adulthood may be a painful and difficult process.

Working matchups and friendships between these two will go easily enough but may prove ineffective in furthering career or social ambitions. Neither partner may have strong drives in this direction, and their relationship will do little to compensate. Should they settle into a relaxed and accepting mode, they run the danger of stagnating and losing the motivation necessary for professional and self-development.

ADVICE: Promote individual action. Beware of stifling each other. Learn to back off. Disharmony and dissatisfaction have a part to play.

THE WEEK OF THE EMPATH
CANCER I

Working Out Feelings

An emotionally complex situation can arise in this relationship. These two are linked psychically and in fact may share a prophetic vision that will bind them closely; their level of intimacy, however, may require the working out of deep personal feelings, a task that may require years of dedication. A lot is going on beneath the surface. It may never see the light of day in the short term, but it will have to be sorted out eventually. This will require the faith that the relationship is headed in the right direction, and also the patience to let time do its healing work. Assuming the interest is there for such subjective explorations, the relationship holds great promise. Gemini-Cancers are usually the cooler and more objective of the pair; Cancer I's tend to be more at the mercy of their feelings, and although they may pride themselves on their psychological astuteness relative to a Gemini-Cancer partner, they may be unable to see themselves clearly.

Love and marriage are likely to reach deep unconscious levels. Attending to practical matters and seeing that emotional stress is kept to a minimum, while getting to know each other calmly and building bonds of trust, are essential here. Cancer I's can handle money reassuringly skillfully but may have trouble building a career. This could disturb Gemini-Cancers intent on their own professional activities.

Sibling and parent-child pairs in this combination are likely to be overly sensitive to other family members and to demand undue attention from them. Gemini-Cancer-Cancer I co-workers can likewise be technically proficient, and dedicated enough to fulfill their obligations, yet contribute an emotional instability to the workplace. Not the least of the problems here is the pair's tendency to analyze and impose their subjective states on others.

Friendships are certainly possible between Gemini-Cancers and Cancer I's, but they will demand time and understanding. Cancer I aggressiveness may put Gemini-Cancers off from time to time but will also encourage them to be more forthright and assertive themselves.

ADVICE: Increase your awareness. Don't lay your problems on others. Take responsibility for your feelings. Don't let your moods bog you down.

THE WEEK OF THE UNCONVENTIONAL
CANCER II

Sharing and Trust

This relationship is strongly empathic. Its partners have an innate appreciation of and sensitivity to each other's dreams, likes and dislikes. Cancer II's will be able to pick up on and appreciate the tender-hearted romanticism of Gemini-Cancers, who in turn will accept the quirkiest side of Cancer II's. Whether these two can fully satisfy each other's needs is another question, however: no matter how understanding they may seem toward each other, an essential dynamic spark may be missing here. In addition, the relationship tends to reinforce each partner's passive side, so that rousing each other from moods, or stimulating each other to take action, may not be easily accomplished.

Friendships and family relationships are more likely to prove rewarding than love and marriage. Passionate sexual feelings are rarely present in love affairs in this combination, which often eventually become platonic. These lovers are quite capable of evolving into friends, and it is also possible for a certain small percentage of them to marry. Whether as a marriage, friendship or romance, the relationship tends to feature sympathy and understanding more often than challenge, opposition and magnetically intuitive or emotional attractions.

Friendships and sibling pairings between members of the opposite sex have a certain chemistry here: friends in this combination will often resemble brother-sister pairs and vice versa. A respect for gender differences and a lack of aggressive intrusion are noticeable, but in fact subtle incestuous forces may well be at work. The trust and sharing in such relationships is particularly evident in matters of money, style, imagination and food. A love of cooking may be especially evident.

As far as working together goes, Gemini-Cancers and Cancer II's may well be able to operate a small business featuring a service such as catering, artist management, interior design or decorating. Sharp business sense is seldom one of their strong points, however, and they will have to hire a good business manager or accountant.

ADVICE: Cultivate better business sense. Being agreeable may not always be helpful. Spur each other on to action. Raise your personal goals.

THE WEEK OF THE PERSUADER
CANCER III

Crying Out for Direction

An unequal power structure may well emerge in this relationship, which often focuses on leadership and how it should be exercised. Cancer III's can overpower Gemini-Cancers. They are not always to blame in this, however, since this partner may be silently crying out for direction. The relationship's great challenge is to establish an equitable power structure in which decision-making is an open, honest and shared process, not some combination of absolutism and manipulation. It is as lovers, siblings and friends that these two have the greatest chance of establishing such a balance, through forthright discussion and debate. Verbalizing problems and differences of opinion are usually the first steps to take. Once a truce has been established, a positive relationship can ensue, with each partner being able to guide the other in some area.

In love and marriage, Gemini-Cancers may come to resent Cancer III absenteeism, seeing themselves as neglected by their career-hungry mates. Cancer III's, on the other hand, may have trouble with a relationship in which they are constantly called upon to motivate and make decisions for a partner whom they perceive as overly passive or apathetic. Should the relationship emerge in the work or family sphere, however, it may develop a significantly different power structure: here Gemini-Cancers often outdo their Cancer III partners in persuasiveness and manipulation, often using subtle methods that go totally undetected. Sexual and sensual innuendo or even outright favors may play a part here.

Parent-child and boss-employee relationships are prone to power struggles in which the Cancer III plays the role of top dog. In the family, an overbearing Cancer III parent may prove too strong an influence on a relatively docile Gemini-Cancer child. Rather than growing rebellious, Gemini-Cancers are likely to develop dependencies. They sometimes carry these old scripts into their adult lives, leading them to rerun the childhood relationship by finding a replacement for the dominant parent in the form of a boss, lover, spouse or friend.

ADVICE: Keep lines of communication open. Build respect. Seek equality in all aspects of life. Beware of setting up inflexible power structures.

THE CUSP OF MAGIC
GEMINI–CANCER CUSP

A Bizarre Unit

This relationship is truly out of the ordinary. Magnifying the more unconventional aspects of both partners, it may prove quite remarkable to friends and family alike. Conventional friendships and marriages may not be possible for these two, who may replace them with unusual sorts of companionships, career connections or living situations. Tremendous differences in age, body type, background, diet or religion may be evidenced here, for example, representing not compromise but totally new, even bizarre combinations. Such a relationship must obviously grow strong and self-assured to withstand the criticism or ridicule of harsher, less sensitive souls.

Couples in this combination are more likely to flaunt their differences publicly than to try to hide them. Being the center of attention is not especially disturbing for this pair, who usually feel that others will have to adjust to them rather than vice versa. Color, style, movement, speech, humor—all of these may be extreme, sometimes to discordant or jarring effect, sometimes creating an overall impression that has been carefully calculated and designed. Show seems the obvious intent, but something quite unexpected may lurk behind the fanfare.

The motives for this pair's bizarre lifestyle are not so easy to uncover. Should the Gemini-Cancer–Cancer-Leo couple be family members, such as siblings or parent-child combinations, the psychology at work may involve feeling ostracized from the family group and seeking mutual solace as a form of defense. As business partners or co-workers in a small business (family members in this combination may well join together in some such professional endeavor), they might find a real commercial outlet for their impulses. At any rate, in society's eyes there is no clearer vindication of an unusual lifestyle than financial success. Money is rarely the most important thing for this couple, however, and success, if it comes, may arrive completely unwished for, by accident.

ADVICE: Find meaningful forms of expression. Don't shock just for the sake of it. Share your fantasy with others. Don't compromise your individuality.

Yielding in Order to Overcome

This combination gives a new twist to an old theme by stressing passive rather than active dominance. Leo I's are used to playing the dominant role in their relationships, but seductive Gemini-Cancers are quite capable of soothing the savage lion. The relationship is governed by the element of earth, emphasizing the sensuous hold that Gemini-Cancers exert over their Leo I partners.

According to Lao-tzu, it is in yielding that things demonstrate the greatest strength, and so it is as softer Gemini-Cancers handle the fiery onslaught of Leo I's. All of the latter's belief in principles, ideals and authority may go out the window in the face of the magic in a Gemini-Cancer's eyes or voice. Particularly in the area of touch, tough Leo I lovers, who in other combinations find it hard to let other people near them, may melt purringly under a Gemini-Cancer caress. They may be surprised and pleased by their own vulnerability, but problems will arise if they are forced to acknowledge Gemini-Cancer superiority. Rejection at the hands of a Gemini-Cancer mate, lover or friend could prove devastating to the Leo I ego.

Work situations are not at all recommended here: Gemini-Cancers are rarely tough enough to work under Leo I bosses, and rarely decisive enough to serve as bosses to them. Even as co-workers on the same level, Leo I's may insist on a pace and dedication that are neither possible nor desirable for most Gemini-Cancers.

Leo I parents, especially in father-daughter and mother-son pairs, sometimes spoil their Gemini-Cancer children terribly. It is the children who will be the real losers here, since it may be impossible for them to gain respect for adult roles that they themselves will have to fill in later life.

ADVICE: Pleasure isn't always the most important thing. Don't sell out your ideals. Be steadfast in your beliefs. Don't be lulled into false security.

THE WEEK OF BALANCED STRENGTH
LEO II

Thawing Ice

These two have a tremendous effect on others, sometimes taking their social group to a whole new level. The ability of Gemini-Cancers to impart a sense of the magical, combined with the strength and fortitude of Leo II's, can create unforgettable experiences for those around them. When working for what they believe to be a good cause, which generally means for other people, the relationship is unstoppable. In their more private dealings, Gemini-Cancers sometimes try to control or dominate their Leo II partners; their aggressive side may emerge in this matchup. Leo II's are not known for passivity, but in their personal relationships with Gemini-Cancers they are capable of losing their emotional way and undermining their own self-assurance. They may initially adopt an overconfident stance with their Gemini-Cancer partner, then suffer tremendously when they are unable to live up to their own bluster. In such cases, Gemini-Cancers quietly win the upper hand, by default.

Romantic relationships between these two are complex. Leo II's can be cool and distant from time to time, but their Gemini-Cancer lovers will usually be able to thaw out these icy periods. Furthermore, Leo II's are not usually adept enough in the sphere of feelings to oppose Gemini-Cancers' emotional drives, which tend to assume the ascendancy. Overt or covert Gemini-Cancer manipulations usually keep Leo II partners in tow.

Marriages are not particularly recommended here. Leo II's are faithful, and hang in there; the masochistic side of their personality will not usually allow them to admit defeat, even when Gemini-Cancers fall out of love or become disenchanted with them, and shut down both physically and emotionally. The greatest difficulty Gemini-Cancers have with the Leo II personality is what they perceive as this partner's insensitivity.

Friendships are best kept casual, making as few demands as possible on the individual partners. Family matchups in this combination are rarely satisfying, and may in fact evidence great struggle and mutual misunderstanding. At work it is always best if these two work side by side on behalf of others.

ADVICE: Maintain your self-esteem and confidence. Try to help each other grow. Beware of power struggles. Seek out what is best for both of you.

THE WEEK OF LEADERSHIP
LEO III

A Compelling Romance

This relationship can sweep both partners off their feet in a storm of passion. Its mood is romantic, intense and compelling. The focus here may well prove to be the realization of fantasies and imaginative impulses. Leo III's, who usually seek and demand admiration, may find themselves worshipping at the altar of Gemini-Cancers, who may not hesitate to exert dominant control over this partner once they feel they are in the driver's seat. Their influence is rarely destructive, however—in fact, the attitude of both partners toward their relationship tends toward the devotional.

Love affairs and marriages here are likely to be sexually exciting. Both partners are often stirred by their love to the very depths of their being, and these feelings tend to endure over time. Gemini-Cancers may find themselves responsible for maintaining the home base and providing a stable foundation for the relationship while their Leo III mates or lovers are out in the world overcoming obstacles and attaining success. On the domestic front, the Leo III will generally appear to be the boss but the Gemini-Cancer will be the real power behind the throne.

Friendships and sibling relationships between these two, particularly between members of the opposite sex, are likely to be understanding and supportive. Leo III's may be impatient from time to time with the more passive attitudes of Gemini-Cancers, who in turn may simultaneously resent and rely on Leo III aggression. Gemini-Cancer–Leo III parent-child relationships are often highly polarized, with traditional roles well defined and each partner quite attached to and emotionally dependent on the other.

Working relationships are not especially recommended here, since Gemini-Cancers may be forced to compromise too much of their self-esteem, integrity and individuality in following a dominant Leo III boss, colleague or partner.

ADVICE: Exercise patience and care. Beware of burnout. Keep emotions on an even keel. Keep your wits about you in matters of feeling.

LEO–VIRGO CUSP

Evening Out

This relationship is likely to become unstable and blurred to understanding from time to time. Both partners can be tremendously secretive, a tendency synergistically magnified by their relationship. Together they can easily retreat from the world for long periods of time. Should such a period of withdrawal be prolonged, their worldly fortunes may hit a low, and a long and slow process may be necessary to rebuild their neglected careers. Gemini-Cancers are unlikely to provide the strong, solid support that Leo-Virgos require to keep their emotions on an even keel. As a matter of fact, the effect these two have on each other is likely to be unsettling, knocking both partners off balance.

Friendships, love affairs and marriages between Gemini-Cancers and Leo-Virgos are plagued by mood swings. Highs and lows alternate with frightful rapidity, leaving both partners breathless and exhausted. Although these relationships' highs are often wonderfully fulfilling, they offer little permanence or dependability. One highly positive aspect here, however, is resiliency, reflecting the combination's fundamentally healthy and healing orientation. No matter how unsettled things may appear at any one moment, both partners can count on the relationship's ability to encourage personal growth and development over the long run.

Family members in this combination tend to rely heavily on each other for emotional support. Leo-Virgo extroversion contrasts sharply with Gemini-Cancer introversion, but a good balance is often achieved. Either side of a parent-child matchup has the ability to work the other out of a low mood, creating a dynamic equilibrium that has a stimulating effect on the family group.

Successes may regularly be booked by Gemini-Cancer–Leo-Virgo business partners, co-workers and associates. Here the Gemini-Cancer generally provides imaginative and creative impulses, the Leo-Virgo compelling social strengths. Together they are likely to be effective in promoting a product or providing a community service, as long as they can keep their personal feelings objective and under control.

ADVICE: Work on achieving balance. Even out mood swings. Maintain objectivity. Encourage healing aspects. Beware of isolation and neglect.

THE WEEK OF SYSTEM BUILDERS
VIRGO I

Everyday Serendipities

The enchanting qualities of Gemini-Cancers and the logical, orderly Virgo I orientation make an unusual blend. The relationship that results has strong mental powers, not necessarily in mathematical or logical skills but in the psychic or paranormal realm. Synchronistic experiences and other observable phenomena for which there is no obvious explanation are common with these two. Virgo I's may have an inherent resistance to matters of metaphysics and spirituality, but the chemistry of their bond with Gemini-Cancers makes them increasingly open to such phenomena and mental states. Once convinced, both by their partner and by the irrefutable evidence of the occurrences that happen when they are together, they may take the lead in a newfound hunger for unusual experiences.

Love affairs and friendships between these two feature startling coincidences and juxtapositions that surprise and amuse both partners. Serendipity may prove such an everyday occurrence that after a while the partners come to expect it, their openness to it perhaps increasing its frequency. Virgo I's will rarely give up their critical, hard-headed stance completely, but Gemini-Cancers' distinctive blend of cajoling and good humor can certainly soften it. Relationships that remain love affairs and stubbornly refuse to move on to marriage are probably better off that way, since the viewpoints of Gemini-Cancers and Virgo I's are likely to become increasingly polarized as these mates get older and more set in their ways. At work, these two prefer challenging entrepreneurial or investment schemes to mundane or repetitive tasks. The relationship has a gambling instinct, being attracted to dangerous enterprises the outcome of which may rest on a single throw of the dice. Friendships too thrive on the kinds of challenges to the mind and body that expose the partners to real rather than imagined risk.

Family groups are likely to encourage the individual strengths of Virgo I's and Gemini-Cancers, appreciating their practical and their imaginative abilities respectively. Their penchant for danger will be discouraged in this context, and any paranormal abilities will be seen as contributing little to family life.

ADVICE: Keep your tendency to gamble under control. Remember that others may be depending on you. Stay flexible. Let go of any fear of the inexplicable.

Assertiveness Training

This relationship's great lesson is to teach its partners how to assert themselves and develop a sense of inner authority in order to be taken seriously in the world. It is important, however, that they train this assertiveness not on each other but outward. The pair are encouraged to use their joint intuitive strength to discover philosophical, religious, social or political ideas that may guide them on their way. The development of such systems or tactics will often be the driving force behind their daily interactions, helping two rather retiring personalities deal better with the world. The relationship serves as an inspirational motor to power their endeavors forward.

Gemini-Cancer-Virgo II love affairs can be highly secretive. Their covertness is important, however, to make the partners feel safe, and sometimes to avoid hurting others. Ideologies and beliefs are not of crucial importance in this intimate relationship, which is tied up with complex and at times repressed states of feeling. Parent-child and sibling relationships similarly have an almost confessional quality, sometimes keeping secrets from the larger family group for years, in absolute confidence. In both love and family, in fact, secrecy itself may prove the relationship's principal basis, providing a source of shared belief and authority.

Should these two meet first as friends, together they may find an occupation or profession that can sustain them physically while also feeding their spiritual and intellectual selves. Whether this activity is religious or social, personal or community oriented, Gemini-Cancers and Virgo II's will seek out the secret places in the hearts of others who can respond to their message. Perhaps only reaching a small percentage of the population of their city or town, they will sooner or later realize that their mission is meant for only the few prepared to listen to its unusual content. Spouses in this combination may also share a career, but given their emotional struggles and conflicts, the chances of things working out are slimmer.

ADVICE: Try to lighten up a bit. Don't be so secretive. Learn to share emotions as well as ideas with others. Remember that assertion is not aggression.

THE WEEK OF THE LITERALIST

Self-Nurturing

Neither of these two likes trouble in a relationship, and the watchwords of their matchup might be "No hassles." Easy attitudes are likely to prevail here. Healthy activities built around physical comfort and pleasure—working out, massage, aromatherapy, jacuzzi, sauna—may regularly prove attractive, and overindulgence in food is unlikely; in fact, a sensible approach to diet is likely to prevail. Such involvements are essentially self-nurturing, but these two apply themselves to them with inspired seriousness of purpose. They are also concerned for other people in these areas. A problem could be that this intense interest in health disguises an avoidance of the realm of feelings or of deeper psychological states. This can stunt the partners' own inner growth, and the growth of the relationship.

In love and marriage, the energies are apt to be more sensual than sexual. Both partners have a nurturing side that their relationship will synergistically reinforce, particularly when they are a married couple with children. The sensible attitudes and practical solutions of Virgo III's will be balanced by the imaginative and sensitive suggestions of Gemini-Cancers; the couple's children will probably benefit from both approaches. Should these spouses be without children, they may turn their protective natures to nieces and nephews, or, if they are in business together, to their own organization and employees. Watching human growth and development is a great joy for the Gemini-Cancer-Virgo III couple.

Parent-child combinations may lack decisiveness. Each partner may manifest a fierce desire to help the other at his or her own expense. Yet these sacrificial attitudes can easily be seen as selfish by other family members, who naturally feel cut out of the picture.

ADVICE: Be honest about what you really want. Beware of self-sacrifice. Deprivation can breed resentment. Be cognizant of neglecting others.

THE CUSP OF BEAUTY
VIRGO-LIBRA CUSP

Appreciative Harmony

This relationship has a romantic quality that can suffuse its whole environment. Beauty and grace are paramount here. The relationship's strengths are its need and desire to remain in harmony with its surroundings, and to appreciate the wonder of life in all its aspects. Traditional astrology would predict strife in a square aspect like this one (two sun signs lie 90° apart in the zodiac here), but Gemini-Cancers and Virgo-Libras are typically a highly balanced pair. It is true, however, that when their relationship is thrown out of balance, they can suffer terribly, having come to depend on it as a source of power and inspiration. Believing the best about the relationship, then, is not always a good preparation for harder times. Gemini-Cancers and Virgo-Libras must learn not to blind themselves to their limitations and deficiencies as a pair, not only because this leaves them vulnerable but because it deprives them of the fighting spirit necessary to improve their situation. Friendships and love affairs are especially vulnerable in this respect.

Work relationships and marriages are less openly romantic than other relationships in this combination, because they present daily demands that have to be met, like it or not. A good dose of reality and responsibility will not hurt this pair, however, and is healthy insofar as it discourages their less realistic tendencies. But attendance only to the physical aspects of life, even if these have their aesthetic side, can cut off whole areas of experience—the emotional, religious and spiritual realms of life. A balanced Gemini-Cancer-Virgo-Libra relationship will really have to push itself to be motivated to investigate such areas. Self-satisfaction may be the greatest enemy here.

Smugness usually emerges most clearly between family members in this combination. The feeling that they and their family are superior to others, "the best" in their own circle, can be quite destructive to personal development and self-actualization.

ADVICE: You are no better than anyone else. Beware of self-satisfaction. Push yourself to achieve the very best you can. Help to serve others.

THE WEEK OF THE PERFECTIONIST
LIBRA I

Humorous Twist

Prone to worry and upset, this pair must struggle to relax and to view the world with humor. Self-induced tension is usually the biggest problem for Libra I's in any relationship, and relaxed Gemini-Cancer attitudes can have a paradoxically catalytic effect in this area, making them even more uptight than usual. Yet a Gemini-Cancer can also have a soothing effect on their nerves, calming them down. This curious ambiguity usually depends on their mood at the time. Often a small Gemini-Cancer remark, or a certain look, can provoke a reaction. Libra I's can be much too demanding for a sensitive Gemini-Cancer. The relationship's real challenge, in fact, may be whether or not they can relax and accept their partner.

Love affairs demand that both partners be extremely sensitive to each other's needs. Gemini-Cancers are easily wounded by Libra I criticism, Libra I's offended by Gemini-Cancer inattention. Sexually the relationship may at first go like a house on fire, then slowly fizzle. What is left once the thrill is gone will rarely be enough to form the basis for a lasting friendship. It is important that closure of such an affair be handled respectfully, otherwise resentments and frustrations may linger long after.

Marriages are not recommended here, since Libra I's generally lack both the patience to deal with Gemini-Cancers' emotional needs over the long haul and the ability to refrain from inflicting hurt when not satisfied. In family relationships, too, Libra I parents can be much too critical of their Gemini-Cancer children, who tend to be unduly influenced by them.

Casual friendships and relatively undemanding work relationships are probably the best bet for this combination. Here they can appreciate each other's talents and abilities, as long as their emotional involvement stays cool and objective attitudes prevail. Libra I technical skills and Gemini-Cancer imaginativeness may blend well in certain occupations, particularly those that involve creating a new and exciting product or service. The relationship generally lends a humorous twist to such endeavors.

ADVICE: Tune in to each other's needs. Suspend criticism. Work on being more accepting. Appreciate small acts of kindness. Don't harbor grudges.

Finding Sense and Purpose

This relationship's great need, and inevitably the focus of its energies, is to find direction. Perhaps this pair needs to follow an ideology, person or group; perhaps they can find the strength to give sense and purpose to their activities within the relationship itself. These are the crucial questions here. Creating a self-motivating unit is of course the goal, but the relationship may have to find its way via a teacher of some sort, a person whose ideas are initially likely to prove dominant but may later be gradually set aside or even rejected. Given this tendency, it is not uncommon for Gemini-Cancers and Libra II's to meet for the first time in a school or other educational setting.

Love affairs and marriages between Gemini-Cancers and Libra II's often show a special interest in food, cooking, clothing and interior design. The greatest danger to this relationship is dietary, for a sedentary and easygoing lifestyle coupled with a love of eating can be a prescription for disaster. Here the issue of motivation enters again, since giving an outward drive to the relationship may help to save its members from overweight or clogged arteries. It is usually essential for these lovers and spouses to work out, swim or take long walks together.

Friendships between schoolmates or even siblings in this combination are classic. The relationship's chief characteristic is inquiry into hitherto unexplored and fascinating areas of thought and action. Libra II's are especially interested in people and Gemini-Cancers in aesthetics, but together they are likely to investigate a wide range of subjects, from history to music to sports.

In the professional sphere, working on mutual projects together is a good way for Gemini-Cancers and Libra II's to get to know each other. They must be careful, however, not to become so committed to what they are doing that their relationship enters the realms of workaholism and obsession.

ADVICE: Find a balance between inertia and hyperactivity. Look within yourself for motivation and inspiration. Limit your interests a bit.

THE WEEK OF THEATER
LIBRA III

Doubly Dynamic

This relationship often enjoys a strong bond of understanding that does not demand daily interaction between its partners but guarantees a deep commitment and support whenever they are needed. These two have very different approaches to life, but their relationship is for the most part sensitive and accepting. The Gemini-Cancer world is, broadly speaking, private, the Libra III world generally more public, but Libra III's actually choose carefully when they want to be in other people's company, and may in fact spend most of their time alone. Action rather than contemplation is what appeals to them, and here they may spur their Gemini-Cancer partners on, doubling the relationship's dynamism. These two might easily dabble in the mystical, perhaps even bringing it to others in the form of a theatrical presentation or performance. Together they can prove quite inspiring. At bottom, too, their relationship is great fun.

In love and marriage, Libra III's may want a strong partner who can take the lead more effectively than they can, but they more often fall for dependent types who lean on them a bit—like Gemini-Cancers. In this particular case, however, the rewards for them are great: Libra III's may never before or after feel more loved and accepted than they do with devoted Gemini-Cancer partners.

As friends, these two often share a common activity that they pursue wholeheartedly. From stamp collecting to scuba diving, the range of possibilities is broad and unpredictable. The pair may well meet completely by chance, or be introduced by a third party; although interested, they don't usually attach themselves strongly to each other at the start, but over time their relationship will deepen organically, usually guaranteeing its longevity.

Work relationships between these two are not recommended, for both are usually better off doing their own thing and perhaps comparing notes at a later date. In family matchups, Gemini-Cancers and Libra III's may prove too sensitive to each other's foibles to forestall constant irritation.

ADVICE: Don't permit yourself to be triggered so easily. Let others go their own way. Beware of being overly accepting. Show what you feel.

THE CUSP OF DRAMA & CRITICISM

Tough to Figure Out

The chemistry of this matchup favors revealing long-hidden secrets and freeing up private information. Once a bond of trust has been built, the pair will share much of a personal nature with each other. Should either of them fall into a more volatile emotional state, he or she may lose control and blurt out the secrets. Another common occurrence may be the surfacing of material that the relationship loosens in one partner's subconscious, for example through the recollection of dreams. Finally, a critical, interrogative Libra-Scorpio can simply drill away at a Gemini-Cancer until unconscious or repressed material comes to light. In whichever area this relationship manifests, the partners must beware of getting so absorbed in this game of hide-and-seek that they lose sight of personal growth and career development. Such wasted energies are likely to be the single most destructive element here, although the bringing of hidden material to light can have undeniably positive therapeutic effects.

Mental and emotional games may feature strongly in this relationship, particularly in its more intimate manifestations—for example, between lovers, family members and friends. Not only do both partners alternately hide and reveal secrets with each other, but together they have a habit of striking the same kind of covert stance in relation to other couples. Family members and other friends may view Gemini-Cancer–Libra-Scorpio marriages as secretive, puzzling, hard to figure. Much of this behavior is conscious, all part of a smoke screen designed to cover up whatever is really going on. More mature relationships between these partners will demonstrate less of a need for such activities.

Gemini-Cancer–Libra-Scorpio work relationships are best established on the entrepreneurial or executive level, where these partners can exert their different skills most effectively. By contrast, co-working on common projects as employees is not especially recommended.

ADVICE: Be aware of destructive game-playing. Strive for greater transparency. Don't neglect personal growth and initiative. Beware of wasted energy.

THE WEEK OF INTENSITY
SCORPIO I

A Love of Silence

The deep and lasting bond of the spirit in this relationship will afford its partners great intimacy, and their understanding and trust will usually deepen over time. Interest in philosophical, religious or new-age thought is often prominent here, and the ideas derived from these schools are usually put into effect in practice. Even if the partners are not overtly involved in spiritual pursuits, however, their relationship manifests a love of silence, peace, meditation, contemplation and visualization, all of which points in the direction of true spirituality.

Love affairs are particularly favored in this combination. They are sometimes of short duration, but if both partners agree to persevere whatever the difficulties, the long-term prognosis is good. Sexual attraction can run high here. Although Gemini-Cancers express themselves more sensually and Scorpio I's more sexually, their relationship manifests a nice balance between the pleasurable and the erotic. Nor does it acknowledge a strict separation between the physical and the spiritual, viewing the pleasures of table and bed as only further evidence of the handiwork of God, or of a benevolent force in the universe. An openness to and interest in tantra, the Kama Sutra and oriental erotica in general are not uncommon here.

Marriage would seem the next step for this pair, but they often see it as unnecessary, usually for idealistic or ideological reasons. Friendships in this combination frequently develop as a result of the partners meeting at a workshop or during a community- or business-related activity. Such friendships can profitably be combined with a new career endeavor, especially in work dealing with the arts, self-development or health.

In the family, the emotional bond between parents and children in this combination, or between siblings, often sets the feeling tone for the rest of the family group. Thus, the relationship can often encourage a more spiritual orientation in those around it.

ADVICE: Don't believe everything you hear. Maintain skepticism. Be respectful of the beliefs of others. Learn how to wait and persevere.

Functional Aspects

This relationship is likely to emphasize building or organizing a structure, whether in a domestic space, at work or socially. Gemini-Cancer-Scorpio II emotional interactions are such that an efficient physical setup for their activities must be established before either of them will feel deeply secure. They usually have a good idea what they want and need here, but limitations of finances or space may demand compromise, flexibility and creative problem-solving. Once the structure is established, they can get down to the business of sharing themselves with each other and revealing who they are. Deeply private both, they almost seem to need these imaginary boundaries in order to feel safe.

Love, marriage and family relationships between these two will concentrate on furnishing and decoration, but also on functional issues, particularly with regard to practical areas such as cooking and career. It will usually be necessary for each partner to have his or her own private space, which may require quite a large house if children are involved. Not only is home entertainment important, a strong emphasis is also likely to be placed on studying or working at home. The couple will usually exercise care and forethought in planning the most efficient and effective use of the space. Gemini-Cancer-Scorpio II friendships are less concerned with physical structure but still function more smoothly in ordered situations—when schedules clearly indicate the time available for vacation, leisure, lunch and other possibilities for social interaction, for example. Most of their activities will be of a personal rather than a social kind, and they may well share a vocation. Co-workers in this combination will be frustrated if spatial limitations deny them the opportunity to organize their office or workspace in the manner best suited to their needs. They are usually better off working in a larger space, such as a good-sized store. The best possibility of all may be for the relationship to function on a managerial or executive level, where its decisions and visions can be implemented without a lot of red tape. Both technical and aesthetic strengths are usually demonstrated here.

ADVICE: Don't be so demanding about physical space. Organize yourself internally so that you can function anywhere. Don't be afraid to show who you are.

THE WEEK OF CHARM
SCORPIO III

Being Overly Involved

This highly personal relationship may find its partners spending long periods of time alone together. Concomitant to that, however, is a tendency for them to get too involved with each other, to the point where their ego boundaries blur and the relationship takes over. Individual partners may find themselves in open conflict with the relationship itself, which can sometimes prove demanding, involving and inescapable. Gemini-Cancers may feel especially oppressed by charming yet imposing Scorpio III's.

Love affairs, marriages and friendships must be carefully monitored for signs of undue dependency, which is often a warning that further involvement is inadvisable. Sex and love addictions are not at all uncommon here; drugs, too, prescription or otherwise, may pose a serious habitual problem. Magnetic sorts of desire figure prominently in the relationships of Gemini-Cancers and Scorpio III's generally, and their matchup with each other can synergistically intensify this trait to create an even higher kind of attachment. Breakups will be especially painful in these situations, and may press home the need to be wary of such all-absorbing involvements in the future.

It may be easier for these two to maintain their objectivity in their friendships than in their love affairs and marriages, but problems of dependency and jealousy usually still manifest. Work relationships may be the most objective of all, and as long as both co-workers have equal status, and are treated without favoritism by their superiors, they can be extremely productive. In the family, parent-child relationships may entail unusually close emotional bonds, particularly between fathers and daughters or mothers and sons. The pain of separation when the children reach adolescence will be acute in these cases of loving too much. Both partners should work on letting go of claiming attitudes as the years go by, allowing the relationship to grow in maturity and self-confidence.

ADVICE: Beware of isolation. Keep contact with friends and family. Be careful around addictive substances. Learn the lessons of independence.

THE CUSP OF REVOLUTION
SCORPIO-SAGITTARIUS CUSP

An Air of Mystery

This interesting relationship is not an easy one to figure out, either for other people or for the partners themselves. Although both of them tend to be secretive types, this mysterious matchup will not only fascinate them but frustrate them. Both Gemini-Cancers and Scorpio-Sagittarians are more than capable of getting their way; indeed each is the other's match when it comes to persuasion and manipulation. The overall effect is one of shifting sands—of insecurity.

Physical attraction can be high between these two, but their love affairs tend to be unstable, as is suggested by the quincunx aspect here (Gemini-Cancer and Scorpio-Sagittarius are 150° apart in the zodiac). The cooler attitudes of Gemini-Cancers tend to put them in control, since emotional Scorpio-Sagittarians can find it hard to keep their feelings in check during confrontations, and lose their tempers more easily. Insecurities over the relationship run high on both sides, but the fallout is not completely negative: a blend of fear and excitement adds intensity to the couple's sexual interactions.

Trust is the most important consideration in marriages and friendships between these two. Since Gemini-Cancers tend to be faithful once their heart is given, they risk the greater hurt in these relationships. Scorpio-Sagittarius mates and friends rarely if ever tell all about their hidden activities, but perceptive Gemini-Cancers will usually sniff out their ability to juggle several relationships at one time. They may be quite loyal in their own way even as they are being unfaithful, however, and if the Gemini-Cancer can forgive them a minor indiscretion or two, the relationship is likely to endure.

Co-worker and business partnerships in this combination can prove effective, especially in the field of human services. When the partners see eye-to-eye, they can forge a potently persuasive force. Fortunately they are sensitive enough to allow others to decide for themselves. In family matchups, however, particularly between parent and child, they must be careful not to let manipulative drives get out of hand.

ADVICE: Be sure to leave others enough space. Build bonds of trust. Work to understand yourself better. Strive for emotional honesty.

Common Dreams

The keynote here is the sharing of dreams and fantasies, and the degree to which such sharing can take place may well be the determining factor in the relationship's success. Sagittarius I's have a strongly private side, and it will be extremely rewarding for them to share their deepest feelings with Gemini-Cancers, who can be very understanding and accepting. Gemini-Cancers, however, are capable of withholding their most personal emotions from their partners at times, not wanting to annoy or bore them with what seem to be petty problems; in effect they sacrifice their own need for closeness. Sacrifice also figures in the many acts of unflinching service they tend to perform in work situations. Sooner or later this impulse will have to be addressed, or built-up frustrations will one day boil over in overwhelming anger.

Differences of pace make love affairs not immediately suggested here. They can certainly work out, though, as can marriages and friendships. These partners are temperamentally unlike: the Sagittarius I motor generally runs at a higher rpm than that of their Gemini-Cancer partner. That only means, however, that the Gemini-Cancer influence can be a calming one. Sagittarius I's often do well in a living situation with someone less assertive and argumentative than themselves, on whom they can depend for a measure of domestic tranquility. Gemini-Cancers will also have a positive effect on their habits of orderliness on the home front.

Both friends and family members in this combination sometimes delve deeply into a shared fantasy life. Gemini-Cancer-Sagittarius I brothers and sisters can live in their own fascinating private world, replete with imaginative mythological figures. Childhood friends can be inseparable and can continue their relationship well into adulthood. A love of physical activity, particularly low-competition sports, dance and milder forms of adventure, will bind these two even closer.

ADVICE: Give unconditionally or not at all. Aim for an easy give-and-take. Beware of cutting yourself off from daily realities. Don't be afraid to share.

Tried and True

This relationship will prove a great challenge to both partners. Because it often demands literal and truthful attitudes from them, they may feel a bit restricted in the imaginative and flamboyant side that both of them like to display. Fact is more valuable than fiction in this relationship, a notion that will benefit both partners but that they will often find difficult to grasp. When either of them individually is faced with a problem, their first instinct is usually to think up a highly unusual solution. Here, though, they will be constrained to take the tried-and-true route that is certain to work.

In work and in the family, the Gemini-Cancer-Sagittarius II relationship will teach practicality and demand pragmatic points of view. Taking on serious responsibilities will often affect these free spirits for the better. Still, both of them will need plenty of free time for fooling around and having fun after they have discharged their work and family chores. Once they have met the demands of their respective circumstances, in fact, they may tend to go a little haywire when they are off on their own together. They will both need to learn to find a balance in their lives between boring responsibilities and fun irresponsibilities.

Love and marriage, especially of the more romantic kind, are not particularly recommended here, since they bring out the instabilities inherent in both partners. Their emotions rising and falling like the temperature in the desert, the couple will find little support or rest in such a relationship. Nothing is permanent here except change. Gemini-Cancers can get worn down and Sagittarius II's enervated by such extremes.

Friends in this combination try to do more than just enjoy themselves by any means. Social involvement with the physically or economically disadvantaged, and work with community-service groups, are likely to take up their time—that is, when they are not being challenged to help groups of friends and family with practical endeavors.

ADVICE: Don't resent responsibility—learn and grow from it. By learning to be good at practical endeavors you will become more of a whole person.

THE WEEK OF THE TITAN
SAGITTARIUS III

New Hope

The focus of this relationship is new beginnings. Meeting after a previous relationship with each other has failed, these partners, older and wiser, may well decide to give it another try. They may equally meet in their younger years, when their relationship might represent a first serious attempt to explore a specific area, such as marriage or career. Whatever the case, both partners feel a sparkle, a vivacity, a new hope that the relationship will move in the right direction, justifying the expenditure of time and energy.

Assuming that the partners are strongly enough attracted to each other, the chances for love affairs and marriages in this combination are generally good. Gemini-Cancers are often wary of people like Sagittarius III's, who get and demand so much attention from others, but beneath that distrust may lurk a secret admiration. Sagittarius III's are often too busy to take the time to notice or get to know very private individuals, but the Gemini-Cancer enchantment may draw them like a magnet. With Sagittarius III's pursuing expansive goals and Gemini-Cancers grounding them in a happy and comforting domestic situation, the relationship may prove rewarding and successful. Care will have to be taken, however, that Sagittarius III's do not dominate their Gemini-Cancer partners, depriving them of the opportunity to develop on their own.

Sibling matchups and friendships are often highly protective, with the Sagittarius III Titan usually playing the nurturing and defensive role. Gemini-Cancers will often be happy with such an arrangement until they want to assert their own individuality, at which point Sagittarius III's must be able to let go if the relationship is to continue in harmony.

Work relationships are not particularly favored here, unless Gemini-Cancers are prepared to accept an assistant or secondary role to dominant Sagittarius III's. In rare cases, dynamic and powerful Gemini-Cancers may depend heavily on a Sagittarius III employee or co-worker, but the danger of confrontation and power struggles is never far away.

ADVICE: Learn to let go of people and of the past. Be aware of the needs of others. Don't work so hard to convince yourself that things are better than they are.

Beauty and Balance

This is one of the most unusual relationships in the year. Gemini-Cancers and Sagittarius-Capricorns are born at the summer and winter solstices, respectively; the symbolic opposition between the longest day and the longest night can represent a conflict between the outward growth and unconscious orientation of summertime and youth, on the one hand, and the inward growth and conscious orientation of winter and adulthood, on the other. But the relationship these two form has its own character, too, and the dominant focus here may be a search for beauty and balance.

A complex dynamic is at work in this relationship, with its equally strong forces of attraction and repulsion. The partners differ temperamentally, but share a need for extreme privacy and intimacy; their relationship magnifies that need. Searching for beauty, they may look for it in each other or work together to find it in nature, art or humankind. They often overlook or forget their individual differences in this pursuit, accomplishing a fusion of extremely different personalities into a common whole. There is, of course, a danger here of a loss of individuality, but these personalities are generally strong enough to survive within the relationship.

Love affairs between these two will be difficult and trying. Emotional complexity and a curious inability to move the passionate relationship forward will underline the difficulties that these two have communicating with each other. Sagittarius-Capricorns will tend to turn silent and hurt, expecting their lover to understand them, while Gemini-Cancers may prefer to keep things cool, trying to avoid misunderstandings and problems altogether.

Gemini-Cancer-Sagittarius-Capricorn work relationships, marriages and parent-child matchups have a great deal to offer co-workers, children and other family members in terms of varying and contrasting points of view. The children of such parents, for example, will have a genuine choice about which parent to approach with any problem, and will not expect a monolithic response. The relationship's drive toward beauty and balance will usually exert a positive and harmonious influence on whatever group is a part of.

ADVICE: Keep your eye on the object. Don't get bogged down in feelings. Emphasize constructive activities. Appreciate your differences.

THE WEEK OF THE RULER
CAPRICORN I

High Tension

This relationship is very demanding, especially if it manifests in the areas of family or business. Its perfectionist tone creates a lot of unfulfilled expectations and emotional complexities. Capricorn I's are as a rule rather demanding to begin with, both of themselves and of others; Gemini-Cancers may by their very nature be able to alleviate some of this, but they will not be able to ease the burdens of the relationship itself. In fact, this particular combination will put Capricorn I's under intense pressure and scrutiny. Tension may also spill over onto Gemini-Cancers, who will respond with self-criticism—as if it were in their power to do anything to better the situation. These two need to focus on learning to relax, worrying less and overlooking small problems.

Gemini-Cancer-Capricorn I love affairs are likely to reveal emotional difficulties. Capricorn I's can get quite emotional, but will rarely be able to discuss with their partner whatever is bothering them. Gemini-Cancers may doubt that Capricorn I's really understand or appreciate them. These two are often strongly attracted to each other physically, but this is unlikely to help much, and in fact may widen the gulf of misunderstanding.

Marriages in this combination are not recommended, since the relationship's perfectionist energy is apt to create the kinds of tension that prevent relaxation. Gemini-Cancers might come to resent the relationship for this reason, and Capricorn I's might dislike it for not living up to expectations.

As friends, this pair may be jointly critical of others rather than of each other. Drawn to irony and humor, they sometimes enjoy themselves by making fun of other people's foibles. The friendship will have to learn to laugh at itself, too, however, particularly when these energies boomerang back on it. In every area where it appears, whether career, family or personal, the Gemini-Cancer-Capricorn I relationship must maintain high standards but scale back the partners' persistent perfectionism in favor of a more accepting view.

ADVICE: Let up a bit in your expectations. Take things as they come. Lower tension, not quality. Improve personal relations. Practice kindness.

THE WEEK OF DETERMINATION
CAPRICORN II

Mitigating Seriousness

Rather mysteriously, this relationship exudes freshness and charm, infecting its partners and others with the most basic kind of enthusiasm possible. Together these two share a pure personal vision that demands to be expressed. They often have an almost childlike way of communing with each other—direct, simple and uncomplicated. The customary Capricorn II air of resoluteness is subverted by Gemini-Cancer playfulness. No matter how serious Capricorn II's get, their relationship with Gemini-Cancers will induce awe and wonder in their hearts, even at their most pragmatic. Beneath the hard-boiled Capricorn II exterior may rest a sensitive soul, which Gemini-Cancers know how to unearth and appreciate. One problem the relationship will encounter is that Gemini-Cancers can grow dependent on capable Capricorn II's, make them nervous.

Gemini-Cancer-Capricorn II love affairs and friendships will be warm and affectionate, as long as Capricorn II's devote enough time to them and are not distracted by their career involvements. Games, entertainment, dancing and other activities will be especially rewarding here, serving the dual purpose of encouraging the Gemini-Cancer social side and mitigating Capricorn II seriousness. The playfulness drawn out of Capricorn II's by this relationship may well encourage them to extend it into marriage and parenthood. Gemini-Cancers will generally exert a strong nurturing influence here, and will initiate their Capricorn II spouses into the joys of raising children. The couple will get right out on the playing field with their kids, and in doing so will keep their own childlike attitudes viable. Parent-child matchups in this combination often have rollicking times, and their high spirits can be infectious. Other family members will marvel at the chemistry here, for even the sternest Capricorn II parents can have their hearts melted in an instant by a loving Gemini-Cancer child. Gemini-Cancer parents are likely to provide the warmth and understanding that tough Capricorn II's secretly crave. A working relationship in this combination is not particularly favored, since its childlike naiveté is not always appreciated in an office, industrial or corporate setting.

ADVICE: Never be ashamed of being childlike. Stay young by spending more time with children. Play is at least as important as work.

THE WEEK OF DOMINANCE
CAPRICORN III

Feeling Normal

The thrust of this relationship is a fellowship that opens out toward the world. Team activities come easily to these two, who will enter into group activities enthusiastically. This is especially significant since at bottom both of these characters feel a little bit like misfits. Together they have the courage to join in with gusto and to feel like they belong. The theme of sharing translates into their personal relationship, which exhibits an unusual degree of good will and give-and-take.

Love affairs in this combination are not as favorable, perhaps, as friendships, largely because of the strict moral attitudes of Capricorn III's and the fearfulness of Gemini-Cancers. Yet the Capricorn III tendency to dominate can be subverted by Gemini-Cancers into more tender attitudes, and sympathy and support are perfectly possible here. Marriages based mainly on social contact—for example, a marriage enabling its spouses to enter social realms otherwise closed to them—have quite a good chance of success.

Friendship and work are especially rewarding here. More often than not, the relationship will magnetically attract others to it, serving as the nucleus for other social groups, teams and business organizations. Capricorn III's will relish the opportunity that the relationship offers them to contribute mightily and to serve, while Gemini-Cancers will feel somewhat liberated from their isolation. Being able to feel normal yet at the same time be themselves will be a real bonus for both partners. Sooner or later, however, the pair will have to set limits on the time and energy they give to others.

Family relationships in this combination, particularly between aunts or uncles and their nieces or nephews, can be a strong motivating force behind family get-togethers. These matchups are especially good at healing old wounds, and at getting perennial adversaries to act decently, at least for a while.

ADVICE: Don't sacrifice your individuality. Giving also implies being able to take. Feeling normal is not necessarily a self-realizing activity.

THE CUSP OF MYSTERY & IMAGINATION
CAPRICORN-AQUARIUS CUSP

A Central Position

Though ruled by fire, this relationship is emotionally quite cool. As a pair these two will be surprisingly inured to the feelings of others, focusing more on their own condition, jockeying for position and hoping that others are noticing them. This egocentric approach obviously leaves something to be desired interpersonally; it is surprising to find two magical individuals experiencing trouble relating to each other. Part of the explanation may be the fact that Gemini-Cancer and Capricorn-Aquarius lie at a quincunx aspect to each other (150° apart) in the zodiac. Also, while Gemini-Cancers generally don't seek the spotlight, in this relationship their competitive instincts are aroused, stimulating an urge to be noticed. Indeed one weapon in these partners' competitive arsenal is preventing themselves from showing too much interest in each other. And when the relationship attracts attention from outside, its unity can be shattered when one of the partners claims exclusive responsibility.

Loyalty is a big issue in all Gemini-Cancer-Capricorn-Aquarius relationships. The success or failure of marriages and love affairs may depend directly on the partners' ability to limit their prioritizing of their own needs. Even if these needs are satisfied, both partners (but Capricorn-Aquarians in particular) are capable of indulging a roving eye and suffering a loyalty lapse. Desires often outstrip needs here, and greed, demonstrated by a desire to have it all regardless of the other person's feelings, can occasionally run riot.

Friendships are less vulnerable to such subversion, particularly if they are kept casual and eschew deeper emotional involvement. Family matchups, especially between siblings, may be competitive, with both personalities vying to be the star. When competitiveness manifests in a parent-child relationship, perhaps over the affections of the other parent or another family member, the family will suffer great stress.

Work relationships between these two can be extremely successful, particularly when they are colleagues in fields such as PR, advertising and sales, either within a company or as freelancers or consultants. As long as the relationship is put first and the partners realize that recognition will benefit them both, things can go well.

ADVICE: Think of the good of the group. You may be stronger as a pair than as individuals. Keep your desires in check. Think carefully before acting.

THE WEEK OF GENIUS
AQUARIUS I

All the World's a Stage

This relationship's energies are flamboyant, with theatrical influences and grand gestures predominating. It gives Gemini-Cancers the chance to come out of their shell, allowing them to enjoy expressing themselves in a social setting. Aquarius I's generally feel more at home in such situations, but will have to be careful not to offend or overwhelm their more reclusive partner. Sensitivity, patience and empathy will have to be practiced for this relationship to succeed—not an easy task, given that the overall tone here is one of detachment and objectivity.

Love affairs and marriages between these two will usually be stabilized on the domestic front by the Gemini-Cancer feeling for the home. Aquarius I's greatly need stability in their lives, and may well find it here. But Gemini-Cancers will have to be extremely understanding of their mate's need to be involved with others and to be away from home a lot of the time. Should Aquarius I's think that their partners are growing cloying and dependent, they may long to escape this exceedingly tender trap. Gemini-Cancers may feel depressed in this relationship because it woefully neglects their emotional side.

Co-worker relationships and business partnerships may develop into friendships and vice versa, and may be beneficial both financially and emotionally. Whether friends are professionally allied or not, they tend to allow each other the space they need to do their own thing—a tactic that further unites them. Both friendships and working relationships are attracted to vibrant settings that allow a wide range of expression. Jealousy and competitiveness may be aroused over the appreciation of common friends or co-workers.

In the family, relationships between siblings and cousins in particular will add vivacity and spice to family gatherings and special events. Brothers and sisters may find it hard to get along on a daily basis, and will be totally uninterested in each other's activities, especially if there is a large age difference. Parent-child combinations are often loving, appreciative and rewarding.

ADVICE: Limit competitiveness for others' feelings. Develop patience and understanding. Show more interest and you will receive more yourself.

Facing Up to Challenge

These two can be very relaxed and comfortable together. Both of them are capable of enjoying themselves in an easy way for long periods of time, and their relationship magnifies this quality. Luckily, however, it is also able to motivate itself to move forward on the road of life and the path of self-actualization. The kind of self-satisfaction that can approach smugness is a prime difficulty here. Procrastination is also a problem, but these down times are possibly creative periods in which the seeds are planted for future adventure and dynamism.

Gemini-Cancer-Aquarius II love affairs can be extremely pleasurable and sensuous. Urging stoicism or heightened responsibility in the midst of such a garden of earthly delights would perhaps be puritanical as well as unnecessary, for the relationship's deepening physical and emotional involvement will usually lead to firm bonds of acceptance and trust. Similarly, in family relationships this pair's relaxed attitudes should not be challenged, for they serve their highest purpose by lessening tensions and urging those around them to enjoy themselves more.

Friendships may be mainly concerned with having a good time and marriages with keeping their heads above water, but sooner or later both must face up to challenge, resistance, grief and pain if they are to deepen and mature. Any superficiality in the partners' attitudes will become immediately apparent during demanding and stressful periods. Deep reserves of emotional strength will have to be built up to avoid spiritual bankruptcy at such times.

Both as co-workers and business partners this pair is likely to let opportunities slip by and to hold on to the status quo. This attitude can be fatal in a competitive world, and for its own preservation the relationship will have to become more cognizant of such harsh realities.

ADVICE: Learn when to relax and when to push. Certain situations demand that you be more dynamic. Never lose your capacity to enjoy yourself.

Parity Level

Both of these individuals are quite sensitive, and the critical faculty inherent in their relationship is apt to prick egos. There is a visionary capacity here, but its specialty is finding fault—with other people, morals, society, even just the world at large. Aquarius III's will take the lead here. In fact, they are likely to overpower Gemini-Cancers in the spheres of values and decision-making, and to be critical and bossy at times. Gemini-Cancers actually have a lot to teach—if only Aquarius III's were ready to listen. Matchups with Gemini-Cancers may confront them with the primary challenges in their lives: being open, dealing with their own irritations and being more understanding in general.

Love affairs bring these two to a level of parity. Through their quiet charm, in fact, Gemini-Cancers may even come to dominate some of the time. Aquarius III's have a lot to learn about themselves, and often have problems understanding themselves at a deep level. Gemini-Cancers can help them tremendously here. An affair in this combination is likely to prove warm, romantic and fulfilling, at least when it's on.

Marriages and friendships are usually dominated by Aquarius III critical attitudes. Gemini-Cancers' patience and calm will probably be stretched to the breaking point by their partner's needling and aggression, usually well meant but insensitive to the other person's needs. Frustrations are likely to emerge on both sides, in Aquarius III's over being unable to convince their partner, in Gemini-Cancers over feeling themselves constantly instructed. Similarly, in the family sphere Aquarius III parents will have to learn to stop pestering their Gemini-Cancer children. In school and at work, Aquarius III's may embarrass themselves with a know-it-all attitude when their Gemini-Cancer fellow students or workers actually have far more knowledge but keep quiet about it. As friends, Aquarius III's may push unsolicited opinions and advice on Gemini-Cancers, tending to dominate them. Their advice may in fact be quite sensible, but they will have to learn to back off and let their friends make up their own minds.

ADVICE: Much can be learned if you listen. Back off at times. Frustration can be avoided if you are sensitive enough. Work on making things more equal.

Getting the Job Done

Both of these personalities have an ethereal quality that in other combinations sometimes makes them unassertive and capable of being taken advantage of. Yet they come together extraordinarily strongly. Anyone who knows them individually is liable to be shocked by their relationship: together they manifest raw energy and power. The reaction is nearly chemical, elevating strategic thought over emotional sensitivity, instinct over feeling, drive over indecision. This is an awesome combination. Although both of these partners mix air and water (Gemini and Aquarius are air signs, Cancer and Pisces water), their relationship is governed by fire and earth, associated with initiative and work. Its focus is passionate and powerful—the energy here builds to a tremendous intensity, both for the good and the bad. Such energies are best directed outward; infighting between these partners could tear them apart.

At work and in friendships and marriages, these two are a powerful force for getting projects on the rails in their immediate environment. Despite their often quiet and unassuming presentation, they can be called on to get the job done. Their power is not necessarily strongly physical, but may manifest psychologically or spiritually, often accomplishing wonders with little effort. The relationship is very good at teaching others by example, and their effects usually linger on after they both have departed. The success of these matchups will depend not only on their effectiveness but on their ability to relax together and be empathic.

In Gemini-Cancer-Aquarius-Pisces romantic relationships, liking is usually at least as important as loving. Affairs too often degenerate into power struggles, especially if the partners lose respect for each other and for themselves. Sexual manipulation may be used destructively here, and the threat to deprive each other of physical interaction, or to break off the relationship altogether, is not uncommon. Care will have to be taken that parent-child relationships in this combination do not indulge in struggle and combat. Usually, building quiet but firm bonds of trust and reliability will overcome such aggressive tendencies.

ADVICE: Beware of power struggles. Affection is often more important than passion. Cultivate empathy. Point your energy in the right direction.

Friendship to the End

No matter how different these two are temperamentally, their relationship will be close and intense. Yet although neither partner will hesitate to give the other a piece of his mind, what they tell each other is highly selective; they are capable of keeping secrets from each other for long periods of time. An inherent honesty is usually present, however—sooner or later they will tell all, but only when it suits them to do so.

In love affairs, Gemini-Cancer and Pisces I partners are capable of sharing a great deal with each other, but must work on being more independent. Mutually claiming attitudes may restrict their scope of expression. These attitudes will be laid bare if the relationship breaks up, when it may be difficult for the pair to pry themselves apart. More advanced types in this combination will have each other's interests at heart, however, and will be open to separations or splits if they feel that these are to their mutual benefit. These decisions are cool and rational—they do not mean that the partners love each other any less. These lovers will often remain friends, in fact, long after their affair has ended.

Should an affair evolve into marriage, it has a great chance of success, and having children will cement it through thick and thin. Both parents can be nurturing, complementing each other in many respects. A problem may arise if Gemini-Cancers and Pisces I's close their children off from the world, a protective gesture that actually deprives them of the rough knocks they need for normal development.

Family relationships in this combination, particularly parent-child matchups, are also likely to be mutually protective and rather closed in nature. Whether parent or child, the Gemini-Cancer is likely to defend and protect with unremitting zeal. Pisces I's are apt to be extremely empathic and sympathetic to Gemini-Cancers' feelings of pain and frustration. Business relationships are seldom financially astute enough to flourish.

ADVICE: Overprotectiveness can hurt, too. Grant those dear to you their independence. Open up to the world, but cultivate inner strength.

A Grounding Influence

The intimacy between these two will often need material realization in the creation of a physical space to serve the relationship's needs. Whether domestic, professional or, in the case of friends in this combination, athletic or social, this space will occupy a good deal of the couple's time and energy, and in fact may become the focus of their relationship. Planning, setting up and maintaining it will have a grounding influence on both partners, who tend to live, both as individuals and as a duo, in the world of ideas and feelings.

As spouses and live-in lovers, Gemini-Cancers and Pisces II's will pay great attention to their living space, trying as much as possible to make its external reality correspond to their subjective inner state. The imaginative and fantasy-oriented side of both partners will be immediately apparent to anyone visiting them. Decorating is seen here not as a social activity, performed with visitors in mind, but as an almost entirely personal one, serving the private needs of the partners. Learning to be orderly and efficient in furnishing and decorating a space will mitigate this pair's tendency to be overly relaxed or even sloppy.

Co-workers in this combination may be frustrated working for a company where they have little say in how their workspace is set up. They do best as entrepreneurs in small businesses or executives or partners in larger ones where they have the final say about the physical structure of the workplace. The accompanying development of money sense and financial shrewdness is another gift that the relationship grants its partners.

In the family, relatives may not appreciate the need of the Gemini-Cancer–Pisces II relationship to reorganize, remodel or rethink the household's physical structure. Ideally, especially in the case of siblings in this combination, a compromise will be reached where the pair will be left free to do what they want with their own room or rooms (within reason) and leave shared living spaces alone.

ADVICE: Let others make their own choices. Don't get obsessed with material needs and wants. Follow the spirit. Don't give up your freedom.

A Withdrawn Stance

This relationship needs to withdraw from the world periodically to build up its own personal strength and vision. It will sometimes go to great lengths to protect its partners by building barriers against all social intrusions. The danger of lasting isolation or withdrawal, and in extreme cases of sociopathic behavior, is obvious here. In whatever area of life the relationship emerges, its principal challenge is to prevent its drive toward intimacy from getting out of hand.

Gemini-Cancer–Pisces III marriages are prone to cutting themselves off from the world. Should children be involved, or if the family lives in a physically isolated situation in the country, conscious and vigorous steps will have to be taken to build a meaningful social life. Isolation will stimulate the imagination and fantasy of both partners, one of their best-developed psychic areas, but will have harmful effects as well.

In love affairs this pair can indulge their need for privacy and intimacy more fully. A deep sexual relationship can prove immensely satisfying to both partners, but can also stir up a host of feelings, including resentment and jealousy. These two tend to remain faithful to each other, but must be careful to forestall claiming attitudes and sex and love addictions. The use of drugs and alcohol may have an especially debilitating effect here.

Friends may become co-workers and vice versa. In this case the pair will carefully guard their leisure time together away from work, and their spouses and family members will have to be understanding of their need to spend so much time together. Jealous conflicts can emerge here.

Parent-child relationships in this combination, especially father-daughter and mother-son matchups, may alienate other family members through the partners' excessive need for each other. Great care will have to be taken that such exclusivity does not irreparably damage the family structure.

ADVICE: Maintain objectivity. Use your common sense. Beware of addictive tendencies. Build a deep relationship but don't cut yourself off.

A Welter of Feelings

Cancer I ultrasensitivity will characterize this relationship. These two are unlikely to have an easy time of it together, particularly in more personal relationships. Cancer I's are very reactive to the feelings of others, and their boundaries are so fluid that their partners pick up on their moods without realizing it. Consider, then, the effect of two of them in combination: each magnifies the other's welter of feelings. The relationship becomes extremely complex emotionally. If it is to have a chance for success, the partners must use every ounce of their strength to maintain their objectivity and take responsibility for their feelings. For the most part, alas, they are neither willing nor able to make this effort, and the result is often a constant ricocheting of sensibilities, impressions and viewpoints.

Love affairs, friendships, marriages and family relationships will prove most problematic in this combination, becoming emotional minefields with explosions going off every other minute. It may be difficult for two Cancer I's to continue on with each other. They should approach these relationships with as much awareness as possible; working on their own individual evolutions will help immeasurably here.

Perhaps the areas of greatest benefit for this relationship have to do with work, study and other objective pursuits. As co-workers, especially in office work relating to publishing, design, manufacturing, computers and finance, Cancer I's can operate side by side faithfully over the long haul. Their attention to detail, concentration and easy-going nature might be highly prized by superiors and colleagues alike. They generally need to be given direction, however, and occasionally to be pushed to avoid complacency. Cancer I executive pairs are likely to be aggressive, and may antagonize people with their insistent and pushy attitudes. Motivation is often a prime difficulty for student and teacher-student pairs here. They can sometimes reach peaks of achievement, but the learning process is not always even or consistent—periods of inactivity, dreaminess or moodiness often prevail. Should the pair be engaged in sports, fitness or other athletic pursuits, they will have to fight off slumps and tendencies to go off track.

ADVICE: Objectivity should be your rock. Beware of mirroring each other's feelings. Without repressing your emotions, keep them under control.

Intriguing Mysteries

This relationship displays a remarkable determination to get to the bottom of things—to know, to probe, to understand. The areas of investigation are likely to be psychology or social science rather than, say, general science or math; people and their personalities usually exert the greatest attraction here. Perhaps the first difficult and fascinating area for these partners to explore will be their own relationship, since their own mysteries are every bit as interesting to them as those of others.

Cancer I Empaths are likely to understand their Unconventional Cancer II partners better than most. Instead of deterring them, Cancer II secretiveness interests them, and indeed this interest may provide the route by which this pair's love affairs and friendships initially begin. Home for a married couple in this combination is likely to be a very private place to which few gain admittance. Since this private hideaway shelters two people who both have strongly reclusive sides, they may spend hours here in safety and solitude, trying to understand the deepest levels of their relationship. Whether sharing feelings and thoughts, making love or expressing affection, busying themselves quietly with different activities or simply sharing a bond of silence, Cancer I's and II's will constantly enrich their understanding of each other and of the relationship itself.

Subjective preoccupations like these can be counterproductive in work situations, however, and unless the partners can concentrate on getting the job done rather than trying to analyze it or probe its meaning, they will not succeed together professionally. Nor will the daily life of a family group usually make space for such reflective or narcissistic forms of enjoyment, which may distract the pair from living up to their responsibilities. This might be unfortunate, for Cancer I and II siblings, particularly of the opposite sex, are likely to explore many life mysteries together as they grow. They generally carry this deep connection into their mature years.

ADVICE: The world is not made up only of people. Show more interest in the natural world. Realize your thoughts through action. Simplify mysteries.

Learning to Live and Let Live

A detached view of the world and of people will hold a lively interest for these two. Should those around this unusual relationship sense—and perhaps resent—an odd couple holding them up to an uncomfortable level of scrutiny, the pair may be somewhat beaten down by society, but it has the capacity to rise above this resistance, depending on how much the partners want to do so. Being antisocial has its pleasures here and may be the combination's raison d'être. Should the pair be sincerely interested in the relationship itself, however, rather than just enjoying a stance of "Me and you against the world," their belief could guarantee its survival. Cancer I's and III's can be quite determined when they put their mind to something and are extremely good on defense, protecting what they cherish. On the other hand, they should not shove the relationship in the face of those who find it difficult or offensive. These partners should develop a live-and-let-live attitude toward others.

In romances in this combination, Cancer III's should beware of a tendency to dominate. Cancer I's can stand up for themselves, but the arguments this demands are a waste of time and energy, and should be avoided. This couple's physical involvement can be extraordinary, featuring creativity and caring. It may benefit from an active fantasy life emanating from one or both of the partners. These relationships are sometimes better off if they do not proceed on to marriage, which may isolate the couple from other people.

Friendships here can be more relaxed. They often exude a quiet confidence that others respect. If the friends are youngsters, however, their parents may feel threatened by their relationship, exhibiting fear, worry or jealousy. It is here that this pair may prove most vulnerable to society's opinions. Steadfastness and loyalty usually win out, however. These two can prove a powerful professional combination, as long as Cancer I's are strongly motivated enough to let them play an active role. Their financial strengths can gel well with the persuasive Cancer III personality in many commercial endeavors, especially creative ones.

ADVICE: Stand up for yourself, but beware of being offensive. Cultivate quiet confidence. Don't be so concerned about what others think.

CANCER-LEO CUSP

Gaining Control

Together these two are unusually determined and will often succeed at the very least in carving out a niche for themselves. At best they might establish an empire. If they are to achieve their worldly goals, however, they will have to keep the relationship itself on an even keel, and this may be what requires their greatest stubbornness. Cancer-Leo mood swings combine with Cancer I emotional sensitivity to produce some emotional instability, and the relationship's challenge will be gaining control over emotions without unduly suppressing them. When threatened, both Cancer I's and Cancer-Leos too often tend to withdraw or shut down; here their relationship must strive for emotional expression, openness and acceptance. Cancer-Leos may be hard to reach, but healthier Cancer I's can use their empathic abilities and psychological skills to unblock this partner, especially in marriages and friendships. Should Cancer I's be the ones who are withdrawn or depressed, Cancer-Leos must be sensitive enough to know when to leave them alone and when to urge them gently toward more pleasurable activities.

Cancer-Leo–Cancer I love affairs emphasize sensuousness and physical pleasure. Saunas, massage, aromatherapy and other enjoyable activities are recommended, as well as summer vacations at spas or near lakes and rivers. Complex emotional states may arise here, but sheer will and guts, along with patience and understanding, will help these affairs to work out. Any tendency to procrastinate over problems or to escape through denial or drift can ultimately be overcome and mastered here. Marriages benefit from the pair's ability to establish an enterprise and keep it running. These two could found a dynasty.

In times of crisis, Cancer-Leo family members will benefit from the empathy of Cancer I's, who may be more in touch with Cancer-Leo feelings than Cancer-Leos are themselves. Cancer I's in turn can benefit from their partner's energy. Co-worker and sibling relationships benefit from Cancer-Leo drive and Cancer I sensitivity, qualities that they often magnify.

ADVICE: Sense the right moment for action or stillness. Master emotions without blocking them. Show you care. Strengthen determination.

Luck and Success

Moon-ruled Cancer I's and sun-ruled Leo I's are very different from each other, yet their relationship may evidence impressive synergistic strengths, particularly the ability to convince others and persuade them to their cause, be it commercial, social or spiritual. (Their persuasive talents don't usually work on each other, for both partners are convinced of their respective points of view and are highly resistant to manipulation.) Cancer I emotional perception and sensitivity coalesce with Leo I willpower and outgoing nature to produce a whole that is highly effective in personal and professional spheres.

Love affairs between these two are not especially favored. The inner life of Cancer I's may be much too complex for Leo I's to deal with or understand, assuming they are even interested. Cancer I's, for their part, may too tied up with their own emotional life to want to give Leo I's the devotion and even worship that these personalities require.

Friendships, working relationships and marriages in this combination are often at the center of their social or work groups. Internal conflicts flare from time to time, but these two usually have the saving grace of being able to work together successfully on another project. Cancer I's and Leo I's sometimes become convinced that their matchup has special powers, a feeling that can deprive them of the confidence to go it alone, or to move on to another partner or team. Any act of disloyalty or betrayal should not be undertaken lightly, since it could break the spell which brings these two luck and success. Although Cancer generally is considered a passive sign, Cancer I's can match Leo I's in aggression, and will not by any means be relegated to the kitchen or desk in this relationship. Although capable of working on their own for the betterment of their group, Cancer I's and Leo I's make their strongest impression when appearing together and can sometimes be irresistible in getting their way.

ADVICE: Outward success is being overemphasized. Seek spiritual values and follow your heart. Be sure to honor and show interest in your partner's feelings.

Fits and Starts

Expression rarely manifests easily in this volatile relationship; these two may communicate only spasmodically, in fits and starts. Conflicts between Cancer I's and Leo II's can easily seem to appear out of nowhere. In fact they are really about feelings. Leo II's lack the empathic talents of Cancer I's, and are often insensitive to other people's emotions. The outbursts of anger and resentment that are likely to surface between these two may ostensibly occur over matters ranging from finances to aesthetics, but there is usually something personal behind these seemingly objective disagreements.

Cancer I–Leo II love affairs are likely to be vivid but somewhat unsettled. Any constancy of mood or evenness of tone may be difficult or impossible to achieve. Cancer I's will often feel that these partners are cold or unsympathetic, while Leo I's may be annoyed by what they consider emotional intrusions, which they would just as soon ignore. Marriage too will have its problems, but in some cases the partners will hang in there for years, out of loyalty or simply a refusal to give up. The relationship tends to be long-suffering, committed but troubled.

Friendships in this combination can be exciting and fun, emphasizing stimulating activities such as film, dance and music. These two will enjoy being part of a lively social scene only a small part of the time, however—they have a pronounced need for privacy. Most often the activities they enjoy are limited to the two of them alone.

At work, acute differences in temperament may lead to upset. As far as the family is concerned, parent-child relationships may feature a disturbing level of disagreement, at least from the point of view of other family members.

ADVICE: Keep arguments to a minimum. Try to listen to what is being said. Even out your moods. Try to be more patient and understanding.

LEO III

Likes and Dislikes

Trying to determine what each person wants or needs, and incorporating this into the relationship, is a strong theme here. Leo III's can bring out the aggressive side of Cancer I's, who likewise can bring out passivity in Leo III's. The relationship is likely to feature wide swings of mood, with the partners expressing what they like and dislike about each other with bewildering frequency.

Both somewhat aggressive, Cancer I's and Leo III's do not hesitate to pursue their desires—provided they can identify them. Their ability to help each other do this is their relationship's greatest strength. Complex Leo III's would seem capable of dominating Cancer I's, but, curiously, it is Cancer I's who often wind up being the bosses here, through their ability to sense, understand and either satisfy or frustrate the wants and needs of this particular partner. At the same time, the heroic qualities of Leo III's can be inspiring for Cancer I's when they are out in the world. Affectionate and loving feelings are often expressed in this relationship.

Constancy and moderation are hard to achieve in love affairs here, but are worthy goals. Leo III's need a calm and warm domestic environment in which to wind down from their high-energy work, and Cancer I's may be able to provide it. Cancer I empathy can also be put to use fathoming and soothing this partner's dark and volcanic side. Leo III's will provide the direction in marriages and love affairs, generally playing a sympathetic and protective role.

But for its instabilities, however, the Cancer I–Leo III relationship could be a true haven for both partners. It is to their advantage, then, to try to stabilize a marriage, work or family situation, eliminating upsetting influences as much as possible. Leo III bosses and parents can gain great satisfaction from providing for Cancer I employees and children, but it may in fact be Cancer I's who have more ability to grant psychological benefit to Leo III's—they certainly have this partner's best interests at heart. Thus the relationship can be an interesting blend of mutually helpful influences.

THE CUSP OF EXPOSURE
LEO-VIRGO CUSP

Intelligent Investigations

Cancer I's are ruled by water and Leo-Virgos by fire and earth, but their relationship is ruled by air, associated with thought. Their relationship's focus is likely to be invention and challenge, particularly in mental activities—games, puzzles, discussions and debates, the striving for academic excellence. Cancer I relationships too often bring out their emotional side, so that their brain power is neglected; their matchup with Leo-Virgos, however, will put their intelligence to the test. The relationship particularly emphasizes swift responses—if the partners are to avoid superficiality, they will have to remind themselves to give issues deeper consideration. Mutually critical attitudes are likely to cause argument but also to sharpen wits. Once Cancer I's and Leo-Virgos get their act together as a team, they will make formidable opponents for anyone who challenges them in the mental sphere.

In this relationship, an emphasis on mind power does not necessarily lessen sensual pleasures, and Cancer I–Leo-Virgo love is likely to include a robust physicality. Of course they will also want to talk about this side of their lives. Their keen interest in hedonistic pursuits will heighten their pleasure as long as their approach does not get too intellectual. Intelligent investigation, including reading, attending workshops and counseling, can have a positive effect on this matchup. Should the partners be tempted to move on to marriage or to a permanent living situation, they must take care not to rush in impulsively.

Sibling relationships and friendships, on the other hand, seem to be quite cool and objective. They usually subordinate feeling to thought, to the point where they risk blunting impulses and suppressing feelings. Yet these relationships will be mutually supportive. Their communication level is high—in fact, the partners have an almost telepathic link with each other. Should these two decide to go into business together, they might be highly successful in setting up a small company dealing with computer technology, software, Internet projects, advertising or consulting.

ADVICE: Take your time and try to be more reflective when making decisions. Avoid unnecessary arguments. Beware of trying to appear too cool.

Finding the Heart Center

This relationship has an outward authority that the world takes very seriously. Internally, however, it searches for matters of the heart. Ambition is prominent here, but only learning where they truly stand with each other will lead these two to success. Neither partner individually is likely to be able to guide the relationship to firm ground; they will have to investigate their ideas, feelings, beliefs and tastes in an organized way to learn what they share. This search is unlikely to be intellectual or even conscious; it will arise naturally through the pair's shared experiences. Piece by piece, things will fall into place, and the relationship's heart center will unfold. Once a true communion is established, the partners will taste success in many areas of their lives. Until then they may drift uncertainly.

Love affairs in this combination tend to be unstable but romantic. There is often a face-off here between Cancer I emotionality and Virgo I structure and logic. Virgo I's usually make demands that Cancer I's find hard to meet; they also refuse to recognize the importance of feelings to Cancer I's, and are resented for it. The time needed to find common ground is usually lacking here: a long-term commitment is unlikely unless the two are in a situation that forces them into regular contact, allowing the relationship to unfold.

The need for a solid underpinning will be evident in marriage, the family and at work. Procrastination and doubt can complicate even the simplest decisions. The directions taken are not always the best, and it can be months or years before mistakes are detected and corrected. Dramatic changes will be seen, however, if a solid foundation can be established. A rise in the partners' self-confidence will be especially noticeable since individually and in relationships with others they tend to lack either decisiveness or judgment.

As long as they are not dominated by mutual dependencies, friendships in this combination can tolerate differences. Direction may be gained here simply through common activities, perhaps physical or mildly competitive in nature, with both partners exerting their own particular strength.

ADVICE: Persevere in your quest. Remain open to ideas and schools of thought. Dare to fail. Don't allow discouragement to get you down.

Lightening Moods

Two such hidden and secretive personalities as these would seem to reinforce each other's more withdrawn aspects. Yet the chemistry of their relationship acts to lighten their moods, and often to bring them more in touch with the world. Ease of interaction is the emphasis here, and will provide relief for partners who have probably met with tremendous obstacles and difficulties in their relationships with others in the past. The key here is a kind of unspoken communication and understanding. This can go a long way toward alleviating the conflict, discussion or negotiation prominent in other interactions.

In love affairs and marriages, these two have a strong ability to sense each other's desires, both intellectual and emotional. But they are not necessarily good at satisfying each other's physical needs, so that they may have to spend months or even years getting to know one another at this intimate level. Luckily, through discussion—the relationship's orientation is mental—understanding can prevail. Frustrations and hang-ups are best not taken too seriously; if it is possible simply to ignore them, they will fall away as the relationship grows.

Friendships are especially favored here. Emotional demands and financial responsibilities should be kept light, allowing the partners the time and space they need to come to a greater appreciation of each other. They will inevitably spend a lot of time alone, but as they grow more confident, their relationship will take its place as part of a larger social unit. Cancer I's will be fascinated by the twists and turns in the personalities of Virgo II's, who in return will find the depth and scope of Cancer I emotions a never-ending source of amazement.

As co-workers and family members, Cancer I's and Virgo II's may form a strongly empathic bond that will carry them through some difficult situations at work and home. As in other areas, the key is having a relaxed attitude and not making undue demands on each other, thereby reducing stress.

ADVICE: Minimize demands. Let go of negativity. Alter pessimistic attitudes. Keep things unserious and relaxed. Open lines of communication.

Mind Versus Heart

This relationship is likely to involve a struggle to balance the often conflicting interests of heart and mind. Cancer I's are often controlled by their emotions, Virgo III's by their thoughts, and in their relationship these influences often polarize rather than coalesce. Both partners are no strangers to struggle, however, and if they are determined enough they will overcome the differences that divide them, at least enough to get along. Without this determination, the relationship will not have a favorable prognosis in the area of personal interactions.

Virgo III's usually keep their deeper feelings under control, but denying them an outlet can lead to frustration, depression and outbursts of anger. The problem is complicated by the fact that Cancer I's tend to pick up on the feelings of this partner and act them out themselves. Particularly in love affairs and marriages, they both must learn to own up to their own emotions and take responsibility for them. Both partners are prone to indulge in manipulation to get what they want. On the positive side, the combination gives its partners an unusual level of fidelity, steadfastness and endurance, helping them hang in there for the long haul.

Cancer I–Virgo III friendships and family relationships can be plagued by resentments, outbursts of anger and misunderstandings. Truth to tell, this negativity may emanate from the duo's relationship with a third party, perhaps a mutual friend, lover or parent, who often stirs up trouble without being aware of it. If problems are to be resolved, the development of psychological awareness will be the main task for all concerned.

Work possibilities can be excellent between these two. Here Cancer I's are capable of being objective enough, especially in the technical and financial spheres, to complement their practical Virgo III associates. Whether the pair are co-workers in a large organization or partners in an entrepreneurial effort, their relationship is likely to be a successful one that will survive and develop over the years.

ADVICE: Persevere in getting to the root of problems. Discover your real strengths. Take responsibility for your feelings. Stay objective.

VIRGO-LIBRA CUSP

Broadening Acceptance

This relationship may well be based on mutual admiration and characterized by humor, communication and color. The partners could find that they share a common vision. Furthermore, each can expose the other to new and exciting ideas, increasing each other's openness. Cancer I's will be drawn to the Virgo-Libra aesthetic side, secretly admiring this partner's up-to-date attitudes and ability to monitor the public pulse. Although Virgo-Libras will need to put extra effort into understanding the feelings of Cancer I's, they themselves will appreciate being understood psychologically, and accepted for who they are, by this perceptive partner. Generating broader and more accepting attitudes toward each other and, more important, to people outside the relationship may prove a principal focus here.

A keen interest in the arts—such as design, painting, sculpture and drawing—is characteristic. This interest is not only theoretical but practical, being reflected in their tastes in clothing and in their general lifestyle. It may be possible for them to form a business together based on such interests. In a friendship or professional relationship, they must be careful of becoming mutually exclusive, snobbish or intolerant.

A Cancer I–Virgo-Libra love affair, especially one hidden from a primary mate or lover, can be thrilling but also destructive. Should these two discover an ideal of beauty in each other, perhaps the classic recognition of an inner ideal, their affair could go on clandestinely for years, demonstrating addictive aspects. It is not generally advised for such a relationship to progress to marriage. It should be seen clearly for what it is, within a total picture that includes the third party in the love triangle. Family relationships, particularly parent-child matchups, will challenge the ability of Cancer I's and Virgo-Libras to accept their differences. Dark-side interactions here, especially featuring psychological projection and acting out, could disturb the family group. But the depth of the partners' interactions with each other might prove a godsend for them in discovering the truth about themselves, leading to greater health and self-confidence in the future.

ADVICE: Strive for self-awareness. Beware of succumbing to trendiness. Don't blind yourself to faults. Act on your observations. Accept differences.

Sense of Purpose

Motivation is the crucial element in this relationship. Individually these two are tremendous self-starters, but their effect on each other can be likened to stalling out. Somehow their combination releases rather dark and complex forces, mucking up whatever they may be trying to achieve. This is compounded by the fact that neither of them is easy to get along with in the first place. The Cancer I–Libra I relationship is likely to stagnate if not given direction. A sense of leadership and purpose is the prime requirement here; since neither party is likely to lead with assurance, the task will be to find ways to create motivation or purpose within the relationship. Such willpower will require a tremendous effort from these partners, which can happen only if the desire and grit are there. Fortunately, awareness can lead to negotiation and compromise.

In love and marriage, a powerful motor for this pair can be their desire for each other. Passions can run hot and intense here. At one time or another, however, one of the partners is likely to serve notice on the other that if things don't start to move, they might as well quit. If the desire to continue (whether motivated by fear of loss, sexual attachment or love) is powerful enough, the relationship will usually find a way. Both partners must be prepared to compromise and to talk frankly and openly.

Friendships in this combination can drift apart, whether through neglect of the relationship or by taking it for granted. Warning signs, perhaps a long period of noncommunication, will alert the couple to the danger of losing their connection, spurring a resolve to do something about it and prevent it from happening again.

In family and work situations, often neither party is strong enough to play the role of boss or parent convincingly. Of the two, nurturing and caring Cancer I's generally do better in such roles than Libra I's. As siblings or co-workers, the pair often do better when an external source of leadership or authority is built in to the family or professional structure.

ADVICE: Stiffen your resolve. Decide what you really want. Be prepared to compromise. Curb darker tendencies.

A Surfeit of Pleasure

The great strength of this relationship is the sensitivity and subtle communication between its members. As individuals they are quite aware and psychologically adept, and their relationship magnifies these qualities, synergistically producing an even higher level of understanding. These talents may be kept within the relationship, being used for the partners' benefit, or, if the pair are active in a social group, family or business, can be brought to bear on those around them, who will inevitably be attracted to them for advice and counsel. In any case, Cancer I–Libra II interactions will be closely observed by other people, who may view the relationship as a source of inspiration.

Marriages, love affairs and friendships are blessed with all these abilities. Yet they have problems with procrastination and indecision. A surfeit of pleasure or comfort is a factor here: the partners often feel no need to progress any further, either spiritually or financially, than they already have, so that the status quo assumes ascendancy. The enemy here is smugness and self-satisfaction, if only Cancer I's and Libra II's could see it. These two show so much awareness in the psychological and emotional realms; it is ironic that they often fail to see what is sapping the strength and growth of their own relationship.

Cancer I–Libra II co-worker matchups have an aptitude in the sphere of human services, whether social work, psychological counseling or community activities. Should these two enter into a business relationship, the task of making the partnership work financially will usually fall to Cancer I's. Libra II's may be stronger at interaction with customers, vendors or the public.

The strong bond between two family members in this combination will lend positive energy to the group as a whole. Other relatives will feel they can seek out this pair when they are misunderstood, and will have faith in its ability to turn weakness to advantage.

ADVICE: Apply your advice to yourself. Be more aware of what you are not doing. Feeling good is not the only goal. Share your insights with others.

THE WEEK OF THEATER
LIBRA III

Becoming a Whole Person

Cancer I's and Libra III's have a catalytic effect on each other. There is an interesting psychological dynamic here, in which each partner incorporates some of the other's attitudes; this in turn leads them to discover or expose aspects of their own selves that have previously been concealed. Their combination urges Cancer I's to be more outgoing and to reveal more about their inner life, Libra III's to draw back a bit from their worldly involvements and to become more introspective. This relationship balances each partner's innate tendencies. In encouraging them in these directions, it creates a movement toward wholeness and psychological health. Even should it end, it will probably leave each partner more of a whole person, not only functioning better but having more to offer.

Libra III's often like a strong arm to lean on in their personal relationships, but with Cancer I's they will benefit from an anatomical part even more important to them—a sympathetic ear that knows how to listen. For their part, however, they may be unable or unwilling to give their Cancer I partners the attention they need, arousing frustration and some resentment toward their professional activities and associates. They are often uncomfortable with emotions, but their relationship with Cancer I's will teach them the hazards of a cool and unemotional facade. Learning to acknowledge and give vent to their feelings constructively will be an important lesson for Libra III's to learn. The dynamic of this combination almost seems to have a specific purpose in each individual's personal growth. Once that purpose is served, the pair may find that the relationship falls apart, having outlived its usefulness. Family members, particularly cousins and grandparent-grandchildren pairs, will respect each other's secrets. Yet they will also encourage each other to find the right time and place for such hidden material to be revealed, and perhaps along the way will help in working out attendant problems. Cancer I–Libra III co-workers are unlikely to be an effective team in daily desk, factory or service-related positions, or to function effectively as business partners.

ADVICE: Build a well-rounded outlook. Acknowledge the importance of emotional expression. What can you offer? Be thankful for what you have.

THE CUSP OF DRAMA & CRITICISM
LIBRA-SCORPIO CUSP

Acknowledging a Higher Power

This relationship is likely to be highly spiritual, no matter how physical it appears. These partners are often at one in their submission to and acknowledgment of a higher power. In this sense the relationship often has religious overtones, but not necessarily formal ones. In all of their activities together, Cancer I's and Libra-Scorpios will always give it their best shot, but they will ultimately leave the outcome up to fate, or a more personal deity. No matter what these two do, however, they will put their whole hearts into it.

These two will see their love affairs and marriages as blessed and consecrated. Neither of them is particularly selfish in this matchup; they are more interested in a precious kind of intimacy, which they know they must never take for granted or betray. These attitudes can make life difficult if the relationship breaks up—the partners are usually incapable of the sort of unserious, realistic or cynical stance that would make separating easier. A period of grieving is generally needed before new romantic connections with others can be undertaken.

Cancer I's and Libra III's are well matched, whether as friends, rivals or competitors. Fairness is usually an important issue here. Whether the partners are on the same side or not, they can admire each other's skills, and have few hard feelings about their confrontations. As business rivals competing for a contract or client, they will hold positive enough feelings about each other that they may later wind up working together for the same company.

Parent-child matchups in this combination are not always able to provide the kind of authority and direction required in child-rearing. Parents and children will too often relate as friends, a habit that can cause role-model problems later on, in adolescence and early adulthood.

ADVICE: Take more personal responsibility for your actions. Gain a stronger sense of yourself. Play your role fully. Don't use fate as an excuse.

THE WEEK OF THE EMPATH

THE WEEK OF INTENSITY
SCORPIO I

Setting Parameters

Although traditional astrology predicts an easy relationship here, because of a trine aspect (Cancer I and Scorpio I are 120° apart in the zodiac), this relationship is apt to be pretty complex emotionally. Its great challenge is to build bridges of verbal communication and to set parameters within which meaningful contact can take place. Cancer I's favor unplanned interactions, wanting as much breathing space as possible, while Scorpio I's push for rules and regulations that will guarantee them control. Power struggles are almost certain here, then, and will threaten the relationship's security if allowed to get out of hand. Patient diplomacy, compromise and discussion will be essential if this is to be forestalled.

Love affairs go deep here. Sexual bonds are likely to be passionate and long-lasting, and the partners' emotional encounters will stir them both profoundly. Negative as well as positive feelings will emerge. Before one of these affairs proceeds on to marriage, it would behoove the pair to outline the role and responsibilities expected of each partner, establishing general guidelines to guarantee the relationship a structural basis.

Cancer I–Scorpio I friendships can be close but are difficult to maintain. The partners are unlikely to see the necessity for creating guidelines for their interactions, let alone agreeing on them. Scorpio I's may also be suspicious of Cancer I motives (which they find dubious) and actions (which they see as sneaky). Cancer I's are likely to view Scorpio I's as overly moral control freaks. The result of all this is often a sort of on-again, off-again relationship.

In no area are Cancer I–Scorpio I relations as complex as in the parent-child sphere. No matter which party is the parent, the child may be bewildered by an interesting mix of spoiling and high expectation. Emotional manipulation, love, resentment, kindness and a host of other feelings are likely to intermingle and blur at the edges. Cancer I–Scorpio I co-workers can get along well when their tasks are well defined.

ADVICE: Define roles more clearly. Agree on division of labor. Beware of hazy attitudes and expectations. Seek common principles for daily living.

Parallel Play

The primary force in this combination is its partners' tendency to merge with each other to the point where they shut out the world. The relationship can be reclusive, with the partners withdrawing from social contact with other people. Family and career ties will help them to stay in contact with the world. Their relationships sometimes build connections through religion, music, film or sports, which can bring an almost holy aspect to them, acting as bridges both between them and from them to other people. These two will periodically need to come up for air by withdrawing from each other for a time. This level of involvement borders on codependency, and is not ideal for the partners' individual growth.

Cancer I–Scorpio II love affairs can be highly sensuous, but they can equally well sublimate sexual pleasure into other spheres, such as food and physical comfort. The enjoyment here is rarely of the ecstatic, passionate sort, but rather is free-floating and diffuse. Sleep patterns can be especially important for this pair. The relationship may also evolve in a decidedly nonphysical direction, platonic feelings predominating and intensity being reserved for more spiritual pursuits. The lovers in such a relationship can continue as friends (and even sleep partners) long after their passions have cooled. Marriages and friendships in this combination can be counterproductive to mutual growth because of the partners' tendency to remove themselves from social life, spending all their time submerged in their own relationship. A situation can be set up not unlike that of parallel play among children, who can simultaneously sit next to each other and go about their own activities, seemingly unaware of each other's presence. Nonetheless, in a curious way, these Cancer I–Scorpio II relationships can work out, managing to serve the needs of both partners.

In the family and professional spheres, combative tendencies often arise between Cancer I's and Scorpio II's. Particularly between siblings, stepparents and stepchildren, and work colleagues, all sorts of competitive situations may bring out anger, upset and, often, jealousy and rivalry over the affections of a third party.

ADVICE: Be sure to separate from each other sometimes. Let go of claiming attitudes. Limit combativeness. Strive for openness and understanding.

Can Honesty Prevail?

Too often the facade that this combination presents to friends, relatives and the public at large belies the true state of things. The relationship is enigmatic, then, and hard to grasp, even for the partners themselves. Although Cancer and Scorpio are both water signs (associated with feeling), the relationship's symbol is earth, giving it a pragmatic, grounded and physical side that emphasizes responsibility but can also be characterized as judgmental and prone to laying on guilt and blame.

In love affairs and marriages, Cancer I's are likely to resent Scorpio III controlling attitudes. They are usually on the receiving end of Scorpio III punishment, and the relationship may in fact have a slightly sadomasochistic character. Part of the problem is that Cancer I's have a desperate need to express their feelings while Scorpio III's build their entire ego structure around controlling theirs. Threatened by Cancer I displays of emotion, Scorpio III's will repress and dominate—when actually they would do well to learn a thing or two. Cancer I's, on the other hand, have an uncanny ability to needle Scorpio III's. And since neither partner will act especially long-suffering if they don't get what they want, they will not hesitate to seek satisfaction elsewhere if the relationship fails to provide it. Lest this picture look unduly gloomy, it should be said that they can also be happy together, but only if dedication, honesty, and accepting, nonjudgmental and affectionate attitudes prevail.

Friendships in this combination can be puzzling and are often misunderstood. The world tends mainly to see the couple's differences, and to view the relationship as somewhat vague and lacking in definition. Only when the relationship proves its efficacy and survives some hard knocks will family and friends at last acknowledge it and take it seriously.

In work and family matchups, Cancer I's and Scorpio III's will benefit from the protective umbrella of a group in which their roles, particularly as co-workers or siblings, are well defined. The duo does best when personal matters do not intrude, and when bosses and parents expect dedication and results from them.

ADVICE: Be honest and open. Avoid double standards. Relinquish controlling attitudes. Don't let yourself be treated like a football.

THE CUSP OF REVOLUTION
SCORPIO-SAGITTARIUS CUSP

An Unreal World

This relationship will never follow the norm. Its partners find it difficult to define their interaction, which can be both positive and negative, depending on the point of view. Illusion figures prominently here, so pinning one's hopes and dreams on the relationship is usually a mistake. Cancer I's, the more traditional of the pair, will find the lack of focus more uncomfortable than freedom-loving Scorpio-Sagittarians do. Either way, the relationship is unlikely to be enduring. Cancer I's are prone to seeing something in this relationship that just isn't there. They are also rarely tough enough to stand up to Scorpio-Sagittarians, who can be slippery customers, and who, consciously or unconsciously, sometimes lead their partners on, making promises that they ultimately do not fulfill. Too often Scorpio-Sagittarians may get what they want, or think they want, out of this relationship and then move on, leaving a sadder and wiser Cancer I behind.

Romances can be mercifully short or unmercifully long. The short ones can be pleasurable for both partners, taking them into an unreal world from which, alas, they will eventually have to return. Longer-lasting matchups will encounter rejection, pain and blame that may sour memories of the relationship's auspicious start.

Friendships are only possible given some definite commitment. The choice ultimately rests with Scorpio-Sagittarians, whose missed appointments and forgotten phone calls too often let Cancer I's know that their friends care less than they do. Once they realize they have been taken advantage of, Cancer I's usually close the door. In fairness to Scorpio-Sagittarians, however, they may have been receiving mixed messages from this partner all along. Working relationships are probably the best bet here. Particularly recommended are imaginative efforts in which Scorpio-Sagittarius flair and taste can merge with Cancer I business sense and technical abilities. If the relationship can limit its tendency to drift and dream, it is capable of implementing its ideas in the commercial sector. Sibling and parent-child matchups are probably most successful when working to better the family situation, often by helping relatives to relax and enjoy themselves.

ADVICE: Try to keep your feet on the ground and your eye on the goal. Don't delude yourself. Find your real strengths. Don't get off track.

Well-Grounded Pursuits

This relationship grounds its partners and allows them clear objectives and priorities. But they need to be clear on exactly what they are talking about; if their communication isn't specific, misunderstandings can be common. They might also cultivate traits of discernment and selectivity—in fact, it is important that they do so. Cancer I's and Sagittarius I's will get along best when they have something specific to talk about or deal with. Should this basis be lacking, Cancer I vagueness and Sagittarius I philosophical flights of fancy may quickly send the relationship on a downward spiral.

Love affairs can become hopelessly lost or tangled up in miscommunication and garbled emotional language. Unless there is a solid physical attraction or some other definite reason for the two to get together, romance is unlikely to click. Marriage is often more likely to work out if the spouses share a good career relationship, or as a further evolution of a successful and objectively proven friendship.

Friendships are one sort of contact in which literal meaning may perhaps be less important. Here Cancer I's and Sagittarius I's can let it all hang out, relaxing, having fun and fooling around unseriously. Especially rewarding will be short summertime trips to the sea, lakes or rivers, as well as indoor activities like table tennis, pool and board games. It may be difficult for Cancer I–Sagittarius I relatives, especially parents or grandparents and children or grandchildren, to see eye to eye. Temperamental differences here may make mutual understanding difficult, creating emotional turmoil. In adolescence and young adulthood, such interactions go best when the scope of involvement is limited. Issues should always be well defined.

Cancer I–Sagittarius I work relationships are best off when they are built around self-employed or entrepreneurial activities that meld their separate skills effectively. Cancer I's are generally better at handling the home base and at designing, planning and budgeting. Sagittarius I's at being out in the field, traveling, doing hard physical work, solving problems and troubleshooting.

ADVICE: Don't let your thoughts run away with you. Limit activities and direct them well. Develop your separate skills. Learn to cooperate.

Kindred Souls

The Cancer I–Sagittarius II combination can be a fruitful one. There is a high and an enthusiasm in this relationship that the pair can use to initiate new endeavors, and that can do wonders in dispelling their negative moods. Both Cancer I's and Sagittarius II's have unusual qualities that in relationships with others will often mark them as strange and make them misunderstood, but with each other they may experience the fulfillment of meeting a kindred soul. Their acceptance and appreciation of each other's unconventional side often frees up the energy needed to initiate work projects together and to carry them through to completion.

Romantic relationships either click or don't. There are few gray areas or ambiguities here; Cancer I's and Sagittarius II's seldom beat around the bush, and are seldom indecisive about whether or not to continue together. In such all-or-nothing matchups, being able to be honest and direct about feelings will be a relief to both partners. Marriages between these two can work out wonderfully well or end in confused disaster. Before getting carried away with enthusiasm over how marvelous a marriage could be, or seeking to solve all their problems with a single throw of the dice, prospective Cancer I–Sagittarius II partners would do well to sit down and talk long and frankly about the advisability of such a step. Staying objective will be difficult but will save much pain in the long run.

Cancer I's and Sagittarius II's are unlikely to form deep friendships. Although they understand each other well, in this kind of relationship they may dislike many of each other's more unusual qualities. And without new projects to initiate, their relationship will probably lack strength and purpose. In the family, sibling and cousin pairs in this combination are likely to clash strongly and be unable to get along, unless they share a common hobby or artistic or athletic pursuit. Such interests can do a great deal to overcome temperamental differences.

THE WEEK OF THE TITAN
 SAGITTARIUS III

The most successful Cancer I–Sagittarius III relationships share a system of values or a vision of beauty. These two must recognize and nurture the value of what they have—including the relationship itself. Cancer I's and Sagittarius III's may view the world somewhat superficially, but they always contribute something worthwhile, and usually on a grand scale. Sagittarius III's are often so concerned with career or personal goals that they have difficulty acknowledging how dependent they are on this relationship. Cancer I's, however, are usually sensitive enough to realize that Sagittarius III's are not ignoring or undervaluing the relationship, just failing to recognize it. Cancer I's would seem to be at a disadvantage in this combination, but the unconscious needs of less aware Sagittarius III's are an open book to them, and if they want to they can exercise a powerful psychological control here.

This seems to be a classic extrovert-introvert pair, but outsiders often don't see either the lower, withdrawn moods of Sagittarius III's or the active role Cancer I's can play in dealing with them. In love affairs and marriages, Cancer I's who are wise enough not to launch a frontal assault on Sagittarius III depression will show a valuable understanding and patience. Sagittarius III's usually adopt an aggressive, forceful attitude toward the world while Cancer I's pay attention to the domestic scene, but within the relationship such dichotomies are rarely so simple. By mutually worshiping a standard of beauty, perhaps in each other, their children, their home or common interests, these partners are granted the gift of sharing. In friendships Sagittarius III's often dominate, and Cancer I's may eventually need to break free of them. In family situations, too, a Sagittarius III parent may exert an overpowering influence on a Cancer I child, or a brother or sister on a sibling. Work relationships in this combination are challenged in co-worker or colleague matchups that demand equality. Less problematic will be simple boss-employee relationships in which the Sagittarius III is the "big picture" person and plays the primary role while the Cancer I manages the project's internal works.

ADVICE: Openly acknowledge what you have. Strive for equality. Appreciate differences fully. Don't get locked into fixed roles. Stay flexible.

Relief from the Shadow

December 19–25

THE CUSP OF PROPHECY
 SAGITTARIUS-CAPRICORN CUSP

The childlike nature of this relationship is usually apparent to both partners. Although their joint outlook may be somewhat naive at times, they have a chance to develop a playful and fantasy-rich connection. Needing privacy, they often keep their activities covert and hidden from the world, and it may take them quite a long time to begin to share their most intimate secrets with each other—behavior that the relationship will generally foster. Acceptance and trust will play a strong role here. The potential therapeutic value, for both partners, of their personal interactions should not be underestimated, since these two have a deep and depressive shadow side from which the relationship may at last offer them some relief.

Love affairs here may be immature and unrealistic, but romance is often high and infatuations can be pleasurablely overwhelming. Both partners are likely to throw caution to the winds, but the flame that burns so brightly may also be quickly extinguished. Marriages are not recommended unless the partners are willing to adopt more mature attitudes and shoulder heavy responsibilities.

Cancer I–Sagittarius-Capricorn friendships and sibling matchups can be playful and close. The childlike element is given full rein here. Both partners are open to enjoying fun activities, whether in the areas of games, sports, media, music or adventure. Their matchups are generally closed to others, and a great challenge here is opening up the relationship to make such activities more inclusive.

The shadow side of the combination appears relatively little in friendships and sibling relationships. Solemn moments will occur here, but they are usually healthy ones, in which the partners feel able to share their problems and pain with each other. Work relationships in this combination may not be serious enough to succeed, but when Cancer I's and Sagittarius-Capricorns are co-workers and colleagues, they can brighten up the workplace with lighter, more frivolous attitudes.

ADVICE: Preserve your youthfulness, but don't neglect your responsibilities. Be a wee bit more realistic. Look before you leap. Share with others.

Cost-Effectiveness

This relationship is generally rather severe and demanding; perfectionist drives make relaxation and easy interaction difficult here. Because Cancer I and Capricorn I lie opposite each other in the zodiac, astrology predicts difficulties, and in this case correctly so—the opposition translates into tension and pressure to produce a perfect result.

Cancer I's can be quite critical, and are likely to give Capricorn I's as good as they get. Should the relationship emerge in the family or at work, it may well demand more efficiency from others and exert pressure on relatives or colleagues to avoid wastefulness. Acumen and innate conservatism in money matters are characteristic enough that an insistence on cost-effective approaches is probable. Although Cancer is a water sign and Capricorn earth, the Cancer I–Capricorn I relationship is symbolized by the element of air, associated with thought, here suggesting planning, the implementation of ideas and also, unfortunately, a tendency to worry.

The cerebral attitudes found here are often counterproductive in the area of love. Checklists and evaluations should be left behind at the bedroom door, but often are not, putting both partners under pressure to perform properly and well. The strains engendered by these attitudes can lead to a lack of spontaneity and ultimately to inflexibility and even breakdown. The relationship's perfectionist slant may put married partners in this combination under unbearable stress, making them so worried about financial and domestic problems that they are unable to relax and enjoy themselves.

Friendships may circumvent such extreme attitudes, laying aside most of the matchup's usual unrealistic expectations. But a pickiness about details and a tacit expectation of a high level of quality can drive both partners to distraction. In the family, particularly when Capricorn I is the parent and Cancer I the child, dominating attitudes and the merciless application of rules will ultimately arouse resentment or, worse, produce an individual who cannot function without receiving strict orders.

ADVICE: Ease up in your demands. Relax more. Allow other people their own approach and values. Beware of inflexibility.

A Need for Interaction

This matchup plays an important role for its partners by teaching them not only how to interact socially with others but, more crucial still, the value of the relationship itself. Both of these personalities can be single-minded about their own success; here they will learn to consider another person's needs and wants, to be more diplomatic and to negotiate, as well as the value of give-and-take. If they are adept students, this could be a successful combination.

The danger here is that the partners will instead choose to cut themselves off from other people and retreat to what they see as a safe space. It may not be as safe as they think. Away from the influence of friends and family, empathic Cancer I's may act out the frustrations, anger and other repressed feelings of their partner in this combination. They are prone to pick up unconsciously and very quickly on the feelings of Capricorn II's, expressing them as if they were their own. The personal problems of both partners also tend to become magnified the more time they spend alone together. For reasons of mental health, then, this pair should build bridges to the outside world.

Love affairs, marriage and friendships will have problems breaking through the partners' armor. In childhood, both of them have commonly suffered from the disapproving attitudes of parents, teachers and other authority figures, making them build a tough and resistant exterior. The task of all of these relationships is slowly to build bonds of commonality and trust that will dissolve these barriers. After making the effort to connect with the other partner, whether as lover, spouse or friend, these two may eventually begin to interact better with other friends and family members. In family relationships, especially parent-child, Cancer I's and Capricorn II's often try to break with old cycles and patterns that make them repeat past mistakes, and to act in less oppressive and more kindly and accepting ways. Boss-employee and teacher-student relationships should also be softened and brought down to a more human level involving openness and sharing.

ADVICE: Let go of past baggage. You have been carrying too much on your shoulders. Beware of isolation. Establish social bonds.

Humor Abounding

Competition for the spotlight is common in this combination, but it does not have to be serious. The relationship may feature a friendly rivalry abounding with good nature and humor. Perhaps out of embarrassment or not wanting to seem pushy, neither Cancer I's nor Capricorn III's are used to pushing for glory (although a fair share of them achieve it). In this relationship, then, they can have a great deal of fun teasing each other about trying to gain attention. In their personal interactions they may pretend to ignore their partner, or to be unimpressed by his or her achievements, as a kind of game-playing activity designed to push buttons and force a reaction.

Love affairs can be quite passionate here. Although Cancer is a water sign and Capricorn earth, the relationship is ruled by fire, in this case connoting the combustibility of a torrid love affair. Fire often introduces intuition, and in this area the relationship is strong. These partners will have good hunches about what is and is not allowed at any particular time. As lovers they often consider formal marriage unnecessary, preferring to live together, permanently or semipermanently.

Friends and siblings can have great times kidding each other and engaging in mock competitions and satirical debates. These battles sometimes turn serious, but any animosities that develop are quickly dispelled. One exception, which may prove deeply divisive, is when partners engage in rivalry for the attention of a common love object. The third party is often ultimately rejected and viewed quite coolly by both friends as not being worth losing the relationship over.

Cancer I–Capricorn III work relations can be outstanding, and co-workers who are separated when one partner moves on to a new position or changes jobs may preserve their relationship, at least for a time, as friends.

ADVICE: Know when to be serious and when to let up. Don't let teasing get out of hand. Beware of third-party rivalries. Act with consideration to all.

THE CUSP OF MYSTERY & IMAGINATION
CAPRICORN-AQUARIUS CUSP

Dress-Up Time

Imagination, fantasy, flair—this relationship has all that and more. If Cancer I's and Capricorn-Aquarians have not discovered this aspect of their relationship, they don't know what they're missing. The self-image of Cancer I's could change drastically here, and almost overnight. Any vision they had of themselves as stick-in-the-mud stay-at-homes is liable to go right out the window, for their partner won't see them that way at all. Capricorn-Aquarians can feel very comfortable in this relationship, and will usually take the lead in showing some of the steps to their Cancer I partners.

Love affairs here tend to be romantic and flamboyant. Any Cancer I relationship is capable of intimacy, but the partners in this one figure that if you've got it—flaunt it! Letting it all hang out may be a whole new experience to Cancer I's, and one that they thoroughly enjoy. Just the relief over not feeling embarrassed or inhibited by public display is a reward in itself for these private personalities. Marriages are apt to be less exciting and more prosaic. The relationship does have a more thoughtful side that will emerge here, but ultimately it may not be in the cards for these two to take on more demanding responsibilities. Furthermore, the emotional depth needed for a longer-lasting commitment such as marriage is generally lacking here.

Cancer I–Capricorn-Aquarius friendships are likely to be no less outgoing than love affairs; public displays of affection between these friends should not be ruled out. Sibling matchups, especially between opposite sexes, may lift a few eyebrows when normal brother-sister inhibitions are thrown to the winds.

At work, this relationship is unlikely to flourish in a tedious or boring desk or factory job. Yet co-workers in such a situation may be pleased to make the money (even when not thrilled by the work), then go out after work hours and tie one on.

ADVICE: Even eyebrows tire of being lifted. Don't overdo your effects. Keep something in reserve. Find the real you. Don't rule out thoughtfulness.

Hatching New Ideas

This can be a brilliant combination for furthering projects and realizing goals. The relationship lets its partners know that they do well operating in a broad social context; together these two naturally take the lead in any endeavor, meanwhile sharing few tensions between themselves over dominance and control. They do, however, demand the highest quality both in others and in themselves. The relationship's quality of nurturing and understanding hatches new ideas the way a brooder hatches chicks. This team can often take the lead in their professional or social field, doing the pioneering work that others will follow. Although the relationship's focus is not necessarily practical, Cancer I's and Aquarius I's may well have the theoretical know-how and drive to succeed. Should Cancer I's be teachers, researchers or bosses and Aquarius I's their students, assistants or employees, these two are likely to spur each other to new heights of achievement.

In love affairs and marriages in this combination, Cancer I's are likely to be appreciative, nurturing and supportive of their partners. But they can be made very unhappy by Aquarius I instabilities and shenanigans, particularly flirting with others—even though they know that Aquarius I's need to be free, and are happiest when given the space they require. Aquarius I's demand constant appreciation, so much so that Cancer I's may be relieved sometimes to find themselves alone. Aquarius I's will generally enjoy the domestic comfort and security that Cancer I's can provide, assuming that they don't find it cloying or claiming.

In family matchups, Cancer I parents can be too protective and ambitious for their Aquarius I kids. They should certainly encourage these children, but must stop themselves from projecting their own frustrated wishes on them: the child's success should not be expected to make up for the parent's missed chances. Aquarius I parents may not be able to give their Cancer I children the protection and nurture they require. Friendships in this combination are likely to be mutually supportive but rarely go very deep, and eventually may just drift apart.

ADVICE: Don't feel you have to push. Let things grow of their own accord. Beware of claiming attitudes. Share but observe boundaries.

Intelligently Hedonistic

This relationship has a natural tendency to be analytical and to flex its mind power. The danger is that analysis can take the form of negative criticism—of nagging, complaining and other energy-draining activities that wear the partners down. Cancer I's are more prone to worrying and complaining than Aquarius II's, who are seldom tough enough to deal with this behavior and prefer a relationship with few if any hassles. If negative criticism reaches too high a level, Aquarius II's may figure the relationship is not worth the effort. Turning the mental orientation to positive purpose, then, is a worthy goal here.

Romantic impulses in this combination can be severely blunted by an overly mental orientation. Yet the relationship's mind power can also be put to work thinking up ever more delightful means of enjoyment. A host of new activities and improvements for old ones—more fulfilling vacations, more imaginative and pleasurable lovemaking, more delicious and well-planned menus—all of these and more can attest to an intelligently hedonistic attitude. Positive criticism, then, can bring enjoyment rather than dissatisfaction to both partners, while not denying the relationship's critical focus.

Marriages and friendships here must be careful not to be destructive toward others. Quite capable of bringing people down with their insightful and penetrating barbs, the Cancer I–Aquarius II relationship may be notorious in its social and family circles for puncturing overinflated egos. Although this behavior is sometimes necessary, overindulgence in it can intimidate other people and make them uptight. Cultivating diplomacy, kindness and consideration will allow others to accept their observations in a much more constructive spirit. At work and in the family, Cancer I–Aquarius II co-worker and sibling pairs may function as a reality test, being useful for telling the group when they have gone off course and how to get back on track again.

ADVICE: Others should feel that your comments are well meant. Be diplomatic. Act out of consideration, not as a judge.

THE WEEK OF ACCEPTANCE
AQUARIUS III

A Power Challenge

The focus of this relationship is power, whether the challenge is to seize it, exercise it or give it up. A spiritually evolutionary process may be implied in this, with the partners first striving for and grasping power, then learning more about themselves and their relationship, and finally relinquishing power in favor of higher ends. They may have to acknowledge their social or personal power, and live with it awhile, before they can give it up. Along the way, Cancer I's and Aquarius III's may come to realize that the greatest power of all is the power of love, which should be not given up but given away, and shared with others freely.

Love obviously has much to teach in this relationship. An affair may begin somewhat conventionally, with the partners being attracted to each other and falling in love, but after a time both will sense that they are fated to pursue a more spiritual course. This doesn't mean that they sacrifice physical contact, affection or sex, but that they reorient their priorities, making self-development along their common and individual paths the highest consideration of all. Marriages that can sustain such lofty goals and feelings may reach high levels of spirituality.

Friendships may have begun after the partners have once been professional or personal opponents or rivals. With this pair, admiration and respect can quickly displace combativeness and envy, and they rarely fall back into the earlier habit. The process also implies giving up competitive power and adopting more peaceful, open and accepting attitudes.

Parent-child relationships can be stormy, but often form the family's solid backbone. They can also share a lot of power, giving direction and force to all the family's activities. At work, Cancer I's and Aquarius III's must be careful not to fight over power nor to wield it unfairly over others. Instead, they should put it to the good of all.

ADVICE: Try to be loving and accepting. Don't get carried away by power. Seek your own path. Simple acts of kindness can be very strong.

THE CUSP OF SENSITIVITY
AQUARIUS-PISCES CUSP

A Unique Opportunity

This relationship is likely to reach a depth of empathy and sensitivity far beyond what either party is capable of alone or with other people. This special emotional intensity can work either beneficially or hurtfully, since it keys in to personal areas of great vulnerability. The relationship can develop a great deal of trust, for example, but if the results of this trust are negative, the partners may be forced to back off from each other, or even to break off the relationship. Both Cancer I's and Aquarius-Pisces may come into the relationship strongly armored or protected because of past hurts, yet be unable to close themselves off to each other due to the powerful chemistry between them.

Love and friendship in this combination offer unique opportunities for self-exploration, mutual growth and sharing. Cancer I's will generally be able to see deep into the inner lives of their Aquarius-Pisces lovers, who for their part may be made quite uptight by being so transparent; yet they in turn will have special powers in cases of Cancer I withdrawal and depression, leaving their partners feeling they have nowhere to hide. Both partners can benefit from their scrutiny of each other, then, yet both may have mixed feelings about it. Passions are likely to be intense here, hard to fathom and even harder to control. Particularly at the extremes of ecstatic and unhappy moments, lack of analytical skills and awareness may lead the partners to feel a bit helpless about what is happening to them, leaving them quite confused.

Marriages and work relationships often lack the solid commitment, practical abilities and technical skills necessary to get it together. Family business, too, may come grinding to a halt when Cancer I and Aquarius-Pisces interact. Not that Cancer I's and Aquarius-Pisces are completely lacking in these skills, but their relationship is so emotional that they may be handicapped in using them. If these relationships are to succeed, the partners must strive for objectivity, put feelings aside and keep their eye directly on what needs doing, without getting distracted.

ADVICE: Gain insight into yourself. Try to be a bit analytical. Strive for objectivity. Remain open but more in control. Be aware of others.

The Long Haul

Ruled by earth, this relationship brings solid and well-established values to bear. Its foundation is not flimsy or temporary—these two have the long haul in mind. Although their combination is governed by earth, both Cancer I and Pisces I are ruled by water; a trine relationship (120° apart in the zodiac) between water signs like theirs is classically one of the easiest and most compatible of the year. Their attitudes toward each other are accepting, but the demands they make on each other are considerable: their relationship promotes groundedness, pragmatism, responsibility and maturity, eschewing the kind of flakiness that both partners might be accused of individually. A kind of tenacity inherent here will help them over any bumps in the road.

The natural flow between Cancer I's and Pisces I's promotes relaxed attitudes in love affairs. These two are also grounded here in a sensuous appreciation of food, sex and comfortable surroundings. Marriages are encouraged as a further step in a life commitment to each other, as is having children. Financial security is essential to the well-being of all concerned.

In commercial, educational and social activities, these two give little value to ideas in themselves unless they are put into practice. The Cancer I–Pisces I relationship may be especially effective in seeing to the smooth running of an organization, work that will help keep these ordinarily private individuals in touch with the world. The partners will both appreciate the relationship and at times resent its heavy demands—which can, in fact, overwhelm friendships in this combination. Cancer I's and Pisces I's usually prefer just to have a good time when not working, and may back off from a relationship that is too heavy or laden with responsibility. In the family, parent-child relationships may have both the solidity and the flexibility necessary in everyday interactions, being both reliable and sensitive to the needs of others. Spiritual and religious values may be viewed as essential to giving meaning and direction to such a family unit.

ADVICE: Keep it light. Don't get bogged down in responsibilities. Pursue spiritual values. Be realistic in your demands. Don't expect too much.

Deep Personal Involvement

Intense in feeling, this relationship can become a kind of womb, a place where the partners can feel nurtured and protected. In providing this safe harbor, the combination can catalyze self-transformation: it can teach the partners to give themselves over to and trust each other and the relationship itself. Neither Cancer I's nor Pisces II's form deep bonds easily, but they often know as soon as they meet that they have found someone they can trust. They may have been misunderstood in the past—by parents, lovers, even friends; here, suddenly, is someone who seems to accept them. Is this feeling to be believed? Is it just another setup for betrayal? How the pair respond will have a lot to do with how the relationship goes. Old wounds may make them distrustful and wary, setting up the conditions for disappointment. If they accept the bond with faith, however, it can be all that it promises.

Cancer I–Pisces II love affairs are generally more successful when visible than when concealed. These partners have to feel proud of each other; no matter how private their relationship, they gain satisfaction and confidence from appearing in public together without fear or shame. In marriage the partners must beware of jealousy. They should also take care that their individual developments and self-realizations are not inhibited by the closeness of their connection.

Friendships here may be possessive; it is important for the partners to learn to share friends, feel free to spend time with others and not be afraid to turn each other down. Both of them have an intense need to spend time alone, a trait that neither of them should view as a sign of the relationship's failure. On the contrary, they may come to resent their relationship if it deprives them of occasional solitude.

Family and career relationships can be healthy in making these two maintain contact with the world. Practical considerations and the need for caring, responsibility and nurture can provide the balance needed for their personal involvement.

ADVICE: Beware of false expectations. Don't think too much—feel. Release worry and fear. Build personal bonds of trust and bridges to the world.

The Highway of Life

Many lessons can be learned from this relationship—indeed the themes of learning and teaching are important here. The combination encourages not only individual growth but the potential to grow as a pair. These two will always be involved with ideas and concepts—they may even believe they have a message to share. Cancer I and Pisces III partners are likely to join in a host of challenging activities, whether as students in formal classes or as partners on the highway of life. The relationship's focus is usually the acquisition of knowledge through experience. There are many ways of working out this theme, but since differences in age are no barrier here, teacher-student relationships are particularly favored.

In the sphere of love, neither romance nor pleasure is seen as the be-all and end-all. If these partners don't feel that their love is a learning experience for them, they quickly tire of it. If the affair is to be fulfilling, challenges must be met, barriers overcome and development visible. A certain amount of pain, suffering and difficulty is seen as in no way proof that the relationship is a failure—in fact, it is understood as a challenge to grow. This positive attitude bodes well for marriages as well.

In the family, grandparent-grandchild matchups may be more profitable than parent-child ones: Sibling matchups and friendships are often played out against the backdrop of school. Social opportunities are every bit as important as educational ones here; in fact, they are viewed as an important part of the learning process. These partners must be careful of jealousies over mutual friends and competitive tendencies over position in the pecking order. It will be important for the relationship to present a united front, but also to avoid being a closed fraternity. Cancer I–Pisces III friends and family are quite likely to work together for a company or even to form their own business. It is important here that they are able to get away from each other when necessary to follow their own path of self-realization and development.

ADVICE: Give each other enough space. Take things as they come. Let up a bit on your demands. Be patient. Beware of jealousy and competition.

THE WEEK OF THE UNCONVENTIONAL
CANCER II

Off the Beaten Path

How unconventional can a relationship get? This matchup may not impress other people as being terribly out of the ordinary; many Cancer II's function well in regular jobs, and those around this pair may view them as quite normal. In private life, however, the truly unusual qualities of the Cancer II personality come to light, and this relationship only magnifies them. The fantasy world built up here can be vivid, highly imaginative and indeed extreme. The combination encourages an interest in the bizarre, whether in books, film, electronic media, design or dance. Cancer II couples may also enjoy elements of popular culture that appear quite ordinary to other people, but whatever catches their eye usually has an incongruous or peculiar aspect to it, and this is what strikes their fancy.

Romances and marriages demand a lot of privacy, in a space that is capable of sustaining or reflecting these partners' inner vision. Unusual designs, colors and shapes may be stimulating to this couple, but they may also play out their tastes against a neutral background, as if a projector were throwing colorful images onto a blank screen. This curious dichotomy is also reflected in the clothing of Cancer II combinations, some couples appearing outlandish, others unremarkable. In many other aspects of life, too, the relationship can either express its unusualness directly or it can mute, disguise or mask it.

Cancer II friends like to share secrets with each other, particularly concerning childhood traumas. Parental and societal disapproval often figure prominently here, and the relationship may be quite therapeutic for both partners in alleviating or erasing inferiority complexes and other old, outworn negative scripts. Acceptance is the keynote here, and with it an eagerness to leave the baggage of the past behind.

Cancer II–Cancer II family and work matchups are likely to be mutually sympathetic but unremarkable. Be they parent and child, siblings, co-workers, or boss and employee, both parties have a way of not drawing attention to themselves and, in fact, of deemphasizing their personal relationship in favor of their outward role.

ADVICE: Don't be so defensive. Others may actually appreciate your more ordinary self. Share when trust is earned. Give more of yourself in everyday life.

THE WEEK OF THE PERSUADER
CANCER III

Ebb and Flow

This can be a surprisingly powerful combination, devoted to seeking success in the world. Cancers in general tend to be intimate and personal in character, but this relationship brings out their more worldly, hard-driving and ambitious side as well. Even when the pair's goals are unusual in some way, they will provide each other with a great deal of emotional and moral support in their individual efforts, exhibiting surprisingly little competitiveness or jealousy. They can also show incredible determination in getting what they want. Once their individual differences have been settled and a common course agreed upon, the pair can forge ahead in the world to attain its goals, whether these are lofty or intensely practical.

Love affairs and friendships in this combination can be conjoined with career endeavors but sometimes suffer in the comparison. Too often, emotional matters and personal responsibilities are put aside or even ignored because pressing professional matters are given priority. Cancer II–Cancer III lovers and friends do best when they can find a balance between personal and career needs. Married couples and family matchups usually display a strong interest in and talent for the organizational and structural elements of their group; they can be counted on to hold their own in contributing to special events, whether with logistical planning or, say, the preparation of food, and are especially capable in financial matters.

The relationship is favored in matters of work and career. Financial success is a real possibility here: this couple has a feeling for material things and for handling money, sensing the dynamics of give-and-take, buy-and-sell, ebb-and-flow. That the fluidity of the daily market is understood at the most basic level here is clear from the way impatience and the desire for a quick kill are wisely subordinated to watching, waiting and finally moving decisively at the right moment. Although the pair are usually fairly considerate of their associates and fellow employees, they also have an undeniably ruthless streak, and are quite capable of protecting their own interests.

ADVICE: Don't neglect your personal life. Keep career drives under control. Balance ambition with self-development. Be kind to others.

THE CUSP OF OSCILLATION

Persuasive Leadership

This relationship manifests an intense need to persuade others of the rightness of its cause and the appropriateness of its decision-making. Since these two are resistant to emotional manipulation from each other, their joint need to influence or manipulate another person's point of view is often expressed in relation to friends, family or the public at large. Cancer II's will benefit from their contacts with Cancer-Leos, who will encourage them to realize their fantasies. Their psychologically astute understanding will in turn help Cancer-Leos in their own process of self-discovery.

Love affairs here may have a taste for secrecy and risk-taking, a combination that can encourage extramarital and other covert relationships. A love of danger can really get out of hand, to the point where it becomes the main ingredient of the whole pleasure process. Cancer II–Cancer-Leo relationships are not recommended for marriage, since in reaching for stability and social approval they will probably lose their thrill.

Friendships are likely to feature adventure, often as part of a team that this pair will lead, giving it their direction and convincing it of their capability and strength. Together these two are persuasive leaders, able to face danger with equanimity. They usually keep the best interests of the team in mind—true, Cancer II fantasy will have to be scaled back from time to time, and Cancer-Leo mood swings ironed out, but the relationship will support and encourage these processes.

Family pairs, especially siblings, may make it their business to convince other family members of their point of view and persuade them to change their course. They often come to see themselves as the watchdogs who will alert the family to lurking and unperceived dangers. Cancer II–Cancer-Leo work relationships are most effective as partnerships or matchups between colleagues on the same level. Public relations, advertising, marketing and other areas that involve influencing retailers and the public are likely to be areas of strength.

ADVICE: Avoid thinking that you are more important than anyone else. Others can do without you. Leave room for personal choice. Control your thirst for danger.

THE WEEK OF AUTHORITY
 LEO I

Transcending Conflict

A classic confrontation emerges here: Leo I's base what they know and do on tradition, Cancer II's do things their own way and break with the past. The relationship's focus, then, is often a power struggle. This internal combat can be vivid and exciting to the partners, but they should be careful to prevent it from taking a violent turn. They are ultimately quite capable of carving out a relationship that finds a middle ground between conservative and radical impulses. If they manage this, they should discover quite a creative fertility and energy.

Love affairs and friendships accentuate a variation on this kind of confrontation: moon-ruled Cancer II's shine with reflected light, sun-ruled Leo I's blaze in their own fiery glory. Power struggles inevitably surface in such relationships, often over who will receive attention from others. Whether the partners are rivals or outright combatants, no quarter will be asked for or given in their struggles. Their interactions are often passionately intense, but the relationship has the potential to transcend their conflicts by integrating their contrasting energies at a higher level. These solid bonds will not be easy to forge. Once created, however, they will be hard to break. Marriages between Cancer II's and Leo I's are only possible if each has his or her own unquestioned turf or field of expertise. The alternative is constant conflict, making a relaxed and rewarding home life difficult or impossible for the spouses and their children. In family matchups, especially between parents and children, great understanding will have to be shown on both sides to avoid power struggles, which, however, are usually inevitable. Siblings may be rivals in their younger years but can grow closer as they mature into adulthood. Working relationships tend to be more successful or at least more comfortable at the executive level, where colleagues in different areas of specialty can complement each other. The most exciting and even productive relationships, however, may well be intense rivalries, which bring out both the best and the worst in Cancer II's and Leo I's, whether they work for the same organization or for competitors.

ADVICE: Get the best out of your interactions. Play fair. Try to transcend differences. Avoid pettiness and minor irritations. Keep the big picture in mind.

WEAKNESSES: UPSETTING, UNSETTLING, DISTRACTING

 CANCER II

August 3–10

THE WEEK OF BALANCED STRENGTH
 LEO II

Established Oppositions

This relationship has two distinct sides, and its energies oscillate between them—between light and dark, outer and inner, intuition and emotion. Little attempt is made to tone down contrasts or to arrive at compromise or synthesis. Understanding the wide swings imposed by the combination's pendulumlike nature, and learning to go with their flow, will go far toward creating peace here. Cancer II's will have an easier time of it; unconventional in nature, they may even enjoy the relationship's variety. Leo III's, on the other hand, have a strong need for balance. They will tense up in this combination, resisting its natural viability, and creating the potential for conflict.

Cancer II–Leo II love affairs are often romantic, involving deep emotional interaction and exciting and often risky activities, whether in career areas or out in the wild. Cancer II's feel most comfortable at home, but yearn for projects that will sweep them off their feet or whisk them away on a magic carpet. Leo II's may be just the opposite, spending their time breaking down barriers and reaching new heights of achievement but all the while dreaming of a warm fire and a comfortable bed. An ideal arrangement for these two would be to spend long periods first at home and then elsewhere, perhaps passing one part of the year in their own city or country and another part away or abroad. The more activities they can share, the better: both love affairs and marriages tend to be most successful when the partners are also engaged in a shared career endeavor. Lovers who also work together may not consider marriage a necessary step.

Cancer II–Leo II siblings will often complement each other productively, but more outside the family setting than within it. The relationship's swings and oscillations can generate domestic instability, but friends and schoolmates are more likely to bring excitement and variety of mood. Co-workers in this combination can generate upset in the workplace by keeping others from concentrating, but socially they may be the life of the party.

ADVICE: Find your real needs and satisfy them. Don't settle for less than the best for yourself. Unify some of the different areas in your life. Let go and let it flow.

THE WEEK OF LEADERSHIP
LEO III

Special Rapport

This unusual and powerful combination can achieve prominence through its outstanding mental talents. Its focus is a thoughtful approach capable of quickly assessing a problem at its roots and taking steps to solve it. The leadership qualities of Leo III's often coalesce with the uncanny ability of Cancer II's to anticipate their wishes, as well as problems or trends in the world at large. In this way these two can make an outstanding combination in many areas of achievement. The relationship reminds one a bit of the special rapport that is possible between a film or stage director (the Leo III) and an actor or actress (the Cancer II).

Lovers in this combination sometimes mirror and duplicate each other's moods, but the relationship offers them the psychological insight they need to figure out what is going on. Their comprehension is often immediate—they are capable of an almost instant awareness of the consequences of their actions and behavior together. This heightened consciousness allows for an interesting blend of physical and mental communication, and also obviates somewhat the need for bothersome discussions afterward. Marriages here can work out well, but care must be taken not to go too far in the mental direction, leaving important physical and emotional needs unmet.

Friends in this combination must beware of being too materialistic and of overvaluing logic at the expense of more spiritual considerations. Keeping in touch with the feelings the duo share is vitally important in sustaining such friendships. In family settings and at work, Leo III parents and bosses will find themselves easily understood and appreciated by Cancer II children and employees. The fact that Cancer II's are willing to work along with them and to match them in dedication and application means a great deal to them. They are also able to unburden themselves to these Cancer II's without fear of ridicule or rejection. In fact, the real power behind the regal Leo III throne may be an unusual and unassuming Cancer II.

ADVICE: Don't ignore emotional and spiritual considerations. Try not to get too tied up in your thoughts. Promote equality. Keep in touch with others.

LEO-VIRGO CUSP

Finding the Connection

This combination has a crying need for a firm basis, whether ideological, financial or emotional, on which to ground itself. In times of need, these partners are likely to turn to their relationship to give them stability. The focus here often lies in hidden realms that have little meaning to anyone but the partners themselves. Cancer II's are magnetically drawn to unusual people, and the emotional world of Leo-Virgos may become an important point of interest for them. Leo-Virgos may likewise enjoy having the power to conceal or reveal as little or as much to their Cancer II mates as they wish. In all of this, however, the relationship must establish a solid connection between these psychological and personal explorations and the kind of basis described above.

Cancer II–Leo-Virgo lovers, friends and spouses may be able to unify and give structure to their lives through a common career, business, religion or spiritual path. This usually requires, however, that they spend most of their time together, and presupposes that they get along well enough to do so. Career or social activities will be grounding but will also benefit from the tremendous inner resources and strengths into which this combination can tap. Personal irritations may well arise here, and if so, it is important that anger and resentment as well as love and kindness be expressed without fear of rejection or censure. Guilt may be a big item between these two, particularly given the kind of secretiveness that the relationship fosters.

Cancer II and Leo-Virgo family members may experience conflict over living space, possessions and chores, which they may perceive as unfairly divided. Deep jealousies can injure closeness and arouse aggressiveness or betrayal. If such conflicts are to be resolved and laid to rest as children in this combination grow up, it will be crucial for them to find a common ideology or belief system.

ADVICE: Build close bonds, but be able to find time away from each other as well. Develop common beliefs and projects. Beware of competition for the affections of others.

THE WEEK OF SYSTEM BUILDERS
VIRGO I

Preoccupation with the Bizarre

This combination promotes eccentricity, and while both of its partners are normally very hard-working, together they occupy themselves mainly in the pursuit of pleasure and ease. Virgo I's can busily focus their attention on Cancer II's, perhaps even trying to construct a psychological system to define or contain their more unusual side. But the relationship promotes unconventionality, and the Cancer II is apt to slip out of the Virgo I's grasp. And the harder the Virgo I chases the Cancer II, the more bizarre his or her own behavior will begin to seem. The process can become addictive, and the couple may soon want nothing more than the freedom to pursue it.

Hiding from a third party, or from society's watchful eye, can become obsessive in Cancer II–Virgo I matchups, using up much too much energy. Love affairs and friendships do best when out in the open, then. Healthy affairs tend to evolve naturally toward temporary and then permanent living situations, and perhaps finally into marriage. The comfort and security afforded by a shared domestic space is one of the relationship's cornerstones; here the couple can indulge their preoccupation with the bizarre. They will naturally want to work together to enhance such a space, making it more aesthetically beautiful as well as more functional. The nurturing and service-oriented side of the relationship suggests having or adopting children, but parents in this combination must be careful to leave enough quality time for each other, and for themselves.

Work relationships are not recommended here, since they are seldom hard-driving enough to achieve success, and are likely to break with company policy. The emphasis is too often on relaxation and the kind of intimacy that can only be found after hours. Family matchups, especially between parents and children, can be respectful and affectionate, but sometimes also foster dependency and are emotionally debilitating. Encouraging independence and breaking with claiming attitudes may emerge as the challenges to be met if these two are to establish mature bonds later in life.

ADVICE: Avoid secretiveness. Pay attention to how others see you. Beware of addictions.

September 3–10

THE WEEK OF THE ENIGMA
VIRGO II

Finding Comfort

A surprisingly strong and balanced relationship can emerge from this matchup, which may focus on rejecting the judgmental attitudes of society and building a self-confident and constructive outlook. Cancer II's and Virgo II's could well find comfort in each other, for each will be sensitive to the extent to which the other has been misunderstood by the world. Some pairs in this combination may in fact adopt a vigorously defiant stance toward outsiders, and even in cases of a quieter and more humble posture, the partners will probably be strongly aware of what they are doing and will exert a determined effort to prove themselves, both personally and professionally.

The world is likely to see little of most Cancer II–Virgo II love affairs and friendships; they have a way of turning their backs on society, perhaps somewhat contemptuously. Past experience may have shown one or both partners how little the world can be trusted, so that they tend to put all of their social eggs in one basket, restricting their circle to a very few friends or even none at all. At least at first, this may enhance their relationship's chances of survival, but building a relationship on bitterness and disillusionment is a risky business, and once these two have formed a solid bond, they should begin, as a relationship, to open up to the world and create new ties. In the event of a breakup, both partners are likely to be more whole and healthy personalities than they were before.

Work and marital relationships are not so highly favored here: acknowledging the authority of a company, or, through the marriage contract, of society, is rarely to this relationship's taste. Even so, building their own entrepreneurial enterprise, with concrete goals and aimed at a specific target group, is something these two could handle. Cancer II–Virgo II sibling or parent-child relationships are unlikely to attract much attention within the family structure, yet are generally protected and understood there, and may wind up giving their stamp to the group itself.

ADVICE: Don't try to build on negative feelings. Forgive and forget. Come to peace with your past. Fight antisocial tendencies. Make new friends.

July 3–10

THE WEEK OF THE UNCONVENTIONAL
CANCER II

September 11–18

THE WEEK OF THE LITERALIST
VIRGO III

Learning Experience

Developing an open and relaxed attitude will be a learning experience for both of these partners, and is the key to their relationship's success. Virgo III's are unlikely to approve of Cancer II attitudes, but can come to accept them—an important step. Cancer II's will generally understand Virgo III's even when they don't agree with them, and will be content to let their ideas go without too much argument if afforded the same courtesy. But the judgmental side of Virgo III's is brought out here, and unconventional Cancer II's may find themselves accused, convicted and sentenced before they know they're on trial.

Love affairs and marriages are not recommended here without a considerable amount of tolerance. To start with, these two are rarely much attracted to each other. Should they be thrown together for any of a host of reasons, they will have to decide whether to make the best of it or just quit. Long-suffering attitudes are unlikely to produce good results. Sometimes both partners are better off just letting go.

Friendships are more apt to be productive, particularly when weighted in the direction of companionship in a particular area, perhaps sports or a hobby. But family and work matchups will try both partners' patience to the limit, especially where Virgo III is the parent or boss. Cancer II's are likely to feel misunderstood and unappreciated in this kind of relationship, Virgo II's unheeded and ignored. A big first step toward acceptance would be for the partners to see such situations as setups that little can be done about, and to work to make things more pleasant.

There are many partners in life who have not rushed to pick each other out. Those who believe in fate, predestination or reincarnation have ready answers for the existence of such couples, but however these relationships began, acceptance is usually the key to their endurance. By promoting positive thinking and constructive approaches, lessening irritations and disabling the mechanisms that trigger upset, this relationship could work as a training ground to make its partners more whole and mature as individuals.

ADVICE: Life is a learning experience. Accept the inevitable. Take positive steps to improve the situation. Change your attitudes. Accept when possible.

THE CUSP OF BEAUTY
VIRGO-LIBRA CUSP

Taking Turns

Both of these partners have leadership qualities on which their relationship has a paradoxical effect. It may stimulate their heroicism, forcing them to try to work out a harmonious arrangement through which these drives can be recognized—by alternating the lead role on successive projects, for example. Power struggles would be the unwanted scenarios here. A more common problem, however, is the exact reverse: each partner is reluctant to take over command from the other. In this case the relationship is likely to drift until it gets an injection of willpower. These issues should be discussed and an effective plan worked out to forestall such indecision and breakdown. These two can achieve much if they apply their relationship to a worthy cause.

Cancer II–Virgo-Libra romantic relationships are quite rewarding. Virgo-Libras may find Cancer II's attractive and above all interesting, and Cancer II's will be flattered by their attention. Should these two engage in aesthetic pursuits together, Cancer II's will likely contribute a love of the bizarre and out-of-the-way to the couple's tastes, widening the horizons of more classically oriented Virgo-Libras. Often the relationship will open up a whole new world of beauty by acknowledging the aesthetic value of objects that both partners previously thought ugly or uninteresting.

Marriages in this combination will be a strain, since Virgo-Libras usually demand more social contact and Cancer II's less. Their contrasting attitudes can help Virgo-Libras to deepen their emotional self-awareness and Cancer II's the quality of their human interactions, but many compromises will have to be worked out along the way. Friendships will suffer from similar polarities, but again compromise is possible.

Siblings and co-workers in this combination will benefit from alternating the leadership role and promoting equality. All signs of permanent dominance and control on the part of either personality should be nipped in the bud, and a solution worked out to both partners' satisfaction.

ADVICE: Take turns assuming command. Avoid dictatorial attitudes. Promote equality. Give direction to avoid drift. Widen aesthetic horizons.

THE WEEK OF THE PERFECTIONIST
LIBRA I

A Gossamer Fabric

As long as these two respect each other's space and refrain from judging each other, they can reach new heights of ethereal, ecstatic or spiritual experience together. Sensitivity and acceptance are enhanced here, and both partners could find themselves fully appreciated. But Libra I's tend to appreciate the matchup only for what they can gain from it. They are not always fully aware of what they have here, and fail to realize that critical, demanding and condemning attitudes can easily rend this vulnerable relationship's gossamer fabric.

Love, marriage and friendship can all represent evolutionary stages in the development of this relationship, or, at the highest level of the matchup, may even be combined in one. High ideals and challenging ideologies appeal to this pair, who are often consciously engaged in self-actualizing experiences either together or separately. New-age techniques, workshops and reading may be of special interest here. The ideas gleaned from such activities can be put into practice in the kitchen, work areas and sleeping quarters. Care must be taken that new ideas do not become rigid dogma, inhibiting the healthful impulses they are meant to foster.

Family members in this combination, especially parent-child and sibling pairs, are likely to be oversensitive to each other, certainly empathic and perhaps even telepathic. They will repeatedly have to redraw ego boundaries between them to distinguish their individual wants and needs. Although closeness in a relationship is generally a plus, in this particular one the partners risk losing their own personalities, and drowning as individual selves. At work, Cancer II–Libra I colleagues and co-workers may be unable to sustain the objectivity they will need if they are to fulfill their obligations to the organization that has hired them. Great control must be exerted to prevent small frictions and irritations from getting out of hand. Cancer II–Libra I partners in all walks of life will benefit from their great sensitivity to each other only if they give this attunement a positive spin.

ADVICE: Be aware of benefits. Treat others with respect. Don't take anything for granted. Maintain boundaries. Strive for objectivity. Limit criticism.

THE WEEK OF SOCIETY
LIBRA II

A Respite from Society

The primary concern in this relationship is the degree to which it is ready to reveal itself to the outside world. The partners are preoccupied with how to relate more meaningfully, not only in social situations but to each other. At root here is a certain mistrust: in their own unique ways, each person has a pretty good understanding of human beings, and as a pair they don't much like exposing themselves to public scrutiny. In fact, they may not like other people much at all, viewing even the simplest invitation with suspicion. They really see their relationship as a retreat from the world.

In love and marriage, this couple's physicality is a heavy mixture of passion and sensuality, areas in which neither partner is entirely comfortable. The closer their relationship is to the platonic sphere of friendship, the more comfortable they may feel. Physical demands can easily be replaced here by more easygoing emotions and a happy-go-lucky feel. Since Cancer II and Libra II lie square to each other in the zodiac (90° apart), conventional astrology predicts a difficult matchup between them, but it is not beyond them to put these tensions to work in forwarding shared causes.

Companionships and undemanding acquaintanceships are perhaps the most realistic possibilities for these two. The social demands of these kinds of relationship will be easier for them to meet, and no blame or guilt need surface should they spend a long time apart. A more distant friendship will also be a safety valve when social demands elsewhere are heavy and the partners need an entertaining and nonjudgmental retreat from the world. In the family and at work, on the other hand, siblings and co-workers in this combination may find themselves forced together daily whether they like it or not, and they will often have to share the same living or work area. Conflicts will probably result, but may ultimately lead to an agreement on separation of duties, use of common space and even what topics are taboo. In this way the pair may be able to tolerate each other.

ADVICE: Lessen demands. Leave each other as free as possible. Do what you have to in order to lower stress. Find creative solutions. Live and let live.

An Outrageous Pose

Attuned to a common wavelength, these two make an excellent team in professional and social situations. Their relationship is able to change, chameleonlike and practically at will, assuming ever new shapes and orientations to fit its environment. Other people will be baffled at the ease with the relationship goes through these changes. In the end, too, they may despair over discovering the “real” Cancer II–Libra III pair behind the mask.

Spirit rather than matter is usually given the higher value in love affairs and marriages between these two. The partners will certainly enjoy food, sex and entertainment together well enough, but these appetites are usually stepping stones to more transcendental pursuits. This can be seen in their general refusal to be tied down or heavily dependent on any physical area—they prefer to stay free to explore and above all to play. Comedy, irony, satire and sarcasm come easily to this pair, who can be mercilessly and even destructively funny about individuals or couples who seem to them to have an inflexible or pretentious quality. Direct spiritual involvement is possible here, but a new-age orientation, featuring colorful, far-out and exciting activities, is more usual.

Friendships tend to the superficial but are great fun. These two will often strike an outrageous pose simply to push more conventional people’s buttons, a trick they can usually manage in uproarious fashion. Their humor may also operate more subtly, however, sometimes being appreciated only by the partners themselves.

Role-playing and freedom-loving, the Cancer II–Libra III relationship does not always endear itself to bosses (in the case of co-workers) or parents (in the case of siblings). At work, these two can arouse hostility over their refusal to take the job seriously; at home, the same kind of levity may manifest as an avoidance of daily chores that other family members will consider irresponsible. Although often appreciated, Cancer II’s and Libra III’s will have to struggle if they are to win the respect of others.

ADVICE: Take things a bit more seriously sometimes. By showing respect you gain respect from others. Dig a bit deeper. Consider stronger commitment.

Setting Up Schedules

This emotionally complex combination can produce a mix of pleasure and pain. If the relationship is to grow, a structure will have to be agreed upon enforcing objectivity, individual expression, suspension of judgmental attitudes and above all an analytical insight capable of detecting and fending off hurtful remarks. Sensitive Cancer II’s have a vulnerability to criticism that could allow them to be dominated by this partner: Libra-Scorpios pull no punches, and injured Cancer II feelings might become habitual. Cancer II’s, too, have a knack for ferreting out a person’s weak spot, and will use it when under attack. Both partners have a tendency to obsess, a habit that could become a dangerously pleasurable connection for them.

Love affairs here can go deep—so deep that there is a danger of a dependency on the relationship’s emotional highs and ecstatic sexual experiences. The demand for increasing intensity and frequency of these experiences could stretch both partners’ delicate nervous systems to the point of crash. Breakdowns induced by rejection, jealousy or fear of abandonment are ugly scenarios; schedules set up to moderate emotional contact can greatly reduce their likelihood. Such structures sometimes come more easily in marriage, which imposes a lot of objective daily routines that can have the effect of creating a sense of order and regulating feelings. The danger also exists, however, that a marriage will ultimately develop a rigid structure that will suppress deep feelings and heighten frustrations. In friendships, Libra-Scorpios will rarely reject Cancer II idiosyncrasies, making this unconventional partner feel appreciated. They may, on the other hand, be too free with their advice sometimes, which can have the effect of making Cancer II’s either keep their distance or else become overly dependent on Libra-Scorpios for direction. The built-in structure of most jobs often allows co-workers in this combination the objectivity needed for a successful relationship. In the family, however, Cancer II–Libra-Scorpio relatives may feel unable to fit into the existing group structure. If so, a common reaction is to subvert parental or other authority with openly rebellious attitudes.

ADVICE: Seek moderation. Provide a structure in which feelings can be expressed. Suspend judgments. Limit criticism. Promote individuality.

A Subterranean Plan

This relationship is likely to be highly secretive, virtually subterranean in its refusal to allow its goings-on to see the light of day. To carry through its covert plans without mishap, its partners must be dedicated, consistent and adept at deception. How unfortunate for the third party who is kept in the dark! Yet the thrill of an illicit or forbidden action is just too great to resist here. And hurting someone else is usually not part of the intention—in fact it is often either the Cancer II or the Scorpio I who suffers most in the end.

Love triangles are the classic scenarios here. Many subtle variations on this theme can play themselves out: usually the third party moves from being friends with both the Cancer II and the Scorpio I to being the lover of one and remaining a friend or becoming a rival to the other. In this case the relationship will center around the member of the triangle who is involved in two intimate relationships, often both sexual ones, at the same time.

Cancer II's and Scorpio I's can have happy marriages, but must beware of spending too much time alone together. Sharing friendships that do not carry the temptation or peril of ever new love triangles, but function simply and purely as friendships, will add stability. Both spouses tend to be good parents, providing their children with a good mix of nurture and inspiration, but they must take care that the child is not permitted to play one parent off against the other.

As friends or siblings, Cancer II–Scorpio I duos are good at keeping secrets and at concealing their true intentions from the watchful eyes of parents, teachers and other authority figures. Borderline or overtly illegal activities may exert a special attraction to them, and although money is often involved, it is primarily danger and power that supply the rush. Cancer II and Scorpio I can make excellent and financially successful business partners.

Getting Lost

This is a mysterious one—the Cancer II–Scorpio II relationship is hard to fathom. These personalities are trine to each other in the zodiac (120° apart), and astrology predicts an easygoing and pleasurable relationship between them. Their involvement goes far beyond simple pleasure, however, being enigmatic even to the partners themselves. A deep magnetic pull often draws these two together, and once their relationship is formed it may be difficult to modify or to break apart. Feelings intertwine subtly and compellingly to create bonds of loyalty but also of dependency. The partners often mirror and act out each other's feelings without being aware of the process. Egos can dissolve here, then, boundaries can blur and individuality can fade.

Love affairs tend to be passionate and binding. The partners may not realize it, but they have often staked a claim to one another, and with that claim have taken on a huge responsibility. The mysteries of sex, love and relationships in general unfold here like an enchanted panorama that has these lovers under its spell. Even when trying for an analytic objectivity that would explain the process and plumb the depths of the mystery, the partners pull back from the shock of recognition, falling instead into the unconscious stream of forgetfulness and abandon. Marriage may suggest a more objective orientation, but getting lost together remains a constant activity here. Friendships and family and working relationships have a similar magnetism, but often replace the total involvement of love and marriage in this combination with a healthier empathy. (An exception is parent-child relationships, which are highly claiming.) Friends, siblings and co-workers maintain a certain objectivity and individuality, while still being closely attuned to each other's feelings. There is more awareness here; the relationship's mystery is better understood and to an extent consciously explored. Years will be required for this to take place, but the wonder never completely fades, nor is the enigmatic nature of the relationship ever fully exhausted. To the end, long periods of quite ordinary daily interaction are dotted with magical moments, unforgettable in their charm and illumination.

ADVICE: Understanding isn't always possible. Love asks few questions and gives even fewer answers. Surrender is sometimes required.

Rapt Attention

The delicious charm of forgetfulness periodically sweeps over this pair, and in its wake follow vividly beautiful dreams and visions. The relationship has a poetic and deeply spiritual quality. Peaceful meditation plays an important role; Cancer II–Scorpio III partners are capable of a connection that will provide peace and rest to both. No matter how stressful, mundane or prosaic the day has been, these two can seek each other out and find themselves at once in their own wonderful space together. These feelings are difficult to share directly with others, but the relationship has an energy that can prove infectious and uplifting to those around it. It exerts such a pull on its partners that breaking free may be extremely difficult.

Love affairs proceed from the physical to the metaphysical, using the sexual act to transport partners to other worlds and higher planes of experience. Lovemaking is a kind of cosmic dance, evocative and high, a true merging of spirit. These partners can also go for long periods without physical contact, touching only with a look or a kind word. Usually none of this magic will be at all apparent to the public eye; the children of such a couple, whether born in or out of wedlock, may even look on their parents with some amusement as sillies, hippies or freaks. Rarely, however, will they doubt their parents' abiding love for each other.

Cancer II–Scorpio III work relationships are not especially recommended, since these two seldom show much desire to win out over others and to succeed in the rough-and-tumble of the commercial sector. Partnerships between friends in this combination, however, can be highly successful in evoking shared dreams and visions in such a way that they strike a responsive chord in other people; despite the pair's seeming lack of aggression, financial success is quite possible here. Siblings and friends are likely to spend many quiet hours together in rapt attention, attuned to each other's thoughts and feelings. Parent-child pairs too can have a quality of friendship, creating unusually close, trusting and understanding bonds.

Current Realities

This relationship is likely to emphasize factual truth and dealing with reality. Scorpio-Sagittarius realism is likely to ground Cancer II fantasy, giving it a base. It's not that Scorpio-Sagittarians have no imagination themselves, or that they don't appreciate the unique and highly individual approach of Cancer II's. But they know where their bread is buttered and rarely do anything to compromise their worldly position. Should they take an interest in a Cancer II, then, they may bring his or her vision far along the road of social acceptance and commercial success.

Romantic relationships between Scorpio-Sagittarians and Cancer II's should be kept quite separate from the pair's commercial dealings and career concerns. Both partners must feel that they are loved for who they are, not for their financial or professional value. Also, when Scorpio-Sagittarians get behind the career plans of Cancer II's as advisers or managers, their autocratic side is likely to emerge, and Cancer II's may feel as if they are being controlled by their powerful partner. Professional connections are less of a problem in marriage, and in fact may form an important basis for such a relationship. The trick is to keep the romantic spark alive, for should it dim, the Scorpio-Sagittarian is likely to be attracted elsewhere.

Scorpio-Sagittarians enjoy working with their friends, and may build a close and long-lived career connection with a Cancer II. If the two are in business together as equal partners, rather than working together on occasional projects, they must draw up firm legal agreements to forestall problems later on and to finalize what may be only vague intentions. A crucial point, and one on which the relationship can founder, will be the continued honesty and openness of friends in both their personal and their business dealings with each other.

In the family, and especially in parent-child combinations, the relationship emphasizes sticking literally to one's word. Both partners will hold the other to what they have said, and will generally resist later attempts to revise and compromise.

Naturally Playful

The central theme of this combination is often a search for natural attitudes and renewal. In fact, the relationship itself can be very uplifting to its partners—a place they go to recharge their batteries, and a kind of retreat or haven from the outside world. These two will feel very much at home in nature, taking walks, hiking, canoeing or camping. Sagittarius I's are likely to be protective of their Cancer II partners and to try to protect them against a hostile world; Cancer II's, meanwhile, are capable of putting Sagittarius I's back in touch with their childlike self and with their deeper world of feeling. There are simultaneous dangers here, then, of overprotectiveness and of living in an unrealistic dream world.

Cancer II–Sagittarius I love affairs can be tender and sympathetic. Affection is expressed easily here, and is often considered as important as sex. Warmth and understanding are usually more the norm in this relationship than wrenching emotion. Cancer II's can lead their excitable Sagittarius I partners to a deeper understanding of sensuality, and can in turn be introduced to new heights of passion. But although Sagittarius I's may appreciate the Cancer II brand of love for a while, they may eventually grow tired of it, feel trapped or controlled, and seek to escape.

Marriages and friendships value renewal, innovation and play. Entertainment, both personally invented and commercially provided, is thought to be an essential element of daily life for this pair. Avoiding boring or repetitive routines, Sagittarius I and Cancer II spouses and friends are drawn to vivid, exciting and fun experiences, both within the four walls of their home (or homes) and out in the world of clubs and restaurants. The emphasis is more often on domestic entertainment, though, with friends, family and children taking part.

Work relationships are perfectly satisfactory but tend to lack ambition and may fail to light the spark that leads to great success. In the family sphere, Cancer II–Sagittarius I siblings will compete for parental attention yet in other respects are mutually supportive.

ADVICE: Beware of being overprotective. Don't run from responsibility. Push yourself a bit to achieve more. "Childlike" should not mean "immature."

Normally Outrageous

These two very different types are likely to find a point of meeting or balance, albeit precarious, in the area of aesthetics: style, fashion, popular design or art. Whatever each one does individually, it is in their feelings, thoughts and concerns about beauty that their relationship will find its basis and common expression. Conventional astrology predicts some instability in this combination, due to its quincunx aspect (Cancer II and Sagittarius II lie 150° apart in the zodiac), and indeed it does have an unstable side; both these personalities are eccentric, a quality the relationship magnifies, generating a very idiosyncratic tone. Nevertheless, these two are quite capable of achieving harmony through their shared loves.

Love affairs between these two are one of a kind. Unique all over, they take their cue from their partners' more bizarre characteristics, and may shock the sensibilities of friends and family. This relationship promotes the outrageous to the category of a normal daily event. The partners themselves probably consider what they are doing quite natural, and may be amazed at the consternation they cause. A desire to hurt, or to shock for the sake of it, is rarely their motivating factor. Marriages, too, generally favor unusual tastes in domestic decor, dress and lifestyle in general. Visitors may find the Cancer II–Sagittarius II home scene offbeat and eclectic, but will often admit that within a welter of jarring styles there is a strange kind of beauty and harmony. This decor can be taken as symbolic of the relationship itself.

As friends, Cancer II's and Sagittarius II's share interests and often bizarre tastes, which they sometimes take pleasure in flaunting. Siblings in this combination are likewise often more than a conservative family setting can handle; in this kind of relationship there is no guarantee that the pair will get along at all, so that parents and other relatives often have to cope not just with a strange relationship but with two distinct "weirdos." Two such co-workers may similarly be more than most work situations will comfortably tolerate.

ADVICE: Don't compromise your tastes, but be aware of other people. Why create more difficulties than necessary? Don't just react against the norm.

A Parent to Truculence

This combination has a tremendous energy, which, like that of the growing child, is difficult to contain and sensibly guide. The relationship will usually stand or fall with its ability to parent its often recalcitrant and truculent partners, and to provide the wisdom, security and direction that they so desperately require. In their imaginative scope and vision, Cancer II's can be a good match for Sagittarius III's. This also means, however, that these two can support and egg each other on in plans that pass the point of practicality. Dashed hopes may be the result. The strain this puts on the relationship is often more than it can handle, and wise partners will learn to back off and bring their ideas back down to earth.

Hidden love affairs here will not remain secret for long—as a rule, their energies will spill over into other areas of life. These hot streams of emotional lava are likely to leave devastation in their trail, not only for the Cancer II–Sagittarius III couple but for family, friends and spouses as well. Marriages are not particularly recommended here, unless the relationship can succeed in establishing guidelines, principles or structures that will forestall emotional eruptions and guarantee children the security they need. Breakups here can be particularly bitter and hurtful.

These two often combine friendship and work. They are capable of generating and implementing powerful ideas, but should make use of financial managers or consultants to guarantee their economic stability. The success of their endeavors will ultimately depend on their ability to remain objective and keep themselves from overreacting to each other on a personal level. Should their business plans fall apart, an incredible effort will usually be required of both Cancer II's and Sagittarius III's to put the pieces of their friendship back together and continue as before. Family matchups, especially parent-child, feature frequent confrontations and differences of opinion. These pairs should try to find a common ground, perhaps in a shared social or intellectual interest or a shared pleasure in sports.

THE CUSP OF PROPHECY

Great Expectations

Neither partner in this relationship is much interested in the superficial level of life. Both value digging deeper and finding greater meaning, even if this involves suffering. The relationship's strong perfectionist tendency makes great demands on its partners. Mistakes are not easily explained away, nor are excuses readily accepted. This severity can create tension and in fact can make effective action more difficult, since neither partner does well when uptight. Learning to relax and accept life as it comes will be an important lesson for these two to learn.

In love affairs these partners can have difficulty living up to their own high expectations. Active Cancer II imagination and deep Sagittarius-Capricorn feelings make a potent mix, but one that is difficult to understand clearly, and is therefore somewhat unrealistic. Both partners could build up a false picture of what their relationship is really about, perhaps seeing it as a solution to all their personal problems. Using the relationship as an escape usually only makes things more difficult and can lead to an unhealthy situation. Marriages, too, may be based on false premises, and on an assumption of a kind of perfection that can never be realized in actuality.

Although Cancer is a water sign and Sagittarius-Capricorn a mixture of fire and earth, this relationship is ruled by air, associated with thought. In friendships and family matchups this can signify worry, excessive rumination and ultimately living too much in one's own head. It will be important for these friends and relatives to find physical outlets for their energies, whether in sports, exercise or play.

Working relationships benefit but also suffer from perfectionist drives. Stress thresholds will have to be established and not exceeded if breakdowns are to be avoided. It should be possible to keep quality at an acceptable and in fact high level without the partners getting stressed out.

Starring Together

This pairing can be quite unequal, sometimes resembling a contentious parent-child relationship with the Capricorn I the parent. Part of the problem is that the matchup is distinctly success-oriented, with each partner wanting the other to be a star—which only makes them the more critical of each other. Capricorn I's are likely to be condescending toward Cancer II's, who, after a period of enjoying being taken care of by their partner, will ultimately rebel against this disempowerment. The situation is sometimes complicated by the fact that Capricorn I's can project thwarted ambitions on their Cancer II mates or children and can push them to overachieve in a field for which they may not be suited. In the short term these struggles may prove debilitating to the partners' self-esteem. In the long run, however, they can work positively, making Cancer II's more self-confident. And if the Cancer I truly earns this partner's respect, the Capricorn I will in turn be forced to be more accepting and less controlling.

Love and marriage here can certainly involve power struggles, with Capricorn I's fighting for control, Cancer II's for integrity and individuality. Fortunately, the relationship is usually quite private, and its seclusion from other people saves its partners some of the embarrassment their arguments might cause them in public. Their freedom to work things out on their own helps make it possible for the couple to gain in power and stature. Quite often these relationships improve over time, particularly in terms of increased understanding.

Although Cancer is a water sign and Capricorn earth, the Cancer II–Capricorn I relationship is ruled by fire, associated with intuition. Friends and family members in this combination do best when they trust their hunches and first impressions, and worst when they chew things over unnecessarily or get emotional about them. Equality can more often be reached in friendships and sibling matchups than in love affairs and marriages. Should they work together, such family members and friends can star in projects where Capricorn I practical and financial abilities coalesce with Cancer II imagination and flair.

ADVICE: Trust your intuition. Be aware of dominating attitudes. Neither submission nor rebellion is the answer. Promote respect.

Expressing Solidarity

Social success is important in this relationship. Although relating to others is problematic for these two as individuals, together their strengths coalesce, and they become much more adept at interacting with the world. Eventually, in fact, they may be much sought after by others. Cancer II's and Capricorn II's often begin on the outside of a social or family group, and show little interest in a closer bond with it. Over time, however, a hunger for social contact asserts itself, and the couple may well find themselves hoping to play an important part or even to assume the leadership role. This desire usually has a consolidating effect on their relationship.

Cancer II and Capricorn II lie opposite each other in the zodiac. Conventional astrology accordingly predicts conflicts and difficulties between them, and in love affairs this may indeed be true. In this kind of relationship they have a tendency to isolate themselves, which can lead them astray, for it is precisely when cut off from contact with family and friends that insoluble problems can arise between them. Cancer II's are creatures of feeling, and need a good deal of emotional interaction and support; Capricorn II's are tougher, and have less need for other people's approval. It is easy, then, for Cancer II's to feel ignored and Capricorn II's somewhat besieged by each other.

Marriage can work, presuming the attraction is there and the circumstances propitious. Having children and building family ties usually have healthy effects on the relationship and give both partners a chance to express their service-oriented side. Care must be taken, however, that the partners get to spend enough quality time with each other. Friendships and family matchups can benefit from increased social contact. Parent-child and sibling pairs who work as a team, in club activities, say, or at family gatherings, will express solidarity and also acquire a reputation for being able to be counted on in times of need. Cancer II–Capricorn II work relationships, especially as colleagues and co-workers, are likely to be strained on the personal level.

ADVICE: Give others a chance. Bridge the gaps with those around you. Take part in celebrations. Offer a helping hand, but leave time for yourself.

Eccentric Side

This relationship is likely to be extroverted, unserious and involved in the lighter aspects of life. A love of theater, film, dance and sports is characteristic here, and the partners themselves have a flair for the theatrical. They need not strike this pose professionally—it can emerge within a social or family group, or with mutual friends. Solid Capricorn III's do have an eccentric side, which melds well with the sometimes bizarre tastes of Cancer II's, lending more than a bit of quirkiness to this combination.

After a day of hard work, Capricorn III's look forward to being with their Cancer II friends and lovers to relax and have fun. Beyond that, moreover, their relationship can open up a whole new life for both partners, allowing them to express their most outrageous and uninhibited impulses. Capricorn III responsibility often gets them labeled conservative or stick-in-the-mud. Getting tired of this, they might welcome a relationship with a Cancer II, in which they can show just how vivacious they can be. Love affairs here can be exciting and colorful. Should they evolve into marriage, Capricorn III steadfastness and Cancer II domestic instincts can be a strongly grounding influence.

These partners can liven up the workplace considerably, but must be careful not to let things get out of hand. The Capricorn III is usually the anchor that pulls the relationship back to reality, assuring that deadlines be met and the job gets done. In the family, parent-child interactions in this combination can be quite emotional—but their expressions of feeling are sometimes put on for effect, with theater taking the place of real emotion. Relatives will eventually tire of such displays and demand a more serious and less distracting approach to daily activities.

ADVICE: Be aware of your effects on others. Don't lose track of where you are. Keep a few more things to yourself. Repeated effects get old.

THE CUSP OF MYSTERY & IMAGINATION
CAPRICORN-AQUARIUS CUSP

Trailblazing Stance

This relationship is likely to play a stimulating and directing role in any group or organization, often assuming a trailblazing stance. Part of this pair's power is a unique view of their fellow humans and what motivates them. Their faith in people, and their ability to inspire them, can be truly potent forces.

Although Cancer is a water sign and Capricorn-Aquarius a mix of earth and air, their relationship is fire-ruled, suggesting in this case an active and initiating tendency. Cancer II's can be stimulated to greater activity here, while Capricorn-Aquarians are provided with a positive outlet for their considerable energies. Both partners have active imaginations and must be careful to keep their fantasy from running away with them. Cultivating practical attitudes to money, and particularly to financial planning and cash flow, are vital to their success. Work relationships of the entrepreneurial or executive sort are favored between them, and friends or family members can well go into business together.

Love affairs between these two are fiery and tend to be unstable. Cancer II's have a need for security that is seldom met in this combination, and if the affair is illicit or secret, they may feel taken advantage of or used. Generally the more faithful and steadfast of these two, they are likely to be the ones who suffer most. Power struggles are rare in this pair's romances, which only means that Capricorn-Aquarians usually take the dominant role. Should the couple marry, Capricorn-Aquarians may have a tendency to stray; since Cancer II's are unlikely to tolerate such behavior, wedlock is not particularly favored here.

Cancer II–Capricorn-Aquarius parent-child matchups are generally more propitious when Cancer II's are the parents. They have nurturing qualities that are especially well-suited to the active Capricorn-Aquarian child. Capricorn-Aquarians provide exciting role models for Cancer II children, but often lack the patience and time to give them the emotional input and understanding they require.

ADVICE: Direct your energy well. Others depend on you. Don't get carried away by ego concerns. Scale back your ambition. Emulate sound financial models.

A Lust for Learning

Since this relationship places such a premium on intelligence, its focus is likely to be education, which can become a passion for both partners but especially for Cancer II's who feel they have some catching up to do. The more emotional of these partners, Cancer II's are likely to admire mentally gifted Aquarius I's almost to the point of worship. Paradoxically, their Aquarius I mates may not encourage them toward formal schooling, since their mental gifts are often innate, or sharpened on the whetstone of experience. Be that as it may, Cancer II's often choose higher education as the means to satisfy their lust for learning.

Cancer II–Aquarius I love affairs are perhaps surprisingly passionate given the emphasis the relationship puts on brain power. But sex, too, is a nice subject for these two to ponder, although in this area they are likely to put aside their classwork in favor of hands-on research. Later on, when the temperature has cooled down, they are likely to be able to discuss these studies quite openly, and to offer objective and constructive criticism.

The problem about marriage in this combination is usually the ambivalence of Aquarius I's toward such a permanent relationship. On the one hand they enjoy the safety, security and comfort that Cancer II's can offer in a domestic setting. On the other hand they fly from it, straining to be free. Unfortunately they often try to have their cake and eat it too. Cancer II's may find themselves spending some lonely nights until they finally put their foot down, which they are quite capable of doing.

Cancer II's and Aquarius I's may meet and become friends through adult-education classes, advanced university courses or some kind of workshop. These friendships satisfy their love of learning and usually far outlast their actual school time together. In this case, learning does not stop when school is over, but continues to deepen and grow as life itself is acknowledged as the schoolmaster. Cancer II–Aquarius I work and family relationships are also likely to be looked on as learning experiences, especially in retrospect.

ADVICE: Turn off your brain occasionally. University degrees don't guarantee intelligence. Dig deeper in the emotional realm. Try to be less critical.

THE WEEK OF YOUTH & EASE
AQUARIUS II

Alluring Quicksand

This relationship seems easygoing but conceals a tremendous thirst for power. Hidden beneath an amiable exterior is a core that no one who mistakes these two for an easy touch will quickly forget.

Although Cancer is a water sign and Aquarius air, their relationship is ruled by earth and fire, here connoting smoldering desire and ambition. These volcanic seethings may cause tremendous frustration if not vented, but Cancer II–Aquarius II couples often have the patience and foresight to wait until they are called.

Part of this pair's power lies in their popularity. Lovers, friends and mates in this combination may be in high demand in their social circle. Their charisma, often of the charming and light variety, is a kind of hook with which they can snag the hearts of their admirers. The process need not be at all unpleasant, and in fact a good time is often had by all in the long run. The seductive power of the relationship itself is recognized and increasingly appreciated. Yet surprisingly little is usually known about the individuals themselves in the relationship, their dynamics, how they interact.

Siblings with this matchup are less likely to interact with others as a team than to play power games with each other. These activities are often more amusing than serious, and rarely cause harm. Parent-child relationships, however, can be quite damaging to both partners if they pursue the art of deception with real conviction.

Work relationships between these two can be ambitious, even ruthless. Cancer II–Aquarius II business partners will use every trick in the book to overcome their opponents. Those who attack them frontally often wind up charging futilely at thin air, dissolved by what seems to be good will. The easy come-on or inviting welcome may lure unwary adversaries into quicksand from which they may not easily emerge.

ADVICE: You can't get away with it forever—or can you? You may become the victim of your own success. Cultivate simple human values. Be honest.

THE WEEK OF ACCEPTANCE

The Whole Package

This relationship combines an intensity of emotion with highly critical and rejecting attitudes. Neither partner should expect an easy time here. Cancer II's are easily fascinated by the more unusual or even bizarre aspects of Aquarius III's, and may be magnetically drawn to them. Problems arise when Aquarius III's are less than responsive, or perhaps impulsively respond, then just as quickly turn off. Cancer II's must be subtle in their approach to Aquarius III's, who will not be held down, and may be gone at the first signs of claiming attitudes.

Love affairs here are complex and difficult. True, Aquarius III's have a tremendous need for love, and should they find a Cancer II attractive they will be gratified by his or her attention. But Cancer II obsessiveness can drive Aquarius III's crazy, pushing all of their buttons. Even when things are going well, Aquarius III's tend to be irritated by little things about Cancer II's. If the relationship is to work, they will obviously have to learn to accept the whole package—they can't imagine they have the luxury just to choose the bits of the Cancer II personality they like. Marriage can be attempted here, but it will often magnify these problems, with constant bickering, missed communication and frustration as the results. Friendships between these two are usually built around shared and somewhat unusual activities. Furthermore, the partners don't approach their interests with moderation but with a certain extremity and intensity of emotion. Here, however, the mutual criticism that appears in other kinds of relationships in this combination is muted. A more relaxed attitude prevails, and friends are likely to find their relationship highly rewarding and pleasurable.

Parent-child relationships are usually stormy, featuring judgmental and often rejecting attitudes on both sides. Aquarius III parents may lack patience in dealing with their Cancer II children, and Cancer II parents can exert possessive and intrusive holds on Aquarius III progeny. At work, boss-employee relationships can have some of the same problems, but as co-workers these two are often able to reach an understanding.

ADVICE: Soften your critical stance. Suspend judgments. Take things as they come. Don't let your buttons be pushed. Lessen possessiveness.

AQUARIUS-PISCES CUSP

A Miracle of Manifestation

These two may approach their relationship a bit like two lost souls who have had some disappointing experiences on the road of life, or just haven't yet met the right person. Their matchup is truly grounding, and the miracle of its manifestation may come as a tremendous relief and a source of joy to both of them. Crucial here is the element of trust, for the past may have taught both of these partners that other people should be kept at least at arm's length and not allowed inside their guard. Just being able to lower their defenses a bit, and to be relaxed with another person, can be a tremendous reward.

Once established, love affairs, marriages and friendships in this combination will usually grow steadily deeper and more dependable. Dangers of course exist: first, that the relationship will close itself off, making little if any contact with other people, and second, that if one of the partners passes away, the other will be left isolated, in despair. As to the first point, Cancer II's and Aquarius-Pisces must look on their meeting as a stepping stone to establishing trust with others, both individually and as a pair. Second, even if one partner is lost, the other will have wonderful memories and, after a period of grieving, will ideally begin again.

Work relationships, whether as business partners or as boss-employee or co-worker pairs, will do best setting up specific long-range projects and objectives and striving to implement them. Financial and organizational responsibilities will further ground this relationship. At home, siblings will benefit from being allowed to assume responsibility both for themselves and for the family; if coddled or spoiled by their parents, they may not form solid bonds with each other. Likewise, parents and children in this combination should make concrete demands on each other and meet them, establishing greater trust.

ADVICE: Establish trust at a deep level. Build bridges to the world. Open your heart. Be demanding. Stick up for yourself. Give-and-take matters.

THE WEEK OF SPIRIT
PISCES I

Loyalty to Ideas

This relationship can be a deep and absorbing one. Its energy is serious and its orientation philosophical, religious or even spiritual. This by no means implies an intellectualism here, but rather an orientation based on belief or faith. Cancer II's and Pisces I's are normally quite private people, and their relationship synergistically expands on this tendency, sometimes producing extremes of secretiveness. Most attempts to pry these two out of their shell will be met with resistance—they may just prefer spending time alone, either separately or together.

Love affairs are often more sexually than romantically oriented. Feelings are often kept inside in such matchups, rather than being expressed. If arguments and disputes are unusual, this is because the mood here can be a quiet one in which much is left unsaid. Communication often takes place on a nonverbal level—these partners usually know instantly how the other is feeling. But they should take care not to hammer down and repress their frustrations; they will need to create an atmosphere in which they can express criticism and disapproval without fear of upset or rejection.

Cancer II–Pisces I marriages are likely to be built around an ideology or outlook that becomes the basis of family life. The relationship will show great loyalty to such ideas, but must beware of becoming rigid about them. An emphasis is often put on spiritual matters, to the point where material goods and wealth may be seen as relatively unimportant. Such attitudes are not always easy for children of these parents to accept.

Friends and siblings in this combination are often passionately devoted to a lifestyle that involves wearing certain clothes, listening to certain music and associating with certain people. These couples may ultimately have to make a choice between the tastes of their own relationship and those of the social subculture to which they belong. At work, boss-employee and co-worker pairings often don't go so well.

ADVICE: Don't get overly attached to your beliefs. Be somewhat skeptical from time to time. What do you have to hide? Try to be more open.

CANCER II

March 3–10

THE WEEK OF THE LONER
PISCES II

Mining Gold

This combination is likely to emphasize what the partners can learn from it—the relationship itself becomes a teacher with much to impart. Since Cancer and Pisces lie trine to each other in the zodiac (120° apart), traditional astrology predicts an easy and enjoyable matchup here, and indeed these two water signs usually get along famously; in the case of Cancer II's and Pisces II's, however, a search for meaning becomes dominant, although this does not prevent the two from having fun. The objective lessons to be learned here are many, and include the skills of understanding others and acquiring conscious awareness, spiritual understanding, and patience and fortitude in the face of adversity.

In love affairs, Cancer II–Pisces II couples explore the realms of feeling and mine the gold in its subterranean depths. Insights, awareness and empathy are just a few of the valuables uncovered here, but the process is not without risks and effort; resentment, jealousy and a whole host of negative emotions are often encountered as well. Still, the partners are determined to do more than just enjoy themselves in their love, and generally persevere in their search for truth.

In marriages and friendships in this combination, the partners function as a unit to probe the mysteries of relating to others. Because of their serious psychological interests and emotional expertise, they are often sought out by family and friends in times of need, both personal and social. The children of such a matchup will generally find their parents sympathetic, understanding and capable of offering important advice.

Parent-child relationships in this combination may get a bit too close and exclusive, so that others in the family feel shut out or jealous. These pairs must try to share their good feelings with others and to light up the space around them. Working relationships between Cancer II's and Pisces II's may get a bit too relaxed, and will demand more effort and willpower if the job is to get done well and on time.

ADVICE: Don't get lost in your search. Remember to have fun. Strengthen your resolve but beware of monomania. Share your insights with others.

THE WEEK OF DANCERS & DREAMERS
PISCES III

Succumbing to Pleasure

This relationship carries the danger of the unbridled pursuit of pleasure. It can easily be addictive, with the partners unable to get enough of each other or of the activities they pursue together in the world. Part of the problem is that the relationship goes so deep it has difficulty extricating itself. This high degree of attachment to a person, activity or substance may first be seen as merely habituating or obsessive and only later as outright addictive. Conscious awareness usually offers the only hope for stopping this process, but the partners too often ignore any telltale signs, or blind themselves to what is going on.

Sex and love addictions are not at all uncommon here; this couple's love affairs and marriages usually show at least some trace of such tendencies. Warnings are in order from the outset, then. Addictions may particularly be prompted by Cancer II low self-esteem or lack of confidence and by the Pisces III need to be important to the point of being idolized. The latter trait is especially dangerous, in that Pisces III's sometimes encourage other people to be overly dependent on them. Although sex is often highly rewarding between these two, it can become obsessive and claiming, and can stand directly in the way of a realistic and healthy approach to life.

Friendships are often magnetic and long-lasting, but here too there is a danger of shared drug use, whether the drugs are alcohol, tobacco or mind-expanding or pleasurable controlled substances. When friends and family confront such a couple with the truth, they often respond with denial. Although enjoyable, such friendships risk being exercises in self-deception, with the partners too readily succumbing to the lure of pleasure and good feelings. Work relationships can sometimes be workaholic and sometimes, alternatively, can be adversely affected by emotional or chemical dependencies. The pair may lack the willpower to get on track. In the family, emotional dependencies in parent-child relationships can lead to a stunting of psychological development and spiritual growth.

ADVICE: Open your eyes to the truth. Beware of self-deception. Listen to the observations of others. Don't promote dependencies. Stay objective.

Calling a Truce

The world will notice this powerful combination even when the partners aren't working to bring themselves to its attention. Aware that people are aware of them, however, they may subtly manipulate public perceptions of them, perhaps by making only very slight changes in dress, body language or presentation. Usually through a tacit agreement, these two will ensure that the world sees them as they want to be seen. Within the relationship, they usually trust and can be themselves with each other; but Cancer III's are quite comfortable being alone, and are unlikely to be forced into a pairing they think will be counterproductive. They may choose not to get involved with another Cancer III or, in fact, with anyone else at all.

Love affairs between two Cancer III's are more subject to power struggles than other relationships in this combination. Cancer III's are passionate people, and their insecurities can fly around like white-hot sparks. Both partners are likely to withdraw periodically when they find their emotional confrontations too threatening, leaving a deadly quiet battlefield. Marriages, on the other hand, can be highly successful and productive, with these spouses accomplishing much for their mutual good. An incredibly high level of capability can appear here, as well as a strong, loyal desire to stick together through thick and thin. Children of this matchup, however, are likely to be completely dominated by their parents. The worst part may be trying to find an alternative to one parent's point of view by appealing to another whose ideas turn out to be exactly the same.

These two do very well as friends or as co-workers in a professional setting. Here their emotions can be kept under control (with short, sharp and snappy lapses). When they funnel their energy into a commercial endeavor, few can withstand their momentum—once they get moving, they are like the waves of the mighty ocean or the irresistible pull of a river's current.

Family matchups can be true disasters, especially in the case of mother-daughter or father-son combinations.

Shoulder to Shoulder

Cancer III's and Cancer-Leos often heighten each other's practical abilities and are most effective when a job needs getting done. Their relationship is characterized, then, by responsibility and the shouldering of heavy duties. These partners may not be well suited to each other temperamentally, but their relationship patches up many of their personal differences, and generally melds their energies. As far as the world is concerned, the spotlight is often on the objectives and accomplishments of the duo itself, rather than on the individuals. Initial power struggles may well be smoothed over as the partners come to an agreement for purposes of unity, allowing the relationship to bring them both to a higher level of performance or expertise. Despite their practical orientation, these two can often be found dabbling in the indefinable and the mysterious.

Love affairs in this combination don't usually click—here Cancer III's and Cancer-Leos can be as incompatible as oil and water. Emotionally they may find each other a bit threatening, and will prefer to back off. But they can be very successful striving shoulder to shoulder together in a marriage (assuming they have some degree of physical attraction). Problems are bound to surface over dominance, but Cancer III's are often capable of diplomatically giving ground and establishing themselves as the power behind the Cancer-Leo throne.

Cancer III–Cancer-Leo friendships generally don't go very deep, and family relationships can manifest serious power struggles. Work relationships are perhaps most natural for these two: it is quite possible for former rivals, competitors or antagonists to get together in a new situation, smooth over differences and form an effective team. The key to this combination is the relationship's melding of Cancer III financial, managerial and theoretical expertise with Cancer-Leo leadership and team abilities, in particular the ability to delegate authority. What ultimately makes the relationship workable is the emotional understanding the partners have for each other. Honesty is an unwritten law between them; this frankness may ruffle feathers from time to time, but it rarely causes open conflict.

ADVICE: Create plenty of space between you. Minimize power struggles. Realize what is in your best interest. Deepen understanding. Let your hair down occasionally.

THE WEEK OF AUTHORITY
LEO I

Mutual Adjustment

This relationship is an ever-changing one that demands constant small adjustments. Yet because both partners are comfortable in this combination, these adaptations do not feel difficult, and they also provide opportunities for growth, calling on both personalities to evaluate their priorities and to make accommodations. The relationship often asks flexible Cancer III's to adjust to the fixed positions of Leo I's. By winning the respect and perhaps ultimately the love of this partner, Cancer III's can actually end up a powerfully controlling force in the relationship; it is simply that, ruled by the moon, they show many faces here, while sun-ruled Leo I's are fixed and blazing. Leo I's have little respect for those who don't stand up to them, so Cancer III's must know when to stand fast and when to give ground.

Love affairs emphasize give-and-take and flexibility. Leo I's will have to learn to bend a bit, but as they become more flexible they may begin to exhibit their more empathic side, coming to resemble their partner a little. Although Cancer III's are diplomatic, they are not about to knuckle under to their mates, and explosive scenes are possible here from time to time, even while the relationship usually keeps individual emotions well under control. Generally speaking, neither Cancer III's nor Leo I's have much need for marriage—which means that if they do decide to tie the knot, it will be because they have a genuine and conscious desire to do so.

Friendships here are apt to be more about help and support than about warmth and love. Trusting their Cancer III friends more than their colleagues, for example, Leo I's are likely to turn to them for financial advice, valuing it for its perspicacity and shrewdness. In the family, Leo I parents are usually adored by their Cancer III children, but are prone to spoiling them. A professional Cancer III–Leo I relationship can be problematic, whether it be boss-employee or co-worker. Power struggles here can cause chaotic fluctuations in the workplace.

ADVICE: Be open to advice and influence. Maintain flexibility. Keep criticism positive. Beware of power struggles. Surrender the desire for control.

Practical Intelligence

The strengths of this relationship are active mental activity and a love of games and play. These partners are able to relax together and have fun, but can equally well apply themselves, and the clarity of thought that their relationship engenders, to any job at hand with good results. Although Cancer is a water sign and Leo fire, this relationship is ruled by air and earth, in this case signifying practical intelligence. Critical attitudes here are generally of the positive sort and will assure that the relationship's activities are pursued at the highest level possible.

Cancer III–Leo II love affairs are sensuous but rarely reach the wanton heights of abandon. These partners are always a bit wary of each other emotionally, and at times are suspicious of each other's motives. The relationship is rarely completely trusting. The partners may have difficulty committing themselves wholeheartedly to each other, and lengthy engagements may delay any plan to marry. Their doubts about carrying through, however, are often realistic, preventing later disappointments and catastrophes.

Friends in this combination usually enjoy board and video games, puzzles and all sorts of mysteries needing solutions. They may particularly enjoy mock-detective scenarios, playing out, say, Sherlock Holmes–and–Dr. Watson scripts. They will also take great pleasure in gossiping about the activities of others, to the point where their family and friends may see this pair as nosy or meddling, and will want to be left out of their investigations. Family matchups between siblings bring out the more extreme and antagonistic elements of both partners, leaving little room for cooperation and mutual achievement. Competition for parental affection is often highlighted here. Other family combinations, however, are generally more positive and fun. Boss–employee relationships in this combination usually function poorly, but co–worker matchups are often stimulating and productive. In certain cases, Cancer III–Leo II rivalries push both opponents to the limit. When they are working on the same team, Leo II's should think about leaving Cancer III's alone rather than pushing or ordering them around.

ADVICE: Tone down competitive urges. Learn to be more cooperative. Others may not appreciate your interest. Switch some energy from head to heart.

THE WEEK OF LEADERSHIP
LEO III

On Whose Terms?

Whether consciously or unconsciously, this relationship makes its partners craft a set of rules for themselves. The likely questions are, Who will impose ideas and who will follow them? Though these two generally get along well, and have a lot of respect for each other, they have very different ideas as to what a relationship should be all about. Thus the focus here is the issue of what shared ideology will work for them. Power struggles need not emerge between these powerful individuals, since Cancer III's can readily accept the Leo III need to lead (but not to dominate or rule). As long as a shared outlook can be found, the relationship will probably be peaceful and agreeable.

Cancer III–Leo III love affairs can be sexually passionate but also combative and aggressive, both in and out of the bedroom. Cancer III's are every bit as strong emotionally and psychologically as Leo III's, and may frown on this partner's outbursts and volcanic explosions, preferring subtler forms of communication—communication on their own terms. Because Leo III egos need so much stroking, the devastating observations of which Cancer III's are capable will often be enough to lay low the powerful Lion; withholding approval will do it, too. Marriages can work here, but Leo III's will have to toe the mark in domestic matters and will be told what needs doing in no uncertain terms.

In parent–child relationships, Cancer III's generally function better in the parental role; they are severe with their Leo III offspring while also being protective and loving. Boss–employee relationships, on the other hand, often do better with Leo III's giving the orders. In both of these situations, domestic and professional, authority must generally be unquestioned and mutually agreed upon for things to work out. In friendships, however, authority is seldom a big issue, and the partners might adopt a rather free–and–easy attitude toward each other. Serious problems can arise, however, when friends are attracted to the same love object.

ADVICE: Learn to compromise without resentment. Swallow your pride occasionally. Work for the common cause. Be more considerate.

THE CUSP OF EXPOSURE
LEO-VIRGO CUSP

Uncorking the Bottle

The relaxed approach found in this combination lets the partners feel free to come and go at will, joining each other in moments of pleasure and play. Separately they both tend to set high standards, but although that emphasis carries through to their relationship, overall attitudes here are more relaxed. This ability to ease up a little without sacrificing quality is a benefit to these personalities, who both tend to be a bit intense. Moreover, they both have a very private side, which their relationship synergistically magnifies into a passion for having a space on which few if any others can intrude. Past experiences give Cancer III's and Leo-Virgos a certain sensitivity, and both are wary in relationships. In each other, however, they find someone they can trust. Instinctively accepted by Cancer III's, Leo-Virgos will feel comfortable opening up and revealing themselves. Their own discrimination, meanwhile, will allow them to view Cancer III's more objectively than most, and thus to provide the recognition these personalities crave.

Love affairs between these two are likely to suffer from an overemphasis on conscious mental activity. This can ultimately have a debilitating effect on spontaneous instinctual and emotional expression. Marriages and working relationships can work smoothly enough as long as neither partner is asked to bear more than his or her share of responsibility. Both partners here will grant their relationship itself the highest importance. Their self-confident kind of respect for each other makes it unnecessary for them to push or meddle. "If it works, don't fix it" is the motto of these marriages and affairs—when things are going well. Should stresses and emergencies arise, however, the relationship's mettle will truly be tested: insecurity, doubt and fear can easily become overwhelming, threatening to cause a kind of collapse. Thoughtfulness and patience may be lifesavers, coupled with the control that will forestall reacting too hastily.

Friendships and sibling matchups can be truly fun. An innocent, childlike and naive approach to life can be given full play here without fear of censure.

ADVICE: Cultivate patience and let the truth come to you. Make firm plans once in a while. Relax privacy issues.

THE WEEK OF SYSTEM BUILDERS
VIRGO I

Nondescript Camouflage

This relationship can be a highly dependable one that nurtures mutual support, balance and harmony. Opposing forces come together here to create stability and an emphasis on honor, dignity and faithfulness. Both Cancer III's and Virgo I's are direct in their approach, and they are apt to communicate very easily with each other. Cancer III drive will also complement the Virgo I ability to systematize tasks, so that these two will do very well in realizing their goals.

Friendships and love affairs may be quiet and private, attracting little attention. It is quite possible for covert or illicit Cancer III–Virgo I affairs to continue for years, causing pleasure and pain alternately, but never either enough pain to break it off or enough pleasure to entice the partners into a permanent arrangement or marriage. It is not passion or desire that holds these lovers together but a kind of inertia, or even apathy.

Should they find themselves in a relationship built on strong commitment, however, such as marriages and work partnerships, Cancer III's and Virgo I's can make an impressive team. Temperamentally alike in many ways, they understand and accept each other. If they come from similar geographic or ethnic backgrounds, they may create a relationship that is monolithic in its outlook and more like both partners archetypically than even they themselves are as personality types. A kind of camouflage of nondescriptness hides this relationship from the world. Its character is quite recognizable to family and friends, but even when pushed, the partners themselves might be completely at a loss to describe it. Practical responsibilities are steadily and easily discharged here, and Cancer III–Virgo I business partners or parents will prove extremely reassuring to employees, co-workers or children. Both are strong in the area of financial acumen.

Parent-child combinations must overcome claiming and overprotective attitudes. They certainly lend stability to a family, but also an undeniable rigidity, as in a buttressed fortress that is not easily sapped or sacked. Here as elsewhere, structure has both advantages and disadvantages.

ADVICE: Stability isn't always the best thing. Don't be afraid of change or of development. Taking a leap is sometimes necessary. Dare to fail.

THE WEEK OF THE ENIGMA
VIRGO II

Choice Rather Than Need

This relationship carries with it an unusual level of understanding. These two are generally quite comfortable with each other—Virgo II's surprisingly willing to open up, here more than elsewhere, and Cancer III's charmed by their easy manner. But the real question is whether the acceptance here is wholehearted or only conditional. Virgo II's can be quite flattered by the interest of Cancer III's, and will not object to this partner's aggressive approach, since they are confident of their ability to reject intrusions at any point. For all their panache, however, they are highly private individuals who are by no means crying out to be understood. They often want no more than to be left alone.

Love affairs between these two can be intense, but are not particularly sharing or revealing. For a Virgo II, having sex with a lover in no way implies emotional openness. Cancer III's may find this attitude highly frustrating; they have a great deal to teach about emotional honesty and empathy if only Virgo II's are prepared to listen. For their part, Cancer III's must learn to accept the Virgo II resistance to being analyzed.

Marriages will benefit from the Cancer III ability to take charge domestically. Care must be taken, however, lest Virgo II's feel their space is being invaded; they have their own set of ideas about how things should be done, and open conflict can easily emerge here. Both partners are quite capable of living alone. This may strengthen their marriage, however, for it is likely to be based more on choice than on emotional neediness.

Virgo II's often open up to special friends more easily than to lovers, and their friendships with Cancer III's are sometimes more emotionally satisfying than their love affairs in this combination. They can also take the initiative here in solving some Cancer III mysteries. Should these two accept each other, they will share many personal moments together, achieving an acceptance and trust that will allow them to reveal deep secrets that they have never discussed with anyone else.

ADVICE: Work on conquering your fears. Open up and be more accepting. Share emotionally at a deep level. Give up some of your vaunted control.

Ego Formation

This combination finds its partners working on issues of ego—which can be both good and bad. The question raised in this relationship will be “Who am I and what is my place here?” It is not surprising that even while these two are striving alongside each other, they will also be unduly sensitized to whatever each person has been able to carve out of life—who has the more interesting or successful career, the higher salary, the better partner, the larger home, the greater peace of mind, and so on.

Cancer III's who are attracted to Virgo III's will stretch their seductive and manipulative talents to the limit if their attentions are less than responsively returned. Even if both partners are interested from the start, the onus will still fall on Cancer III's to be convincing—Virgo III's are likely to prove recalcitrant, resenting the demands of both the partner and the relationship as a whole. It is important, then, to keep such demands reasonable. Virgo III's most often don't self-evidently take the lead in this matchup, preferring to be the silent partner, who may, however, quietly make many of the important decisions. In love and marriage, the relationship's emphasis on ego issues can prove divisive.

When Cancer III–Virgo III relatives and friends work together professionally, their leadership often has the force of family, tradition and experience behind it. The best-case scenario in this combination, in fact, is often for the pair to work together, consolidating their relationship around a career endeavor. These partnerships are especially productive in entrepreneurial endeavors such as restaurants or hotels, small stores, services and schools. In all such undertakings, however, the partners must be hardheaded enough to resist the lure of somewhat questionable or seemingly easy deals. Power struggles and individual exploitation should also be carefully avoided, and if business partners or co-workers who are also friends, mates or family members are to ensure mutual relaxation and enjoyment, they must be careful to draw a strict line between their work and their domestic or social life.

ADVICE: Persuasion isn't always necessary. Maintain strong leadership. Understand your desires. Promote unity and set ego aside. Work for the common good.

Accepting Irritation

This relationship manifests an unfortunate hypersensitivity. Usually unintentionally and even unconsciously, its partners have the talent of needling each other in their most tender spots. Cancer III's may appreciate the aesthetic sensibilities of Virgo-Libras, who in turn, if the Cancer III's are the more creative of the two, will see the possibilities in any joint work that can be brought to artistic and financial fruition. If both are artistically inclined to similar degrees, however, and in the same field (for example writing, painting or music), competition and jealousy are likely to mar their rapport, despite its level of understanding and sympathy. Perhaps the best possibility is for them to share their artistic appreciation as a hobby, particularly when it is far removed from their individual daily activities.

Empathy often features in love affairs, but desire isn't necessarily commensurate with it. The relationship may lack strong sexual and romantic feelings, in other words, even when it is kind and loving. Cancer III's may eventually tire of the relationship or even come to resent it, feeling it lacks the intensity that would make it worth their while, or that the Virgo-Libra is too involved with superficialities. In marriages, these spouses will appreciate a certain accepting ambiance in the relationship, as well as the opportunity to furnish a home beautifully. But inexplicable anxieties could arise for no apparent reason, and the thin skins that the relationship encourages could create a potentially overwrought emotional situation.

Co-workers and friends in this combination may occasionally prove oversensitive to each other and go through periods of irritation and estrangement. It will be important for them to be less reactive to each other and to develop the capacity to ignore or resist negative feelings. Family matchups, especially parent-child, can be appreciative and sympathetic but lacking in real warmth. Both partners must remember to express affection actively in daily life, and to show each other that they really care.

ADVICE: Give more of yourself. Don't hold back so much. Develop a thicker skin. Be more aware of sensitive spots in each other.

Revealing Hidden Passions

Often outwardly directed, this relationship appears placid enough, and united in the face of common goals. A look at the relationship's inner workings, however, reveals something quite different: Cancer III's and Libra I's are unlikely to be temperamentally suited to one another. The things they have in common are their critical and demanding attitudes—not the qualities that will be conducive to peace and harmony. Although Cancer is a water sign and Libra air, this relationship is ruled by fire and earth, introducing volcanic and eruptive energies. Not surprisingly, an important theme of the relationship is bringing hidden passions to light, often in the glare of the public spotlight.

Love affairs here can be ecstatic, catastrophic or both. These partners need to express what is on their minds. The mental and physical combine uneasily here: it may be hard for these two to make up in bed after a serious argument, for conflict often erupts in the sexual sphere as well. In both love affairs and marriages, Cancer III's and Libra I's are likely to show the very best and worst of themselves, and their matchups in these areas are usually extreme in nature.

Cancer III's and Libra I's rarely seek each other out, so their friendships are unlikely to be emotionally based. Should they find themselves in a companionship or acquaintanceship based on common interests, however, perhaps having to do with money, politics or ideas, they may be absorbed and interested. And working relationships between these two can be outstanding as long as they are not too personal. Cancer III managerial and financial skills often gel well with Libra I precision and technical abilities.

In the family, each of these personalities is likely to be a disapproving and critical parent of the other. The child in such matchups will often feel misunderstood or even rejected, and in adulthood may get involved with similarly rejecting figures their whole life long.

ADVICE: Try harder to get along. Overlook matters sure to cause conflict. Lessen critical attitudes. Even out emotional swings. Stay objective.

A Bond of the Spirit

This relationship can be quite close and understanding. It is often a bond of the spirit—loyal and true. Religion or spirituality are prominent here, and although these partners may have quite different orientations, each recognizes a kindred spirit in the other. Cancer III intensity may prove too demanding for Libra II's, who need to be free to fly, but who are also capable of being quite content in the relationship as long as they don't feel restricted. The ties between these two will be hard to break; the pair will share a lot, and having made this kind of investment in each other they will be loath to let go. Thus the beginning of the relationship can be fascinating, the middle productive and trusting, and the breakup extremely painful, if indeed such a relationship can ever really end.

Love affairs and friendships are often related here. These two are so natural with each other that they might be taken for siblings. Although physical, such relationships are more secure in the spiritual or intellectual realm, as meetings of minds and hearts. The combination has a quality of idealism—the type not read about or dreamed of but lived every day. These two may see no need to get married; in the most important way they are often already spouses, making the ceremony an empty formality.

In the family, Libra II's doing things with friends are likely to include Cancer III siblings, introducing them to people and bringing them out into more normal social activities. The Cancer III sibling, meanwhile, can teach the Libra II about how power and aggression work in the world. In either case the pair are likely to fight like cats and dogs, but through it all maintain an understanding and even spiritual bond.

Friends and lovers in this combination may try sharing occupational pursuits, but in the long run they are better off pursuing their separate professional interests. Should a Cancer III and Libra II find themselves working together as a boss-employee or co-worker pair, they will do well to keep their relationship light and filled with wit and good humor.

ADVICE: Try to be a little more realistic. Beware of undue attachments. Make preparations for difficult times. Try to avoid overseriousness.

Harnessing Friction

These two can make a powerful combination. The emphasis here is on an objective, thoughtful, systematic approach to any idea, task or project; ideally engaged in establishing or running an organization, the Cancer III–Libra III relationship surmounts internal tensions and uses them as a driving force to achieve goals. Cancer III and Libra III form a square aspect to each other in the zodiac (90° apart), and traditional astrology would therefore view them as conflicting. That the relationship can harness such friction is characteristic of its ability to turn what seem to be disadvantages to its good. Ruled by earth, reflecting its grounded and stable orientation, this relationship brings out its partners' practical and ambitious sides.

Since neither of these partners puts love above ambition, romance is not particularly favored here. Although their affairs may be intense, especially sexually, there is usually no love lost between them, and they are more often in conflict than in harmony with each other. Marriages tend to be of the more practical and socially ambitious kind. Together, through determination and ambition, these two usually succeed in making a financial and social success of their collaboration.

Friendships are not particularly favored here because these two can rarely completely relax together and surrender to simple fun and entertainment. In the family, similarly, the ambition of parent-child relationships makes them likely to show marked stress. At work, on the other hand, this is a strong combination. Since the Cancer III–Libra III matchup is so strong organizationally, it does well heading up social, professional and commercial groups. Here personal differences are for the most part put aside in favor of bringing the group to the highest level of performance and success. Cancer III–Libra III leader teams must be careful to act considerately and humanely, however, toward those serving under them, for they have a tendency to overlook this responsibility in an often ruthless rush to the top. Their power drives tend to be overwhelming, and they are likely to push themselves and their associates or employees to the limit of their endurance.

ADVICE: Call a truce in personal matters. Try to relax together occasionally. There is no shame in having fun. Be more considerate of others.

LIBRA-SCORPIO CUSP

Swift Currents

This relationship is capable of touching its partners profoundly and being extremely complex emotionally, but it can also be isolated, even lonely. Together these two have great difficulty making meaningful connections with others, especially in the family and at work. The emphasis is usually on the dynamic between the partners themselves. Libra-Scorpios are notoriously hard to handle, so it will take every ounce of Cancer III persuasiveness to get through to them. Even so, these two can easily push each other's buttons, so that one of the relationship's real challenges is to maintain openness while simultaneously perhaps growing a whole new set of buttons that cannot be pushed so easily. Every bit of immaturity on both sides is bound to be expressed in conflict here sooner or later—but this can be a strength, for growing and working out a rapport can become a maturing process for both partners.

Assuming that these two are attracted to one another, their love affairs can be both difficult and intense. They will have trouble maintaining any sort of objectivity, since the relationship's emotional currents will run strong and conflict will always hover in the wings. Cancer III insecurities and the overly critical nature of Libra-Scorpios emerge in full bloom all too often. Furthermore, both partners have a penchant for excess, and should their involvement be deeply passionate, the relationship may have a problem with sex and love addictions—not to speak of struggles with alcohol or other drugs. In marriages as well as love affairs, such addictions often function as avenues of escape from the matchup's strong mental orientation, and from the nervousness that may accompany it. Cancer III-Libra-Scorpio friendships and work relationships are likely to be a bit more objective and stable. Jealousy and competition can arise over career issues or the sharing of friends, however, testing any bonds of understanding that have developed. Cancer III's generally have less need for attention than Libra-Scorpios, and may choose to back off when rivalries surface, being wise enough to try to find an alternative more in everyone's favor.

ADVICE: Relaxation is key. Work on being less irritable and reactive. Beware of competition, however friendly. Moderate your excesses. Meditate.

A Smoke Screen

Something about this combination will feel quite enigmatic to its partners, deeply perceptive individuals who are bound to feel frustrated by the fact that they can't quite seem to see or emotionally touch each other. It is as if the relationship were a smoke screen preventing full understanding. Even when Cancer III's and Scorpio I's work or live together or are close friends, a great deal between them is usually left unsaid, or actively concealed. There seems to be an inevitability in operation here, a fatal or karmic impulse that brings these two together willy-nilly, regardless of differences in background, training, race, religion or career interests, but that at the same time prevents a deeper union.

Romantic relationships in this combination have a strong sexual component. From flirtation to outright temptation and seduction, the pairing tends to produce the kind of provocative behavior that is likely to lead to some degree of sexual involvement. Both partners have a need to keep things hushed up, and they will usually be very discreet about when and where they meet. Should a third person be involved as the long-standing lover or mate of one of the pair, a breakup between two or even all three members of the triangle is often inevitable.

Cancer III-Scorpio I marriages have the potential to be more successful. The partners may still be unable to be honest with each other, however, resorting to manipulative ploys to get their way rather than expressing themselves directly. Scorpio I's often think their Cancer III mates use unethical tactics, and Cancer III's view Scorpio I spouses as selfish and controlling. Even so, these marriages can be enduring and productive.

In the family and at work, power struggles often emerge within parent-child and boss-employee pairs in this combination, but the family or company as a whole may benefit from the compromises and negotiations necessary to work out such problems. As long as the lines of communication are kept open and a certain amount of diplomacy is observed, Cancer III-Scorpio I pairs can develop a modus vivendi over time.

ADVICE: Strive for honesty and openness. Let your guard down occasionally. Compromise can be beneficial. Face the consequences of your actions.

A Comfortable Niche

The theme of this relationship can be the realization of dreams and aspirations. The partners' motivation and willpower, however, may not be commensurate with their hopes and desires. Overcoming obstacles is a strong incentive here, and once embarked on a mission, these two will rarely give it up completely; yet even without severe opposition, subtle disappointments and setbacks, real or imagined, can undermine the relationship's positive thrust and wear down its determination. Too often these partners will settle for a comfortable niche in which they can keep dreaming about making a success of themselves one day. Meanwhile, on the other hand, there is a deep bond of feeling between Cancer III's and Scorpio II's, an empathic connection that can be counted on in times of trouble.

Both love affairs and marriages can be pleasant and relaxed—perhaps too much so. Easily satisfied together, these two rarely demand enough of each other to prompt them to evolve and grow. Physical comfort and security may play a disproportionately large role in such a relationship. Highly nurturing attitudes toward children are common here, along with a need to build a beautiful and safe home.

Siblings and friends in this combination usually share an active fantasy life. All kinds of imaginative schemes and dreams can occupy them, but may also rob them of the strength and resolve to carry projects through in real life. Neither party will necessarily acknowledge the importance of self-motivation, or even the need for it, especially if they are enjoying themselves.

At work, the most favorable situations for these two are probably as colleagues who have a hand in guiding the future of a company or other organization. Here the pair's imaginative vision can shine, as long as they have highly practical types around them to work with them to make their dreams come true. Questions can arise about the feasibility of Cancer III–Scorpio II schemes, but a few important successes will silence their most critical adversaries.

ADVICE: Push yourself a bit. Be more self-critical and realistic. Dreams should not be a substitute for action. Use your imagination more actively.

A Firm Foundation

This relationship will keep a code or set of rules that it will take quite seriously. Generally steadfast and traditional, it tends to discourage excessive emotion and to favor rationality. Given the passionate nature of the partners, this is quite a positive trend, and helps to establish the pairing on a firm foundation. Since Cancer III and Scorpio III are in trine aspect to each other (120° apart in the zodiac), traditional astrology predicts an easy and relatively trouble-free relationship between them. Although a fluid exchange of energy is possible and even likely between these two water signs, the relationship is quite practical. Once given, the partners' commitments and promises are likely to be taken literally.

Love affairs can be earthy and sensuous but may lack fiery passion. Since Cancer III's and Scorpio III's will rarely compromise themselves or undermine their own best interests, if either partner becomes dependent or needy the end may well be near. Marriages are a better use of the relationship's responsible and well-grounded orientation. Scorpio III's may well begin to relinquish their controlling attitudes around Cancer III's, who should enjoy letting these capable partners pull their own weight in the relationship.

Friendships in this combination can be terrific, having a tolerance and understanding that allow highly personal matters to be discussed and shared. Practicality being the relationship's strength, these friends could rely on each other strongly for advice. Cancer III–Scorpio III co-workers can function side by side for years in relative harmony; the emotional quality of their interactions will be understated, but in one way or another they will usually show respect and affection for each other. In the family, parent-child and sibling matchups are capable of being the foundation on which other family members can depend. Basic domestic matters, particularly those dealing with food and division of labor, will be well handled by a combination of Cancer III and Scorpio III managerial skills.

ADVICE: Get out of the house a bit more. Share exciting experiences involving risk. Awaken sleeping passions. Others can serve you, too.

The Uncertainty Principle

This relationship is often taken up with initiating new endeavors, and in fact its metaphorical trademark may be birth, or breathing new life into a traditional activity. The combination generally inspires confidence. These two rarely undertake a project with too high a risk of failure; they do not hesitate to stand up to authority together, and present a solid front when arguing for their principles. At the same time, the relationship also encourages the bit of the dreamer in both Cancer III's and Scorpio-Sagittarians, for these two do well with a bit of uncertainty—giving birth to new projects would be little fun if they knew of their success beforehand.

Love affairs here can be explosive getting started; feelings are likely to fly at first, but are quickly brought under control. Still, the relationship can bring out the excessive side of Cancer III's, making them feel they are getting in a bit over their head. Scorpio-Sagittarians will be attracted to Cancer III intensity, but if they tire of it they may have difficulty freeing themselves from this partner's emotional claims. On the other hand, they themselves have a tendency to fickleness, which, unfortunately, they may use somewhat manipulatively once they discover how vulnerable Cancer III's are to being wounded by it.

Marriages are more apt to be carried on dependably, and business contacts similarly will be completely professional. In both cases Cancer III insecurity and Scorpio-Sagittarius fear often lurk behind the facade, but these seemingly negative elements usually give the couple the kick they need to make their relationship successful. Cancer III–Scorpio-Sagittarius spouses make attentive parents, and as business partners these two are likely to treat their projects like their children, guiding them knowingly in the right direction. A Cancer III parent, however, is likely to arouse rebellion in a Scorpio-Sagittarius child, while a Scorpio-Sagittarius parent may lack the emotional stability that Cancer III children demand. Friendships are less common than rivalries here, for the matchup has a quality of intensity that often seems to demand expression through confrontation.

ADVICE: Try to even out your feelings. Don't be afraid of rejection. Learn to trust and to share. Spend time together away from work or family.

Rainbow Over Distant Mountain

A rare beauty characterizes this combination, like a rainbow spanning a distant mountain after a thunderstorm. These partners will hardly believe their good fortune: in all matters having to do with aesthetic taste and entertainment, they will be content in their dealings with each other, a quality that will spread into the rest of their relationship. Very different personalities, they would appear to have little in common: Cancer is a water sign and Sagittarius fire, and the Cancer III Persuader might seem to threaten the flame of Sagittarius I Independence. Yet the relationship is ruled by earth and air, so that a kind of completion occurs here—a balance of all four elements.

Cancer III–Sagittarius I love affairs are likely to be once-in-a-lifetime experiences—if they ever get off the ground. This is one of the less likely romantic combinations in the year, but these two may be able to discover in each other qualities that others have passed by, and if so, by a wondrous alchemy, these qualities can unite into a thing of beauty. Yet these relationships are often fleeting, and may leave the lovers wondering whether they were real or just a dream.

Marriages between these two can work out in theory, since both partners are serious and have strong nurturing abilities; oddly enough, though, this couple's love affairs rarely develop that far. Friendships, on the other hand, may be solid and fun for both partners. Cancer III's love fooling with their Sagittarius I friends, jokingly pressuring or tricking them into doing the most outrageous things. Sagittarius I's like to tease Cancer III's and ridicule their often overserious pose. Cancer III parents can provide Sagittarius I children with the authority, support and understanding they need, but must be extremely careful not to intrude on their private lives. Sagittarius I parents can be inspiring role models for Cancer III children, but may unknowingly hurt their feelings through hasty actions or decisions. Career matchups here can be excellent when the partners' projects demand vigilant application and hard work.

ADVICE: Don't doubt what happens between you. Joking can be a form of affection. Take your time. Don't hold each other back. Value what you have a bit more.

High Demands

This combination is often a meeting of like minds. At its best it carries with it a demand for the perfection of ideas, techniques or outlooks, and Cancer III's and Sagittarius II's together have far more strength to stick to their principles than either of them could muster alone. They will feel entitled to believe in their relationship, then, but they may also grow dependent on it for backbone; this is particularly true of Sagittarius II's, who will respect the powerful directive and organizational thrust of Cancer III's, and will also feel that even the more unusual aspects of their own personalities are appreciated and understood by this partner.

As a love affair, the relationship can be highly demanding, not only sexually but in terms of social appearances. Cancer III's and Sagittarius II's are usually proud of each other and let others know it. At the same time, they will guard their privacy zealously, insisting on long periods of uninterrupted time alone.

Marriages in this combination are sometimes unrealistic. Both partners' satisfaction and happiness in the relationship can divert their attention from pressing problems, which will then be overlooked or ignored. Experience teaches this couple a strange lesson: whenever they feel euphoric, they can be sure that something is wrong or needs tending.

Friendships rarely remain only social or personal: Cancer III's and Sagittarius II's have a strong tendency to work together. This work can begin with a hobby, then evolve into a career. Technical expectations will be high here, and the pair's perfectionist bent will be clearly evident. Conversely, relationships that begin on the job, between colleagues or co-workers, often develop into friendships. In such cases it may be difficult for spouses, friends or family to relate to two people who are so wrapped up in their own thing—resentments and jealousies are often aroused this way.

ADVICE: Let up in your technical demands. Pay more attention to everyday matters. Open up to others. Beware of undue dependency.

Interesting Byways

Fun-filled and imaginative, this relationship has a zest for pushing the envelope. Both partners are intensely curious, and they are unlikely to leave any interesting byways unexamined as they explore worlds of fantasy and adventure. Because Cancer III and Sagittarius III lie at a quincunx aspect to each other (150° apart in the zodiac), traditional astrology predicts some instability here. For these two, however, feelings of insecurity only tend to add to the excitement, spurring the relationship on to greater feats of daring.

Romantic relationships here will certainly include a strong element of fantasy and are likely to be brief but memorable. These two are seldom suited for the long haul—it's true that each can bring out the other's playful side, but they both have a depressive tendency as well, which will also be a factor between them. Still, although the partners might later see their affair as a mistake or even a disaster, they are likely to acknowledge its importance in their lives. Marriages are not particularly recommended, since Cancer III's and Sagittarius III's may both be much too busy with their careers to devote themselves to children and settled family life.

As family members, especially siblings of the opposite sex, this pair often becomes a lively focus of attention for parents and other relatives. They can be enchanting in their playfulness, creating many fairytale castles in the air. In the workplace, Cancer III's and Sagittarius III's are likely to argue for opposing plans and outlooks. Here the combination conflicts, and its tensions may be reflected in a rivalry within the company hierarchy.

Friendships are active and social. Here the partners will not be ashamed to act silly, although they may prove quite thin-skinned should others accuse them of childishness. As friends these two could have a positive effect in lowering the seriousness of any family or social group of which they are a part, encouraging others to get down in the sandbox with them.

ADVICE: Try to hang in there a bit longer. Deepen your commitments. Beware of competitive career drives. A bit more seriousness wouldn't hurt.

Bringing Out the Best

This relationship brings with it a striving for betterment. The partners usually encourage each other to improve, but they should take care that they are simply supporting each other's goals for growth, rather than imposing their opinions or judgments on each other. The tendency, unfortunately, is generally for them to have deep bonds but not necessarily happy ones. Cancer III's will try hard to bring out the positive side of Sagittarius-Capricorns, but their persuasive skills will truly be put to the test in trying to pressure these partners into being a bit more communicative, expressive and precise. Sagittarius-Capricorns may come to resent and even dislike a relationship that pushes them in such a direction, for they usually want to follow their own tempo, revealing themselves only when they are ready. Being themselves quite savvy, they for their part may try to encourage dowdier Cancer III's to be more with it.

A bit of the Cinderella complex emerges in love affairs in this combination: Sagittarius-Capricorns who lack self-confidence may refuse to admit that they have really been chosen by a Cancer III. All kinds of old scripts will run and rerun in their minds as they try to convince themselves that there's been some mistake and that they will eventually be unmasked as frauds. Granted, Cancer III's can enjoy the role of protector and savior, but they will gain much greater satisfaction out of a partner who can enjoy the relationship as his or her right.

The trick to making marriages and friendships work here is for the relationship itself to be seen as valuable and worthy of attention from outside—when the matchup succeeds in the eyes of relatives and friends. Appreciation and admiration of the pair as a unit is the heart of the matter, and achieving it is often the relationship's main focus. Cancer III parents tend to push their Sagittarius-Capricorn children out of their quiet world, and in return meet stubborn resistance. The partners are much more evenly matched in working relationships, but they can equally easily be powerful collaborators or powerful adversaries.

ADVICE: Develop more self-confidence. Stop trying to prove yourself. Reach an equal level in daily life. Beware of overbearing and snobbish attitudes.

United We Stand

The focus of this strong combination is likely to be operating as a unit in social or work groups. These two are apt to come together when they are feeling socially insecure; when each has attained a place in the larger group, the relationship may split. Achievement, ambition and career are emphasized here. The combination is not particularly comfort-loving, instead favoring work and achievement—perhaps too much so. Couples in this matchup have much to learn about social graces, and also about the nonmaterial side of life.

One would think that love affairs here would be sensible and practical, but this is rarely so. These partners are not invariably interested in each other, in which case, of course, they are unlikely to come together, but they are also capable of conceiving a strange passion for each other, in which case no amount of good sense will keep them apart. As a pair, they don't always handle emotions well, and can easily spin out of control. Perhaps two people who are so on the ball in other parts of their life occasionally need just to let it all out and run a bit amok in the fields of desire.

Friendships and marriages are more typical of the combination generally, tending to be extremely sensible. Here the partners' choices are likely to be deliberate and exact. Impulsiveness is repressed. Spouses in this combination are security oriented and extremely careful about how they spend their money. Neither is likely to be stingy, but expenses must be justified and money cannot be frittered away. As parents these two are likely to lay heavy trips on their children when it comes to assuming responsibility and working diligently.

The pair have considerable business strengths—in fact they may give economic considerations priority over all else. Any group they represent or manage will probably feel well looked after. Cancer III's and Capricorn I's can make excellent co-workers, and at the executive level they lend direction and good sense to corporate efforts. As boss-employee pairs, however, they are likely to resent each other's strictness.

ADVICE: Realize that you can't control everything. Develop the flexibility to avoid freakout. Cultivate more spiritual values. Take care whom you value.

Struggling to Overcome

This can be an unbeatable team, but as adversaries these partners will give each other the fight of their life. Both of them powerful and dominant individuals, Cancer III's and Capricorn II's don't always see eye to eye, especially when it comes to deciding who will call the shots. Even when they first meet, sparks sometimes fly, or else they just eye each other warily, showing little faith in each other. A lot of water usually has to flow under the bridge before this relationship is likely to show any sign of deeper trust. Once a bond is formed, however, the pair are usually attracted to the road less traveled; the tried and true has little interest for them.

Love affairs and friendships are not suggested here, for neither of these partners will go out of his or her way to take the first step to be kind, sympathetic or sharing. In marriages, working relationships or combinations of the two, however, a Cancer III and a Capricorn II can form a resolute unit. These latter pairings are seldom content with sitting on what they have, but are attracted to risky and even dangerous activities. Daring to fail is seen here as the given without which success is impossible. Indeed, the relationship is most comfortable when challenged, or even when beset by seemingly insurmountable odds. Marriages confronted by difficulties and hardships, and businesses suffering tremendous losses, are par for the course. Struggle becomes the watchword and rallying cry of such a relationship, helping it on its way to victory.

Family relationships, particularly parent-child matchups, are tricky here. Clashes of will abound in such relationships, and little is taken for granted. Cancer III's generally want Capricorn II's to talk about what is really bothering them, while Capricorn II's insist that Cancer III's make a deeper commitment to family life. These two often come closer together during times of crisis, when their relationship becomes the rock on which everything and everyone depends.

ADVICE: Let up a bit in your intensity. Accept happiness if it comes your way. The easiest way is sometimes the best way. Don't summon up problems.

Consummate Role-Players

This relationship seems to imagine life as a theater, and its partners as happy audience members commenting on the action. Yet these powerful individuals are quite capable of stepping onto the world stage themselves and taking part. Although these partners' opposition in the zodiac (where they lie 180° apart) leads traditional astrology to predict a rough ride for them, the friction they generate can also be warming. They don't take their infighting seriously, which is probably wise if their survival together is to be prolonged. They will also be sensible if they choose to operate in two different arenas, since neither likes the role of second fiddle.

Love affairs here are unlikely to develop beyond an initial encounter. Cancer III's may be threatened by the fearlessness of Capricorn III's, who for their part can be unsettled by this partner's sharp insights into their character. Marriages too are not as rewarding as they could be, and their consequences may be not just unproductive but destructive. Parent-child relationships, on the other hand, can be truly outstanding. Whichever of these two is the parent and which is the child, there is an understanding between Cancer III's and Capricorn III's that guarantees parental care and filial respect. Should a single parent be living with a single child in this combination, the two may play many different roles in the relationship's dramatic structure, so that they don't need a lot of input from outside their home base. The only drawback here is overprotectiveness and overattachment, which can be painful to deal with in early adulthood.

Cancer III's and Capricorn III's can quite possibly work together in a company, but usually do so best as equals on the same level. As soon as one occupies a higher position, annoying power conflicts may begin, although they rarely get completely out of hand. Cancer III–Capricorn III friendships can be vivid, exciting and a great deal of fun. They also have a slightly mocking and sarcastic quality: these two know how to express any antagonism through light and nonthreatening banter.

The couple divorced in '40.

Objectivity in Chaos

Instability is high in this relationship, and if it is to survive, a great deal of objectivity will have to be mustered to determine what it needs each time it runs into trouble. If it should fall off track, a supreme act of willpower might be necessary to right it. The relationship seesaws violently between emotional extremes, making any kind of settled life impossible. Cancer III's will generally engage in a lot of criticism, but unless these assessments are ultimately positive, they may only worsen the tension and lead to the relationship's demise. Capricorn-Aquarians do not react well to nagging, complaining or even positive suggestions, since they resent all limitations on their impulsiveness. Patient and mature Cancer III's, however, will often doggedly and determinedly exert every ounce of their persuasive power to put the relationship on a more even keel before admitting failure.

Love and marriage here are highly unpredictable. Since Cancer III's have much less need for attention than their partner, and since they generally prefer isolation to troublesome or messy involvements, it's hard to imagine them even entering such situations. If they do, they will periodically need to withdraw from the relationship's crazier aspects. These strategic retreats can actually promote objectivity; perhaps Capricorn-Aquarians would be wise to follow this example occasionally, too.

Friendships in this combination are best when limited in scope and kept from getting too deep emotionally. Cancer III and Capricorn-Aquarius friends do best when keeping things light. Sharing entertaining activities together, rather than solemn or stressful ones, is usually the best bet here.

Cancer III bosses or parents encountering impulsiveness and wildness in Capricorn-Aquarius employees or children are likely to be critical. At work and in families, attempts to objectify are not usually successful, since Capricorn-Aquarius rebelliousness and eccentricity and the Cancer III tendency to dominate often make a dangerously explosive mixture.

ADVICE: Withdraw and observe. Analyze mistakes. Behave maturely. Even out feelings. Don't be controlled by your moods.

A Hole in the Market

Here is an example of two people's strengths combining to form an even stronger and more powerful third entity. Although Cancer is a water sign and Aquarius air, this relationship is governed by fire and earth, in this case connoting passion and dedication. When Cancer III's and Aquarius I's set their sights on something, little will dissuade them from their aim. Especially knowing and intelligent in business, the relationship is quick in perceiving and filling holes in the market. In this and other areas of life, its intuitive strength allows its partners to follow their hunches and pull needed information seemingly out of nowhere, a helpful talent in times of crisis.

Love affairs here are often heavy and demand total involvement. The partners generally know when their lover is backing off emotionally, so faking responses is not a viable alternative—these relationships generally demand honesty. If a new involvement comes along, these partners will want to hear about it from each other, not from someone else. Marriages are most successful when power struggles can be put to rest from the start. The Cancer III will usually assume the dominant role, but the Aquarius I is capable of challenging this tendency. Once the power issue is resolved, the relationship may well find itself in a leadership position, at the center of its social or family group. Inventive in the extreme and capable of sharing whatever each partner has, no matter how little that is, friendships in this combination show marked improvisational talents. In the family, Cancer III–Aquarius I sibling pairs and parent-child combinations can be expected to disagree over the basic direction the family will take, particularly concerning matters of education, housing, and religion or ideology. In career matchups, these two are an excellent team, with Cancer III's contributing practical skills and hardheaded organizational abilities while Aquarius I's apply their quick intelligence to troubleshoot and solve problems. Aquarius I's have a penchant, however, for stretching their credit to the limit or simply spending more than they earn, and Cancer III's will have to keep a sharp eye on this habit.

ADVICE: Settle power issues. Compromise on matters of ideology. Investigate the facts thoroughly. Don't assume you are headed in the right direction.

A Fight for Honesty

This relationship has a hidden intensity that can break out suddenly like an unforeseen tidal wave, drowning everything in sight. On the surface, things appear harmonious enough, but resentments and frustrations often abound deeper down. For one thing, Cancer III's tend to be overdominant here. This makes Aquarius II's feel trapped and want to break free, which they often do—but covertly, without their partner suspecting. This may of course be because Cancer III's have blinded themselves to what is going on, but once they find out, their pain and anger can be volcanic. In a relationship with a facade that is as misleading as it is attractive, the core need is usually honesty.

No matter how nice friendships, love affairs and marriages in this combination seem, they often conceal tensions that may be ignored or even unsuspected by the partners themselves. It may be the people around this pair—the children of Cancer III–Aquarius II parents, say—who first begin acting out the repressed feelings and problems. Actually, this acting out by others may be the first sign that something is wrong with the relationship. And when the partners try to help the afflicted family member or friend, they may find themselves powerless, since it is really their own relationship that needs healing.

Aquarius II's too often operate on of a double standard. Cancer III's may go along with this either because they are overconfident, and don't feel threatened, or because they are hiding low self-esteem behind a mantle of bravado. Being honest enough to demand equal treatment, fostering communication and not taking things for granted are signs of health in a friendship between these two. In career and family matchups, too, the relationship must fight to demand honesty from its partners if it is to be successful.

ADVICE: Dig a bit deeper. Don't kid yourself—you're probably overlooking a lot. Why let yourself be treated like a football? Maintain self-respect.

Maddening Instability

This relationship is at its best and most easygoing when its activities are solid and well grounded. Trust is a big issue here: usually it's either present or it's not, and should these partners be unable to form a bond of trust, inherent instabilities will wreak havoc. In fact these partners have extremely different perspectives on life. Because Cancer III and Aquarius III lie in a quincunx aspect (150° apart) in the zodiac, astrology predicts a somewhat precarious relationship between them, and emotional instability can indeed run rampant here, driving them both to distraction. Unable to predict how the other person will respond in any given situation may be maddening. Interestingly, however, open conflict will be unusual here—unless one of the partners is driven right over the edge, in which case it will manifest in a big way.

Love affairs here can be extremely romantic and sensual, featuring all manner of seductive games and tricks. The relationship has a push-pull quality, with the lovers alternately drawn to each other at one moment and fleeing one another the next. Now they're afraid of losing each other, now that they'll be stuck with each other. Desire in this relationship is best accompanied by an escape route, then, which can always be held in reserve. Marriages may lend solidity to a faltering love affair but are in no way a guaranteed cure. Children, however, are often the cement that can help hold the relationship together.

Friendships in this combination should never be laden with too many responsibilities as a unit, nor should they expect too much from their own members. Free-and-easy interactions are best here. In family and work matchups, Aquarius III's may find themselves vulnerable to the fine Cancer III art of persuasion, but there is a limit to how far this partner can push them without making them angry. This particular tension will not easily disappear—it hangs around these relationships like an allergy, especially in parent-child and boss-employee matchups.

ADVICE: Find common bonds in play and work. Strive for emotional consistency. Try to build strong bonds of trust. Always leave yourself a way out.

Twists and Turns

This relationship's core is deeply emotional. Its partners may find themselves engaged in a mutual exploration of the labyrinthine twists and turns of the human condition. The particular intricacies that engage them can certainly lie within the relationship itself, but as a pair these two are also interested in investigating other people's problems—including psychological ones—and perhaps helping to solve them. Cancer III's are among the few people who are likely to win the trust of Aquarius-Pisces (not an easy task), and to continue to justify that trust for many years.

This couple usually takes its love affairs and marriages very seriously. Both partners are quite aware of how important love and affection are in their relationship, and they tend to treat their bond with the greatest respect. If problems arise, in fact, it is sometimes because too much delicacy has been in play, with the partners virtually treading on eggs to avoid disturbing topics or activities. In being overprotective of their matchup and of each other, they may deny the confrontational and toughening experiences that move relationships forward in their spiritual and psychological growth. Cancer III's and Aquarius-Pisces should open up investigations of many more areas in their relationship beyond the few they find especially interesting.

As friends, Cancer III's and Aquarius-Pisces may show an interest in mystery and horror novels, gripping suspense thrillers and films, and other forms of art and popular culture that pique the imagination. Certain bizarre characteristics of their own relationship occasionally arise to excite their curiosity, which can even become obsessional at times. Secretive about such matters, these friends rarely reveal such interests to others.

As a professional team, Cancer III's and Aquarius-Pisces do best in freelance or service-oriented jobs, where they can express their interest in people and their desire to help them. Such caring attitudes are also likely to emerge in parent-child and grandparent-child matchups, which can come through powerfully in times of need.

ADVICE: Lighten up a bit. Don't be so overprotective. Secrecy is less necessary than you think. When you are in need, you too can try expecting help from others.

A Message to Share

This relationship is often mainly concerned with the transmission of ideas, whether in financial, social or spiritual areas or as entertainment. The spotlight can be on the relationship itself or on what it is trying to say. Although Cancer and Pisces are both water signs, this relationship is ruled by earth, an element implying a thoroughly practical sensibility. Pisces I's are not known for their materialistic side, but in relationships with Cancer III's they can learn a great deal about the world and how it works, financially, politically and socially. They are less interested in money for its own sake and more in what can be done with it to improve the quality of life.

Love affairs between Cancer III's and Pisces I's can be highly sensuous but also sensitive and understanding. These partners will usually take the time to get to know each other, using their quiet time together to reach new levels of peace and contentment. But their relationship also has an outrageous and uninhibited side that it puts on for show. Humor can play a key role here, particularly when of the ironic and sarcastic sort. Marriages are not particularly recommended unless the partners are willing to undergo serious adjustments to each other's needs and to be willing to compromise and be flexible.

Cancer III–Pisces I friends may meet in their student years and continue such relationships until much later in life. Their bond is a hunger not necessarily for learning but for social maturation and development. Moving away from the role of student and into the role of teacher will be a highly satisfying experience, and is often the most positive direction the relationship can take as friends age.

Family matchups, especially sibling pairs of the same sex, can be close and understanding. But sensitivities are also very pronounced, so that these brother or sister pairs often clash emotionally. Working relationships between Cancer III's and Pisces I's may be improved if the co-workers take the time to get to know each other personally, perhaps in informal pursuits away from work.

ADVICE: Be aware of your effects on others. Develop your spiritual side more fully. Flexibility and compromise are important. Be more accepting.

Independently Dependent

The involvement between these two personalities is usually quite profound, plumbing to such a deep level that most of their interaction may occur on a subconscious or even psychic plane. Since much of what occurs here is nonverbal, the overall mood is rather comfortable. While both partners tend to spend a lot of time alone, their emotional understanding runs high, and they find it easy to be open with each other. There is a tendency for these two to become mutually dependent, then, in a rather independent way.

In romantic relationships, Cancer III's and Pisces II's rarely hold back with each other emotionally. Emotional interactions, sexual or otherwise, are prolonged and satisfying. These partners can be quite faithful to each other over the long haul, but an undeniable dependency manifests in this relationship, having both salutary and negative effects. The relationship functions very well when the partners can give their all to each other only when they choose to do so, each having their own space to which they can retreat, whether they live together or not. Although outright sex and love addictions are unusual here, Cancer III's and Pisces II's may bond to each other so strongly that they are unlikely to become deeply involved with another person even when the relationship is over. In both love affairs and marriage, the relationship should aim to be more open and partners to form meaningful friendships with others.

Cancer III–Pisces II friendships can be outstanding. Their tendency to isolate themselves is not so strong here. Cancer III's usually take the lead in bringing their Pisces II friends out in the world, encouraging them and furthering their career and social development. Pisces II's, meanwhile, furnish the sympathy and understanding that Cancer III's crave, particularly when their professional duties are put aside.

Parent-child and sibling relationships between Cancer III's and Pisces II's are usually empathic and accepting. Each values the other's opinion highly, and the pair share a great trust, which will cause deep pain if abused. Cancer III–Pisces II career matchups are often relaxed and financially productive.

ADVICE: Form friendships with others. Widen social involvement. Justify trust. Stay objective. Beware of letting feelings dominate your life.

THE WEEK OF DANCERS & DREAMERS

Natural Peacemakers

At heart this relationship is quite complex, but at the same time it is one of the most natural and comfortable matchups in the year. These two in many ways come at each other from different ends of the spectrum: Cancer III's are often practical types, taken up with worldly concerns and the structure of power, while Pisces III's are more idealistic about following their lifelong dreams. Yet because Cancer III and Pisces III form a classic water-sign trine (they lie 120° apart in the zodiac, and are both water signs), astrology predicts an easy relationship with an emphasis on feelings. Because of the natural sympathy between these two, they are capable of overcoming their differences, building acceptance and trust, and discovering what they have in common. The overall fit is relaxed.

The relationship is especially strong in the social sphere. Whether a friendship or a marriage, it can function magnificently to bring friends or family members together. It has a knack for reconciling hostile individuals or warring factions, and is naturally suited to play the role of mediator or peacemaker. Cancer III's are often realistic enough to recognize the essential truth of the Pisces III philosophical outlook, and can work hard to implement such ideas. One might say that belief is the bond between these two; belief not only in an ideal but in their relationship itself, which can accomplish so much in its concern for others.

Given the relationship's service-oriented stance, whether in the professional, family or interpersonal realm, Cancer III–Pisces III partners must be sure to leave enough time for themselves. One difficulty here is self-denial, with the partners often calling upon themselves to make the greatest sacrifice of all: neglecting their own relationship and denying it a certain amount of sustenance it needs for emotional and spiritual growth. They must be more selfish occasionally, deny the needs of others for a time so that they can deepen their own personal bond.

ADVICE: Feed yourself as well as others. Don't put yourself last. Build a stronger ego. Let others contribute to you. Keep time free for personal matters.

THE CUSP OF OSCILLATION
CANCER-LEO CUSP

Leveling Off

The Cancer-Leo personality is subject to wide swings of mood, which this relationship usually magnifies—sometimes to the point where they are intolerable. Yet a workable dynamic can also be achieved here, particularly if what the partners are doing together has to do with emotions, psychology, art and music, or the healing arts. In fact, pooled Cancer-Leo understanding of the creative process and the human psyche can be invaluable to any family, social or professional group.

Cancer-Leos often cry out for stability in their relationships, but they are unlikely to find it with each other. Emotions in this love affair can swing from sparkling and even wildly exciting to depressed and finally cold. Either a breakup or a breakdown is likely in short order. Should the couple try marriage, they will certainly need the steadiness that comes from a solid financial base, firm career commitments, a stable domestic situation and adequate pay and benefits, yet even should all these be present they will still have no guarantee of success unless they can achieve some kind of emotional balance.

As friends, Cancer-Leos will have to understand and adjust to the dynamic of their relationship, which can be difficult. Disaster looms when one of them is either too upbeat or too depressed, and a seesaw effect—whenever one is up, the other is down—can also be extremely frustrating. At home, a Cancer-Leo parent-child or sibling relationship will often keep things lively, but will also lend an air of instability and unpredictability to family life.

Work relationships between these two can be good as long the partners do not overreact to each other's mood swings. The engineering of a decrease in emotional interaction and an increase in objectivity is essential here. Enterprising and somewhat aggressive projects, in which challenge plays an important role, are especially favored. Another lesson that will have to be learned, perhaps the hard way, is holding back in situations where impulsiveness could be counterproductive, even deadly.

ADVICE: Even things out. Strive for emotional control. Aim for objectivity. Fulfill basic requirements. Don't overreact or lash out blindly.

Getting to the Top

July 26–August 2

THE WEEK OF AUTHORITY
LEO I

An electric energy manifests in this combination, which can lead both partners to great success. The relationship demonstrates a high level of intelligence, which it generally puts in the service of ambition: getting to the top is important for these two, who in fact usually rank the personal side of their relationship second in importance to its social, political or financial goals. Power drives must not be allowed to get out of hand here, however, for the relationship can run amok if not properly guided and controlled.

Love affairs here are rarely of outstanding depth or passion. They abound in energy, but don't always direct it well; sexual energy in particular may wind up sublimated into other activities. Marriages, on the other hand, can work out excellently, as long as both partners are given full independence and family responsibilities are kept to a minimum. As spouses these two may be very ambitious for each other, or may even team up in a career activity. They are quite capable of working out an arrangement crafted to suit them, managing to preserve whatever quality time together they need; for example, even when work demands prevent them from seeing a lot of each other. Their children, however, must not expect a great deal of fuss or attention from them.

In the family, both parent-child and sibling pairs can also be career oriented, either spurring each other on to new heights or actually working together professionally. These relationships can be inspiring, but they are not immune to competitiveness and even open combat. Friendships in this combination can begin at school and continue throughout life. They often find Cancer-Leos depending on rock-solid Leo I conviction and Leo I's depending on Cancer-Leos to help them recharge their batteries from time to time. If competitive feelings arise over a common love object, these friends often choose to stick together, ultimately rejecting the attractive intruder.

ADVICE: Try to have more time for each other. Get a bit of distance on your career needs. Don't let ambition run out of control. Be sure you know what you need.

THE WEEK OF BALANCED STRENGTH
LEO II

August 3–10

Woven in the Fabric

The Cancer-Leo–Leo II combination is quite goal oriented, but the goals are usually internal ones—that is, they are goals for the relationship itself. This is often a fairly private affair, then, with quite closeted aims. Yet oddly enough, as a couple these two will seem larger than life; it's just that no one will be able to see exactly what they hope to accomplish—until they see it themselves. While Cancer-Leos will bring verve and excitement to the pairing, they may also come to depend heavily on the steadfastness, constancy and balance that are the Leo II contribution. In fact, the inner stability of most Leo II's may be woven into the relationship's fabric, becoming its underlying strength. Problems will arise, then, should Leo II's go through a depression: if their self-confidence is undermined they can go into a slump and disintegrate before the horrified eyes of a dependent Cancer-Leo partner.

Love affairs here can be intense, full of exciting and romantic moments. This energy level will be hard to sustain: Cancer-Leos periodically need to withdraw into themselves, which can make Leo II's feel rejected, withdraw in turn, and show signs of hurt or even paranoia. The daily routine of married life will provide Cancer-Leos with a more objective base of stability and structure that will help keep them balanced. Leo II's are intensely loyal and devoted, further supporting the relationship's stability.

Sibling relationships between members of the same sex can be stimulating and supportive—friendships, too. But although these two are there for each other in times of need, their energies may clash when they are forced to interact on a daily basis. In addition, Leo II's may understand what is bothering Cancer-Leos but refuse to sympathize. Limiting contact, arranging for privacy and encouraging independence will often help to alleviate these problems. At work, Cancer-Leos are more team players and Leo II's rugged individualists who like to act on their own, so don't expect too much cooperation between them. Their goals will also be generally mysterious to their co-workers.

ADVICE: Find other things to believe in besides each other. Establish a solid basis in practical activity. When working together, try to compromise.

CANCER-LEO CUSP

THE WEEK OF LEADERSHIP
LEO III

August 11–18

Turning to Laughter

Problems can certainly arise in this relationship, but its quick-wittedness and its insistence on having fun and not taking things too seriously may be its saving graces. These two depend heavily on their mental strengths to get through emotional or physical bad times; turning to laughter to gain objectivity can be difficult for them as individuals. Together, though, they are able to smile at themselves and others, often indulging in ironic and satiric wordplay.

Love, marriage and family relationships are unlikely to be successful. Cancer-Leos have a sensitive side that craves understanding, and Leo III's are usually too busy with their own egos and projects to really pay attention. Leo III's for their part need to be adored, even worshiped, and this won't always sit well with Cancer-Leos, especially since they too want to be king of the jungle. Cancer-Leos are apt to turn a cold shoulder when their Leo III lovers, spouses or parents have just ignored them or accused them of something. Simply put, Cancer-Leos usually demand more emotional support than Leo III's are ready or able to give. It is a classic case of ego and neediness clashing, and all the humor this relationship has to offer will be needed to deal with it.

The success of a friendship between these two will generally depend on how much time and energy they are prepared to put into it. If they find themselves constantly disappointed by missed appointments and forgotten telephone calls, they might be better off rethinking the relationship and making it more of a fun acquaintanceship or companionship without any deep personal involvement. At work, Leo III bosses may expect a uniformly high result from Cancer-Leo employees and instead be confronted with erratic and unpredictable work. Likewise Cancer-Leos are likely to find their Leo III bosses overbearing and unsympathetic. Should these two be co-workers on the same level, they will encounter the same difficulties, but to a lesser extent, and good-natured teasing and kidding around will lighten the mood.

ADVICE: Keep it light. Control judgmental attitudes. Accept lower expectations. Take life as it comes. Try to be more attentive.

Finding Acceptable Compromises

The greatest challenge that this relationship faces is to create and maintain a sense of balance. Neither partner is known for emotional stability, and the relationship magnifies the problem of keeping emotions and particularly anger under control. In addition, ego issues are a hot button here. Whether these two work together, are rivals or both, they will need to maximize their control over their feelings, not only so that they can be seen in a better light but also to increase their effectiveness when doing battle in the realms of love, business, family or social life.

This combination may be too unsettled to last long in love and marriage. Trying to even out extremes will be a trying process, a battle under the fire of flying emotions. In the same way that the relationship amplifies instabilities, however, it may increase the chances of reconciling extremes and finding acceptable compromises. For better or worse, these relationships are challenging, ego-driven and highly emotional. They are also often rewarding.

In friendships, Cancer-Leos will be alternately pleased and appalled, depending on their mood, by the outrageous and extroverted side of Leo-Virgos. They may also find that when they are discouraged or depressed, Leo-Virgos who have their hands full coping with their own feelings may not have the time or the sympathy to cope with them. These friendships will benefit from social ties with other friends, couples and family members.

In the family and at work, the presence of a built-in social control and organizational structure will give this pair more stability. Personal animosities and small irritations should be kept under control or eliminated, at least in the presence of other people. If these partners suppress or bury their differences of opinion, however, anger and other destructive feelings will inevitably break out at a later date. Perhaps the best policy here is an objective honesty, where opinions are expressed politely and in private, without emotional overtones or innuendo.

ADVICE: Find the middle ground. Control emotions without suppressing them. Guide feelings in a healthy direction. Try to be as honest as you can.

Delicate Duality

This relationship can fluctuate widely in mood, being now easygoing, now full of what can best be described as a kind of moral indignation. Both of these positions are limiting, since one of them represents too little judgment and the other too much. They also constitute a duality that imposes worry. These two would do well to realize that the truth is in the middle way, and to seek it there. Another problem here is that although Virgo I's may provide Cancer-Leos with needed stability, they also tend to be hard on themselves. Their depressions will cry out for attention. Instead, a dynamic sometimes emerges in which demanding and constantly moving Cancer-Leos push Virgo I's into a downward spiral, while themselves feeling pinned down by the Virgo I talent for systems. The relationship's challenge is to minimize dependencies while uncovering positive energies and fully expressing a sense of freedom. The most delicate balance may lie simply in acceptance.

In romantic relationships, Virgo I's may find the extremes of Cancer-Leo energy exciting but hard to accept, let alone control. Virgo I's can have a grounding effect here, but Cancer-Leos dislike and are bored by predictability, and may grow tired of this actually beneficial influence. Instead of complaining when things don't go as they wish, these partners will have to learn to accept the good with the bad.

Marriages and work relationships here tend to be either overcareful or overlax. There is sometimes an effort to compensate for imagined but expected difficulties while overlooking more concrete problem areas. This may produce a conservative, even fearful attitude, which blunts initiative and keeps the relationship from success, becoming a self-fulfilling prophecy. This problem does not undermine the relationship's stability, however, and can in fact guarantee its longevity. Friendships and family relationships are often intertwined, for siblings and their friends can form stable Cancer-Leo-Virgo I groups. Often arising during school years, such relationships can provide reliable and lasting enjoyment into late adulthood. Cancer I's and Leo-Virgos often go further toward accepting each other here than in other kinds of relationship.

ADVICE: Try to accept the whole package. Self-fulfilling prophecies can ensure failure. Employ positive visualizations. Complaining can waste energy.

Feeding the Flame

Here is a fiery relationship, full of the passion and excitement that make life a romantic adventure. The great need here is for one of the partners, or even the relationship itself, to provide a firm direction that will take the pair to a higher level. Either partner is capable of assuming this role, but in many cases it is filled by the social, career or religious orientation of the relationship as a whole. Ambition is strong in this matchup. The partners are likely to sacrifice their personal needs to it, and indeed it may threaten the relationship itself.

Cancer-Leo-Virgo II love affairs may begin with powerfully romantic feelings, but do not easily penetrate to their partners' deeper emotions. As a result, the fuel that would feed the fire may be in limited supply, and the affair may quickly burn out. Marriages are a different story, for here one of the guiding orientations that the relationship itself can provide usually emerges to lay a solid foundation. Ambition in this case can be reflected in the high priority usually given to the career of one of the partners, probably the one most likely to achieve success. As parents these two must be extremely careful not to push their children unmercifully to overachieve in order to satisfy their own ambition.

Although family members often pursue their own careers, they will keep in close touch with each other in professional matters. The family itself may provide the strong basis and the leadership element on which its members depend. Cancer-Leos and Virgo II's often take great pride in their family's career achievements, and feel that they have to live up to its patterns of success. Cancer-Leo-Virgo II co-workers often have a family connection, and vice versa.

Friendships in this combination can be inspiring and competitive. Achieving a personal best often becomes the relationship's shared focus.

ADVICE: You may be your own worst enemy. Beware of blind ambition. Power drives may boomerang. Make room for spirituality in your life.

Seeing the Other Point of View

The principal challenge in this relationship will be whether the partners can be sensitive enough to each other's needs. Insensitivity is likely to arouse tremendous conflict, and at times can threaten to tear the relationship apart. Critical and rejecting Virgo III attitudes are likely to arouse resentments and antagonisms in Cancer-Leos. Virgo III's in turn may be put off by Cancer-Leos' penchant for expressing their emotions publicly, and by their lack of sensitivity to their partner's need for privacy and discretion. Great care must be taken, then, to sense the other partner's point of view and to treat it with respect.

Love affairs here are likely to be on the cool side. As lovers these two rarely delude themselves about the nature of romance, which they may see as enjoyable but realistically perhaps an illusion in the end. The relationship rarely gives itself entirely in the emotional realm, then, tending to hold back and guard its vulnerabilities.

Marriages and working relationships can produce both practicality and flamboyance. Both Virgo III's and Cancer-Leos are no strangers to structure, and they work well within organizations. As team players they tend to preserve the good of the group, but only up to a point—they jealously guard their own interests. Idealism and faithfulness will only go so far with such a pair, and that boundary is usually reached when either individual feels taken advantage of or put in a compromising position. Power struggles are all too often the result.

In the family, Virgo III parents are not always sympathetic enough to their Cancer-Leo children's need for approval. They can also be brutally honest, letting their children know immediately when their behavior doesn't cut the cake. Even when very young, Virgo III's have standards of reasonable and constant behavior that Cancer-Leo parents may find unattainable. Cancer-Leo-Virgo III sibling pairs who are oversensitive to each other will strain the family patience with their bickering and sarcasm.

ADVICE: Show greater sensitivity and respect. Don't hold back in love. Be aware of how you affect others. Too much realism can take the fun out of life.

Meeting the Dark Side

The more these partners try to hide their relationship's less favorable side, the more it tends to come to light. Together they have a problem handling misfortune, pain and loss. As long as things are going well, the world is a rosy place; but when difficulties surface, they may be remarkably unprepared to handle them. There is a tendency here to ignore painful issues and to stuff them deep in a well of repression. The relationship's main challenge, and perhaps its chief focus, is to meet difficulties head-on, acknowledging that life indeed has a dark side that must be encountered, dealt with and integrated into the whole picture.

Cancer-Leo–Virgo-Libra love affairs can be exciting but extremely unstable. A hunger for sensation of all sorts drives them in the direction of ever new, ever more stimulating experience. When impossibly high thresholds of excitement can no longer be maintained, the relationship is likely to slip into deep depression. The partners must learn not to use the world of experience as an escape, and to get the most out of a situation before dashing off to the next attraction. Marriage is not recommended for this pair unless they can even out their life together by building a stable basis for the relationship and sticking to it. Increased responsibility, including children, may help in this process, but should not be undertaken lightly.

Sibling relationships and friendships in this combination are often oriented toward fun and exciting experiences. Such relationships may exhibit immaturity and irresponsibility from childhood right into early adulthood. Growing up is a real problem here—the reality factor is low. In business, Cancer-Leos and Libra-Virgos can be effective entrepreneurs together, particularly when Libra-Virgo taste and judgment are allowed to meld with Cancer-Leo leadership and innovativeness.

Never a Dull Moment

This relationship is definitely upbeat. Its focus is likely to be nonmaterial—perhaps an interest in new age or spiritual subjects—and as a result it will rarely feel grounded; these partners may just have to reconcile themselves to the idea that in this matchup stability and practicality were just never meant to be. The question is, can they handle the relationship without losing their grip. Neither of these personalities is the most firmly rooted. Both like excitement, and both are prone to becoming overwhelmed when faced with extreme emotion. Finally, Libra I criticism can have an unsettling effect on Cancer-Leos, and Cancer-Leo mood swings may prove too much for Libra I's.

Love affairs in this combination can be passionate but filled with turmoil. Libra I's will enjoy the intensity of emotion here, but will probably also find it interferes with their work. Cancer-Leos may discover all the romance they ever wanted, but will have trouble holding on to their attractive partners. Both partners will have ambivalent feelings toward this relationship, then. Marriages will not be dull, but are apt to bring out the depressive sides of both personalities, particularly when lack of interest and unresponsiveness rear their ugly heads.

As friends, Cancer-Leos and Libra I's often share a deep bond of the spirit that can help them to overcome any difficulties they encounter in other areas of their lives. Their openness with each other supports them in examining problems both in and beyond their relationship, and the advice they give each other for dealing with these issues is usually sound. In the family, too, parent-child relationships in this combination can be mutually accepting and caring.

At work, this couple can make an outstanding combination, especially at the executive level. Cancer-Leo leadership strengths and Libra I precision and technical abilities can be a highly effective combination. Both partners should find their own strengths rather than intruding on those of their partner. Both should also turn for financial advice to a third colleague, for Libra I's often have an unfounded confidence in their skills with money.

ADVICE: Cultivate practical interests. Find a solid basis for your life. Acquire skill in money matters. Beware of thinking you know more than you do.

Stabilizing Attitudes

This combination can achieve a curious kind of stability. It often focuses on building a workable structure that can give it definition and support, and this tendency will spread to other areas of the partners' lives, so that eventually they will find themselves running along quite smoothly. Care must be taken, though, not to stick too rigidly to the structures that are created. These two must also work on evaluation, and on learning to shed what isn't working. Cancer-Leos often lack a clear insight into themselves, and Libra II psychological skills can prove quite helpful here; conversely, Libra II's can benefit from the example of Cancer-Leo ambition, which can inspire them to further their own professional aspirations. These two have practical and stabilizing effects on each other.

In love and marriage, Cancer-Leos and Libra II's can suit each other well on the physical level, expressing affection easily. Yet true empathy may not emerge between them, and even if one of them understands what is bothering the other, there is no guarantee that he or she will feel sympathetic. Both partners have their own ideas about human behavior, and their relationship fosters a lot of individuality. When disagreements about lifestyle arise, as they inevitably do, Libra II's are usually the ones whose advice should be followed in social matters, while Cancer-Leos are more perceptive about careers. Marriages in this combination can attract needy individuals looking for direction and affection, motivations that may cause problems at times.

Friendships may have problems establishing constancy and building a sound connection. Operating systems may be unwelcome here, the partners preferring to be free and easy, and recognizing few guidelines or responsibilities. More casual ties are usually preferable to deep friendships. Family members in this combination often work to enhance the stability of their group, and especially to bring conflicts under control. More distant relatives rarely lose touch with each other entirely, and may tighten their bonds if they both wish it. Co-workers can function well as long as their roles are well defined and boundaries are not overstepped.

Introspective Investigations

This thoughtful relationship may encourage its partners to spend time alone together. Cancer-Leos and Libra III's feel very much at home in the spotlight, but their relationship enhances their more sensitive and reclusive side. Cancer-Leos will usually have made introspective investigation an important part of their lives much earlier on, but this may be the first chance Libra III's have had for a serious encounter with this part of themselves. Problems can arise if they come to resent the relationship for making them deal unduly with someone else's emotional problems up close. Cancer-Leos in turn are likely to feel rejected by Libra III lack of interest, and to get depressed; which will only make Libra III's feel misunderstood and isolated, engulfing both partners in a cycle of alienation. Much time and patience will have to be invested in this relationship to bring the partners closer together.

Both Cancer-Leos and Libra III's tend to have strongly balanced masculine and feminine sides. This not only makes many sorts of relationship possible between them but also becomes a trait of whatever relationship they end up with. A remarkable equilibrium is possible here. Friendships, marriages and love affairs seem surprisingly private in nature, considering the world's view of Cancer-Leos and Libra III's as extroverted people. Should these two live together, their space is likely to be a haven of security and a bastion against the intrusions of the outside world. Their relationship will guard its privacy jealously, and will not admit intrusion easily.

Cancer-Leo–Libra III family members, particularly siblings, are likely to live in their own little world, with dramas enacted daily and fantasy playing an important role. Such relationships, especially brother-sister combinations, often outlast childhood and may continue to be close throughout life. After work, colleagues in this combination may frequent favorite haunts where they can amuse themselves alone, and away from the watchful eye of a boss or supervisor.

Vulnerable to Temptation

Many surprising and mysterious elements emerge in this relationship. Often highly discriminating and sensual, it emphasizes craftsmanship or virtuosity. It is not without its tensions: each partner has a distinct and different viewpoint, and the relationship may magnify their habitual or addictive tendencies, reflecting a propensity for excesses and extremes of behavior. Because Cancer-Leo and Libra-Scorpio are in square aspect to each other in the zodiac (90° apart), astrology predicts friction and difficulty.

Escape can become a principal theme of love affairs, marriages and friendships. Albeit vivid and volatile, this is not the most stable combination, and the partners are prone to find security in sex and love addictions or in alcohol or other habit-forming drugs. Since excessive behavior comes naturally to this relationship, they are particularly vulnerable to such temptations. Emotional complexity and volatility are rife in daily interactions in all interpersonal relationships. Cancer-Leo mood swings and Libra-Scorpio emotional instabilities can be temporarily put to rest in the collapses that follow on binges, but are sure to surface again, necessitating a recurrence of the cycle. There is the danger here of a downward spiral, at the end of which both partners are left exhausted and the relationship in shambles.

The structure of a family or company is likely to aid siblings and co-workers in maintaining stability. Here one would expect these two to share their pleasure in fine wine, art, music, technical expertise and the like. In day-to-day situations, the presence of a parent or boss will keep the relationship's more extreme tendencies under control. Under the watchful eye of such an authority, siblings or co-workers often retreat into a secretive mode, engaging in highly personal forms of communication not readily understood by others. At their best, such duos can be hard-working and helpful to their group.

ADVICE: Escape is not the answer. Confront your difficulties. Use your intelligence and willpower. Don't become your own victim.

Ambivalent Feelings

This relationship will foster imagination and adventure. But although these two have a talent for dreaming up schemes together, they usually have different ways of implementing their ideas. After the initial, creative phase of a project, then, they could clash on the follow-up. Scorpio I's have a thirst for great deeds that is stimulated by Cancer-Leos, and they often admire the Cancer-Leo ability to put fears aside and just go for it. At the same time, though, they are cool and careful customers, and may find this partner a bit rash and hasty. Cancer-Leos will value Scorpio I control and meticulousness but may grow impatient with the time they usually take to plan their next move. Ambivalent feelings like these are common here; the partners are rarely completely comfortable with each other's ways of proceeding.

Love affairs accentuate this ambivalence. Scorpio I's can draw Cancer-Leos like a magnet, arousing passions that seek immediate fulfillment. They themselves, however, are much cooler, and prefer to wait until they are sure about their feelings. Then, once they do commit, they require an intensity in the relationship that Cancer-Leos are often unable to sustain over time. The acute differences in temperament here are exciting in the short run but undermine longevity.

Marriages and friendships can be built around travel and adventure. Scorpio I's will enjoy being swept away by a Cancer-Leo partner to exotic places and sites of natural beauty. Physical movement or exploration is central here, especially when it involves an element of danger. Scorpio I's may occasionally disapprove of Cancer-Leo motives and resent the relationship as somewhat superficial, but on the whole it benefits them by encouraging them to express themselves vividly. Work relationships in this combination can work out well if the pair are part of a larger team effort that directs their energies, demanding cooperation and limiting some of their emotional differences. As family members, particularly in parent-child combinations, Scorpio I parents will carefully guide the more wayward energies of their Cancer-Leo children and work to even out their mood swings.

The Here and Now

This is a practical relationship in which the partners are expected to live up to well-defined obligations. Literal, firmly grounded in the here and now (this is largely the influence of the Scorpio II) and possessed of quite an air of self-confidence, it is a positive association for these two, both of whom have an introverted and insecure side. A word of caution: since everything is taken so literally here, the partners must be careful what they say. They are both very sensitive to slight, and may take the most casual comment the wrong way. The relationship's stability is beneficial to otherwise fluctuating Cancer-Leos, who will appreciate the opportunity available here to get work done and be productive. But if Scorpio II's feel worn down by the strain of keeping their partner on an even keel, they may come to resent the relationship as an energy drain.

In love affairs and marriages, both partners tend to be faithful and hang in there. If the relationship is going badly, it will probably be the Scorpio II who suffers most—Cancer-Leos are more likely to lead a double life and seek affection elsewhere. Children, financial entanglements and home ownership may pressure both partners to stay together no matter what. Mutual recriminations and arguments over money are characteristic in times of stress. If all possible solutions to the relationship's problems fail, the partners would do well to consider letting it go.

Friendships often obey a strict set of unwritten laws, transgression of which can alienate the pair from each other. There is an expectation here of honesty and fair treatment, not only between the partners: other people making promises to this duo will be expected to keep their word to the letter.

Sibling pairs here can be intensely rivalrous, especially when of the same sex. Scorpio II's can be vengeful and Cancer-Leos unforgiving. Cancer-Leo–Scorpio II co-workers do best with regular workloads and few surprises; as business partners and entrepreneurs they will often disagree over the direction their enterprises should take and how capital should be spent.

Preserving Youthful Energies

The dynamic between Cancer-Leos and Scorpio III's is complex. Although very different temperamentally, these partners can form an effective working combination, particularly when innovating and developing new projects. Where Cancer-Leos are often risk-takers from the word go (or would like to be), Scorpio III's rarely take a chance that could threaten their security. These attitudes can complement each other in the workplace, giving Cancer-Leos the security they need and Scorpio III's a push to achieve. Such combinations of more radical and more conservative attitudes can coalesce to form a relationship that has ambition and drive but also knows when to hold back and wait. The downside can come when either impulse predominates, weakening the relationship by producing alternations between rashness and caution, or power struggles between the two directions.

Cancer-Leo–Scorpio III love affairs can start out like a house on fire, then quickly burn out. Should such relationships prematurely move on to marriage, there is the possibility of open combat between a more aggressive Cancer-Leo and a more defensive, but ultimately retaliating, Scorpio III. Friendships in this combination are exciting at the outset, the partners often being fascinated with each other's different approaches to life, and with each other generally. Later, after they have shared many experiences, they will also begin to realize that they actually have a lot in common. In all of these kinds of relationship, Cancer-Leos and Scorpio III's should never rush things in the beginning, and later on should work to preserve and nurture the innocent and youthful energy in which their tie was conceived.

In the family and at work, Scorpio III's make better parents and bosses for Cancer-Leos than the other way around. Although Cancer-Leos are team players who do well in group endeavors, as parents or bosses they may not be stable or strong enough to handle Scorpio III offspring or employees.

ADVICE: Not so fast. Make love last. You may burn out like a shooting star. Appreciate your differences and let them enrich your life.

A Reliable Formula

The focus of this relationship can be an appreciation of physical, sensuous beauty. Cancer-Leo and Scorpio-Sagittarius lie in a trine aspect to each other (120° apart in the zodiac), so that traditional astrology predicts an easygoing or harmonious time of it between them. Actually, conflicts and misunderstandings can easily arise here, but the relationship does have its own harmony—based more on what it values than on what it produces. The working dynamic here can be argumentative and even openly combative in daily life. But the dialectic of struggle between two opposing forces often results in a true synthesis, a beautiful creation—or even a relationship with a reliable formula for continued and gratifying success.

In matters of love, this couple's appreciation of sensuous beauty in the world of aesthetics may be carried over into the bedroom. Here Cancer-Leos and Scorpio-Sagittarians are likely to reach full agreement, although a challenging and competitive edge may still be present. Friends in this combination can enjoy each other fully without reservation or judgment. The highest value in these relationships is accorded to an appreciation of beauty, whether in the human form or in the worlds of art or nature.

In marital, family or working situations, Scorpio-Sagittarians are likely to be impatient with Cancer-Leo attitudes, viewing them as fearful and conservative. In this their opinions may differ from those of the rest of the world, which usually sees Cancer-Leos as forward-looking, risk-taking, even radical. Somehow Scorpio-Sagittarians end up damning Cancer-Leo thoughtfulness as insecurity, Cancer-Leo watchfulness as indolence and neglect. Often, however, Cancer-Leo judgment will be proven correct over time, eventually winning Scorpio-Sagittarians' respect. Cancer-Leos may not really understand the brilliance of Scorpio-Sagittarians, viewing them as somewhat eccentric know-it-alls.

ADVICE: Try a bit harder to understand each other. Drop judgmental attitudes. Continue to share visions and successes. What are you afraid of?

Healing Wildness

This combination has a healing effect, bringing out the eternal child in its partners—the part in everyone that is able to overcome adversity and move forward in joy. The focus here is on spontaneity, intuition and trust. The relationship has a playful quality that will feel freeing to its partners and could make it a haven from sorrow. No matter what its circumstances, it will keep its partners youthful. Boredom is the enemy for these two, who like to indulge in all kinds of unusual or even risk-taking activities; just to keep things interesting, they will push each other right to the edge. There is the appearance here of a kind of wildness, then, but the relationship is not without control: these two have a good sense of how far they can properly go. Being a little bit out there is simply necessary to them—usually to relieve other pressures.

Cancer-Leo-Sagittarius I love affairs can be highly romantic, with the couple quite capable of throwing caution to the winds and flying in the face of society—even when one partner is already spoken for. These two can show remarkably little consideration for a third person, in fact, sometimes behaving thoroughly ruthlessly. Should they marry, a certain amount of latitude must be structured into the relationship, especially for the sake of Sagittarius I's.

Friends in this combination who meet as schoolmates are likely to dare each other on to ever greater risks. They are very interested in how things work, both practically and theoretically; curiosity is a prime element of their friendship. They may well integrate their careers, forming a strong professional association. The start-up phase of projects is particularly interesting to them—once things are running smoothly, they are apt to lose interest and move on.

As parent-child combinations, Cancer-Leos and Sagittarius I's can experience stormy, near-violent scenes. Rebelliousness and anger can break loose regardless of which personality is the parent and which the child. Controlling such explosiveness will be difficult at first, but will grow easier with maturity and advancing age.

ADVICE: Make peace with yourself. You may be more effective when less emotional. Minimize violence. Show more consideration for others.

Control Through Mind Power

This is not an especially stable combination, since it magnifies each partner's volatile tendencies. In an effort to keep things under control, the relationship insists on everything being done without mistakes, to the highest possible level of quality. Thus the focus becomes a sort of perfectionism that imposes insistent and at times obsessive worry or thought. There is a danger that Cancer-Leos and Sagittarius II's will suppress their real intuitive strengths in an effort to control their impetuosity through mind power.

In matters of love, perfectionism in appearance, physicality or surroundings may drive both partners to distraction and unhappiness. In marriages, too, high standards will be maintained in domestic, financial and social areas. These drives toward quality can help to direct less stable tendencies, but should never be allowed to become rigid or compulsive. In both love and marriage, these partners should strive to hold on to the spontaneity and improvisational talents that are their birthright.

Both Cancer-Leos and Sagittarius II's must be themselves, and can suffer terribly when disapproved of, rejected or forced to play a role not their own. Parent-child and boss-employee pairs should be sensitive to each other's needs in this respect. Forcing each other to act the wrong part just to fulfill certain expectations or prophecies can cause friction and create unrest.

As friends, Cancer-Leos and Sagittarius II's tend to revel in sports, fitness training, exploring natural settings and travel. Their competitiveness with each other in these areas is healthy only up to a point; they would be better off turning this energy toward each partner bettering his or her own personal best. Perfectionist tendencies must be kept under control, however, to avoid mental and physical exhaustion.

ADVICE: Use mental powers sensibly. Beware of repressing what is best in you. Too much thinking makes headaches. Let up a bit in your expectations.

The Climb to the Top

This relationship tends to be extroverted and success-oriented. Although it will magnify the hidden insecurities of both partners, this only drives them on to ever-greater joint achievements. Whether in the social, family or professional spheres, this combination is determined to occupy the spotlight. Sagittarius III's tend to play the dominant role in most of their relationships, but Cancer-Leos are usually content to occupy a secondary position here, and to exercise their talent for being team players. The matchup's overall attitudes tend to be open, enthusiastic and optimistic, but also a tad naive and immature.

Should these two be attracted to each other, their love affairs can be intense and stormy: both are demanding, and Sagittarius III's will have little patience for Cancer-Leo mood swings. Passionate feelings can be expressed and enjoyed here, however. More needy Cancer-Leos may feel neglected or abandoned when a Sagittarius III partner shows little interest in acknowledging or supporting them through their depressions. Sagittarius III's are often much too busy with their careers to show Cancer-Leos the kind of personal attention they require.

Marriages and working relationships tend to be ambitious. Unfortunately, on their climb to the social or professional top, the pair may ignore or step on anyone in their way. Family members or friends who are slighted by Cancer-Leo-Sagittarius III couples may hold on to their resentment for years, later posing a threat to the duo at most unexpected and inopportune moments. For their own sake, then, Cancer-Leos and Sagittarius III's should pay more attention to the feelings of others and avoid arousing animosities.

As friends and family members, these two should take care to prevent their competitive drives and jealousies from running out of hand. Cancer-Leos and Sagittarius III's too often vie for the spotlight within social and family groups, undermining their own relationship. Reaching compromises and agreeing to scale back competition will prove a great relief to all concerned.

ADVICE: Be aware of your effect on others. Don't let blind ambition take over. Become more self-aware. Search for lasting spiritual values.

More Social Activities

The thrust of this combination is primarily social. Separately these two loner types often have problems establishing group ties, but their relationship, whether personal, familial or professional, allows and encourages them to engage together in meaningful contact with others. Because Cancer-Leo and Sagittarius-Capricorn are in a quincunx aspect to each other in the zodiac (150° apart), traditional astrology predicts a need for significant adjustments between them. The emphasis here on social connections outside the relationship, however, can help bring them into balance. The matchup's light and playful approach is another real plus, since both partners have depressive sides. Sagittarius-Capricorns, with their antisocial tendencies or difficulties, will have ambivalent feelings about a relationship that encourages them toward human interaction. Cancer-Leos will usually take the lead here, but should be wary of Sagittarius-Capricorn resentment about going public. Care must be taken on both sides that the relationship allows itself enough quality time.

In love affairs, marriages and friendships, social interaction should be looked on as the principal means by which Cancer-Leos and Sagittarius-Capricorns find relief from the emotional claims and demands they make on each other in private. Both partners tend to be intense and prone to mood swings, qualities that their relationship augments. Taking part with friends, family and other couples in parties, vacations, sports, games and entertainment will tend to normalize psychological problems and even out passive-aggressive tendencies.

Working relationships between these two are difficult but will benefit from the presence of others, so that the partners do best as co-workers in a large firm demanding daily human contact. Parent-child matchups do best when their family unit is in steady touch with other relatives and friends, rather than being isolated for long periods of time. Cancer-Leo-Sagittarius-Capricorn sibling pairs do well when they can visit cousins and other contemporaries on a regular basis.

ADVICE: Find the balance between public and private life. Work toward harmony and stability. Personal growth is essential. Develop social skills.

A Winning Combination

This relationship focuses on making itself a winning combination. Both partners have a need for dominance, but rather than frittering away their energy in useless battles with each other, they are smart enough to orient themselves to challenges outside the relationship, and to parlay their shared strengths into making themselves an unbeatable unit. Not only do they play to win, but, while they're doing it, they try to break new ground and overcome difficult or impossible hurdles. These efforts allow them to share in a great sense of satisfaction.

Love affairs between these two can be difficult, since both partners are often cut off from their emotions, and have difficulty with empathy. They may be unable to support each other in times of need. Marriages can work better, especially when the partners are united in the pursuit of shared social and financial goals; but these ambitions should be treated warily and perhaps scaled back, since the spouses often don't know what to do with their goals once they achieve them. This is a couple that fears success more than it does failure.

Friendships between Cancer-Leos and Capricorn I's do best when engaged in adventuresome forays into the world of nature. Exploring, climbing, diving, flying and a host of other challenging activities spur them on to higher achievement. Care must be taken, however, that fearlessness does not lead to carelessness and carelessness to self-destruction. Cancer-Leos will gain a responsible and structured approach from Capricorn I's, and in turn will infect Capricorn I's with their adventuresome spirit. In career matters, then, these two can make an excellent team, and may well find themselves at the executive level in any organization. Watchful Capricorn I parents know how to guide the energies of young Cancer-Leos in the right direction and to keep them on track; their children may resent their controlling stance early on in life, but can also come to depend on them utterly—a worse route to take. Cancer-Leo parents can be inspirational influences for their Capricorn I children, at least when they are in their more positive moods.

Putting On a Show

This relationship brings out its partners' more flamboyant and theatrical traits. Dressing up, partying and going out to clubs and to dinner are all given top priority. Cancer-Leos may be a little unhinged by such exciting activities, but Capricorn II dependability and responsibility can anchor them. The relationship, then, is potentially not only dramatic and vivid but directed and balanced. Capricorn II's are usually intrigued by Cancer-Leo energies and are well able to handle their mood swings and occasional depressions. The relationship is not possessed of great insight, but the partners do understand and are able to satisfy each other's needs.

Romantic relationships can be exciting for both of these two. Sexual expression is electric and powerful, intense and fulfilling. Both partners are liable to take the relationship seriously enough to contemplate marriage. That step should be considered carefully, however, since a subtle shift often takes place when the knot is tied: financial matters become more important, domestic and job pressures increase, and cracks can appear in a once rock-solid relationship. Capricorn II's are likely to voice their upset with silence, Cancer-Leos to be more emotionally volatile.

Work relationships in this combination often work out well, since both partners will respect each other for giving their all. In fact friendships and love affairs between these two often start at work. If the job is dull, co-workers will often party together after hours, or express their more flamboyant side at office parties and picnics. Cancer-Leo and Capricorn II family members and relatives might do well to form their own companies based on a service or product, where their stylish and polished manner can be expressed in PR and marketing, as well as in putting on a show for prospective clients.

ADVICE: Dig a bit deeper. Find quiet time together. Monitor your energy output and beware of overload. Ease into new responsibilities.

Jolted into Awareness

Together these two usually make a strong combination, and indeed the focus of their relationship can be a thirst for power. The lessons of spirituality and selfless love (perhaps the greatest power of all) are often only learned after repeated successes and failures have jolted the pair into the awareness that there is more to life than ambition and ceaseless struggle. On the positive side, the energy manifest in this combination can be good for its partners. Solid Capricorn III's can give Cancer-Leos the firm support they require. Likewise, the more electrifying elements of the Cancer-Leo personality can recharge Capricorn III batteries and urge them on to greater heights, particularly if they have grown a tad complacent.

Love affairs and marriages between Cancer-Leos and Capricorn III's are too often dominated by power struggles in which each partner seeks to strengthen their position and selfishly demands more than their fair share. Money, social status and objects are often just pawns in the fight for dominance going on here. Capricorn III's are difficult to unseat in such struggles, and clever Cancer-Leos will often try to gain their ends through subtlety and indirectness. These relationships give both partners the opportunity to strengthen themselves, but also to evolve to a higher level and leave such struggles behind.

Family matchups, especially sibling pairs of the same sex and parent-child pairs of the opposite sex, may periodically drive relatives out of the house with their conflicts, furious power struggles that tend to spill over and engulf the entire domestic scene. With time, however, compromise and diplomacy may evolve, and later life could bring acceptance and understanding. Friendships in this combination can be highly stimulating, and if these two consolidate their strengths effectively they can accomplish a great deal in the service of a social group, team or club. Co-worker matchups tend to be destabilized by the fluctuating energies of Cancer-Leos, but as an executive pair these two can give firm direction to the organization or company they head.

ADVICE: Don't be seduced by power. Learn to compromise. Giving should be unconditional. Cultivate kindness and consideration. Minimize conflict.

Outrageous Behavior

Because both its partners are subject to wide mood swings and crave excitement, this relationship is unlikely to be stable. Conflicts between intellectual and emotional energies are apt to appear here, and to be resolved by a kind of blowing off of steam in the form of outrageous behavior. Cancer-Leo and Capricorn-Aquarius are opposite each other in the zodiac, so traditional astrology predicts tension and conflict between them, and their relationship is indeed dramatic, stressing dark and passionate feelings. It also has a strongly critical side, emerging when the couple try to use reason to deal with threatening outbreaks of uncontrollable emotion.

Cancer-Leo-Capricorn-Aquarius love affairs often involve secrecy. For one thing, these partners usually reserve their flamboyance for the bedroom, feeling a pressing need to reveal no trace of it to other people. Their relationships also show a tendency to become involved in love triangles, the third partner being the husband or wife of one or the other of them. Such covert or illicit love affairs may go on for some time undiscovered, and it is usually one of the partners themselves who ultimately reveals it, characteristically at a dramatic moment when the emotional or physical strain becomes unbearable. Instability and the likelihood of infidelity makes marriage in this combination unwise.

Friendships here can be highly public, even theatrical. The pair feel little need to suppress such impulses, and the most capricious sorts of social behavior may result—behavior in which they revel, gleefully pushing the buttons of all and sundry. As co-workers these two can have an outstanding relationship when following artistic pursuits, but lack the interest or application to succeed in business endeavors.

Parent-child relationships between Cancer-Leos and Capricorn-Aquarians can be vivid and stimulating to family life, but also highly disruptive. Overly critical attitudes within the relationship generally lead to the adoption of argumentative and rejecting stances.

ADVICE: Work on staying balanced. Keep critical impulses in check. Use your emotional intelligence. Channel your passions more constructively.

Exasperatingly Unpredictable

Little rest will be found here—emotions fluctuate like a roller coaster ride in this intense relationship. Cancer-Leos can find Aquarius I's fascinating but exasperating. And Aquarius I's will be drawn into exciting experiences by Cancer-Leos, but they probably won't feel that comfortable about it. Both of these two do well with a stable partner on whom they can depend in times of need, but their relationship with each other seems only to undermine predictability, permanence and peace. Nervousness and argument often result, but at the same time the relationship fosters deep exchanges of feeling and allows the partners to discover a great deal about themselves. At its best, it may mark the start of a profound and thoughtful process in which these individuals really begin to grow.

This relationship is often unserious at the outset, particularly in the spheres of love and friendship, where both partners can start out just wanting to have a good time. As they get more deeply involved, however, it will become clear that there is potentially more to the matchup than a superficial hankering after excitement. Should they decide to continue, a difficult period will ensue in which more serious questions will emerge and the relationship will demand a more responsible attitude from its partners. Aquarius I's in particular may resent such demands and flee, but not necessarily irrevocably—they may ultimately find themselves hanging in there and going a bit deeper.

Marriages and working relationships may not survive the early stages of contact, which are stressful and demanding. Judgmental attitudes may get both partners so tense that they cannot function properly in the domestic or work environment. The prognosis here will be more favorable if both Cancer-Leos and Aquarius I's can learn to let small things go without constantly laying on guilt. In the family, sibling pairs in this combination, especially of the same sex, may be close but also highly competitive.

ADVICE: Time and patience are needed for things to develop. Don't rush. Learn to calm yourself, perhaps through meditation. Self-realization is possible.

Firm Resolve

This relationship is involved in bringing ideas and concepts into being and giving them a firm base in reality. The ideas in question will tend to revolve around issues of aesthetic taste, art and abstract concepts of creativity—yet this is a solid and practical matchup. In fact both partners, independently a bit flaky at times, will come to rely on the security it offers. Together these partners are more stubborn than they are normally, which could prove a divisive element. On the other hand, Aquarius II's dislike hassles and like easy and sensuous interactions, Cancer-Leos need liveliness and interesting challenges, and these desires are met here. All the imaginative dreaming in the world will meet little satisfaction in this relationship unless it is accompanied by a firm resolve to put ideas into practice; if this occurs, these two will meet with success.

Friendships and love affairs are likely to suffer unless they can find a practical outlet for their sparkling thoughts. Activities that ground these two in physical pursuits, such as sports, fitness training, jogging or daily walks or swims, are highly recommended. Affection and sensuousness characterize this matchup. In the family sphere, both siblings and spouses are likely to be interested in making domestic improvements. Cancer-Leos may get a bit upset with the Aquarius II insistence on comfort, while Aquarius II's may find Cancer-Leo energy a bit unsettling, but these two are generally able to live together in relative harmony.

Career connections between Cancer-Leos and Aquarius II's are especially favored. Should these two form a business partnership, serve as executive colleagues in a company or work side by side on the job on a daily basis, they stand a good chance of achieving success. Most effective when their ideas have a likelihood of being implemented, they can quickly grow bored with a position that demands only that they accomplish a predetermined task. Innovative in the extreme, these two make excellent problem-solvers, being capable of thinking up the most ingenious ways to get out of tight situations and come out on top.

Lurking in the Background

The challenge of this combination may be to face up to problems lurking in the depths of both partners' personalities. The shadow side is powerful here, and if suppressed, ignored or misunderstood, it can threaten the entire relationship. Attention must be paid to deep feelings and psychological tendencies, particularly negative ones that seem too disturbing to handle. The inevitable necessity of facing up to such dark issues becomes apparent when problems arise that will not go away, and in fact get worse when neglected. When Cancer-Leo and Aquarius III partners decide to get to the bottom of their problems, their complex relationship may have to be unraveled by a professional, such as a psychologist or therapist. Through this kind of process of self-examination, however painful, Cancer-Leos and Aquarius III's will often grow closer and gain a renewed sense of commitment to each other.

Romantic but unrealistic relationships between Cancer-Leos and Aquarius III's are quite common. Love affairs may be deep, passionate but destructive. These partners tend to project their own negativity on each other and then to strike out against perceived moods and attitudes that are really their own. They may also force their mates to reenact the rejecting roles of people they knew in childhood, perhaps teachers or parents. Both partners must be encouraged to build up their own self-esteem before they can make progress as a couple. Marriages based on conflicting feelings may also tear themselves apart without a strong mutual will to heal individual problems.

In friendships, Aquarius III's can have difficulty accepting Cancer-Leos' direct and often overpowering attitudes and dealing with their emotional demands. The partners must make more of an effort to understand each other and open lines of communication. Parent-child relationships, too, can periodically break down unless both partners make an effort to talk about what is really on their minds. At work, the relationship's intensity may hamper the project of getting the job done; these two generally do better on their own.

ADVICE: Face up to your problems. Promote self-understanding. Reject escapism. Honest discussion is a must. Deal with the dark side and don't ignore it.

Life Experience

These two have a great deal to teach each other. Both partners will learn more from their own interactions than from books, and their ability to gain knowledge from life experience bodes well for their relationship. Aquarius-Pisces will help Cancer-Leos find out more about themselves, Cancer-Leos will help Aquarius-Pisces to realize some of their secret dreams. Rediscovering lost or repressed feelings will be a positive effort here; should Cancer-Leos be unable to feel real emotion, Aquarius-Pisces may help them break through such frightening psychological blockages. Cancer-Leo and Aquarius-Pisces have a quincunx aspect to each other in the zodiac (they are 150° apart), suggesting a need for adjustment. In their day-to-day interactions, then, they will probably have to struggle to maintain balance.

If love affairs between these two are kept on an even keel, they can be immensely rewarding. Sensuality is prominent here, but the partners generally realize that it is in their interest to go beyond the purely physical and to emphasize self-realization. Growing and evolving together is quite possible under the aegis of this caring but psychologically ambitious relationship; love affairs in this combination may progress quite naturally to marriage, with renewed commitment to understanding and unconditional love. And marriages can evolve even further, becoming a source of inspiration to those around them, so that they teach by example.

Cancer-Leo–Aquarius-Pisces friendships and family matchups, on the other hand, run the risk of being overly didactic. A welter of unsolicited opinions can arouse resentment on both sides, and the partners can grow to resent a tyrannical relationship that deprives them of individual choice. More tolerance and openness can be achieved by lessening moral and judgmental assumptions and attitudes that foster guilt and shame. Cancer-Leos and Aquarius-Pisces can make an excellent co-worker team, especially well suited to teaching new employees the ropes and initiating them into the ways of the group or organization.

ADVICE: Stay flexible. Learning should be open-ended. Avoid judgmental attitudes. Benefit from your experience. Teach by example.

Invisible Barriers

Although this combination will make its partners feel charmed or seduced, they may ultimately face disappointment here since there is usually a limit to the depth of their involvement. No matter how close they get, they eventually run up against an invisible barrier that keeps them from going further. Admiration and even passion figure strongly in this relationship, but even feelings like these cannot overcome the sense of distance that is also present. The pair's inability to merge into a unit may at some point make one or the other partner feel inferior; this is often the Pisces I, who, try as he or she may, can end up unable to please the Cancer-Leo and ultimately may face rejection.

Love affairs are sometimes better off staying platonic or limiting their degree of involvement. In fact, lovers might be better off if they were friends, since the deep differences of temperament and feeling between them may be too great to surmount. Affection and sympathy are often more naturally felt and expressed here than carnal desire; a selfless sort of giving, rather than a lustful hunger, is typical here. These partners may need long periods alone together to broaden and deepen their feelings for one another. Marriages can work out as long as the partners do not make heavy emotional demands on each other and leave room for freedom of choice and action. Dependency, jealousy and claiming attitudes often cause domestic pain.

Friendships and sibling matchups in this combination often exhibit a curious sort of rivalry, which is stimulating to both partners but ultimately blunts their efforts. Whether they are together or apart, an unwritten contract in the relationship seems to prevent them from surpassing each other in achievement. Masquerading as mutual admiration, this is actually a serious inhibition, and may betoken a psychological blind spot. The joint projects of Cancer-Leo–Pisces I friends or siblings often succeed at a lesser level than what either is capable of alone. In business dealings, care should be taken to remain objective and to prevent interpersonal dynamics from affecting the pair's endeavors adversely.

ADVICE: Don't hold each other back. Loyalty has its limits. Be realistic about your feelings. Emotional honesty is a worthwhile goal.

THE WEEK OF THE LONER
PISCES II

Filling in the Gaps

As different as these two are, their relationship proves relaxed, natural and easy. Each partner compensates for the other's weaknesses without stress or strain. Pisces II's are strong in introspection, and will influence Cancer-Leos to develop their more sensitive and spiritual side. Cancer-Leo social strengths will help Pisces II's come into more meaningful contact with their fellows. Thus the relationship will ameliorate the difficulties of both partners—the Cancer-Leo inability to get in touch with their feelings and the Pisces II tendency to isolate themselves. Actually, both partners risk becoming unduly dependent on each other and on the relationship. They should concentrate on assimilating what they learn into their character so that they can augment their personal growth as individuals and interact with others more effectively in the future.

In love affairs and marriages, each person is usually open to the other, psychologically and physically. Although Cancer-Leo is a water-fire combination and Pisces II is a water sign, the relationship is ruled by earth, an element here suggesting a sensuous connection. The relationship's practical, grounded outlook benefits both partners, particularly Pisces II's, who sometimes have difficulty discharging everyday responsibilities.

Friendships between these two are easy and comfortable. Neither partner tries to create problems, and both seek out their relationship as a relief from the stresses of other areas of life. In the family, matchups between siblings, parents and children, and other relatives are comparatively peaceful, but might be ineffectual in times of need unless an effort is made to deepen them. In the long run, though, it can be beneficial for these two to face problems and difficulties together, for this will create closer ties and foster understanding.

Cancer-Leo and Pisces II co-workers get along well personally but may make an ineffective team for getting the job done fast. Matchups at the executive level are often better able to meld these partners' individual skills and talents.

ADVICE: Deepen your understanding of each other. Don't avoid difficulties. Beware of overdependence. Enrich and broaden your character.

THE WEEK OF DANCERS & DREAMERS
PISCES III

Agreeing to Disagree

This relationship will generally require an agreement to disagree. The energy here tends to be polite but guardedly confrontational—the partners often don't see eye to eye, but their acceptance of their differences of opinion implies respect and augurs well for the relationship's future. Although honesty is a high priority here, undeniably manipulative tendencies are clear in the partners' need to convince and influence each other. Their exchanges can appear witty, elegant and charming to bystanders, but may carry serious and powerful undertones for the partners themselves.

Seductive attitudes are prominent in love affairs and marriages, often being used to win or settle arguments. This kind of emotional manipulation is likely to cloud the original issue and blunt any impulse to seek out the truth. While these relationships may be pleasurable enough, then, they are also self-deceiving. Unless these partners can build strong beliefs and goals, they may fritter away their energies in game-playing activities that keep them amused but do nothing to help them develop and grow.

Parent-child relationships in this combination can be especially stormy, with constant argument testifying to an inability to agree. Maintaining respect and openness is extremely important here, for if these are lost, the level of combat may prove truly destructive both to the individuals and to the rest of the family. As friends, these two are often united in rebellion against what they see as outworn social creeds, stupid habits and bad taste. They would be wise to take care to build positive values, rather than always defining their stance negatively by saying what it is they oppose. Cancer-Leos and Pisces III's have imaginative strengths that can gel effectively in a wide variety of career endeavors, even when their opinions differ. As business partners or executives their far-ranging vision can bring a company or corporation far. But their maintenance skills may leave something to be desired, so that they will need other, more practical types to help with their organization's daily running, particularly in matters of personnel, structure and finance.

ADVICE: Beware of manipulation. Give each other room to breathe. Winning arguments is not of primary importance.

LEO I

July 26–August 2

THE WEEK OF AUTHORITY
LEO I

Magnificent Rivalry

Two Leo I's can make a great team but can also be magnificent rivals. How they match up is usually dependent on logistics. This pair can shine in a love affair or marriage, for example, but in a company, family or other organization there is often room for only one Leo I at the top. If both partners submit to an authority outside themselves, usually an ideology, they can strive shoulder to shoulder in support of their cause. But Leo I's who claim to be the living authority on a subject, or the head of a certain group, can expect their Leo I partner either to confront them directly or leave in search of their own group to head. The relationship's forceful, positive outlook will make it impossible to miss. Moreover, since being taken seriously is the key to this combination, it contains a large dose of desire for upward mobility and success.

In love and marriage there is always an element of competition between these two, no matter how wonderful their lovemaking or well directed their domestic life. Career competition, sexual competition, financial competition—you name it, they can't avoid it. Leo I's really enjoy battling it out with a worthy opponent. They are self-confident enough to be able to admire a good rival's skill and will to win, rather than fearing or envying them; and what better rival could they find than another Leo I? In a sense, then, Leo I's in romances or marriages together may really be seeking a better or at least equal version of themselves.

Friendships between Leo I's may be subtly intertwined with rivalries. They give a new spin to the saying "With friends like that, who needs enemies?" Sibling relationships are likely to prove both close and combative. At work, the most typical positions occupied by a pair of Leo I's are as heads of rival organizations. Here their relationship may spur both companies on to new heights of achievement.

ADVICE: Competition may be less important than you think. Beware of conceit. Find authority within yourself. Seek more lasting values.

LEO I

August 3–10

THE WEEK OF BALANCED STRENGTH
LEO II

Gentility Versus Blood

Both of these partners tend to be hot-blooded, fiery types, but their relationship is ruled by something antithetical to fire—the element of air. The relationship is consequently much more reasonable, rational and intellectual than one would expect. It may not always be the most comfortable bond for this pair, who tend to overcompensate for the combination's mental aspect by trying too hard for relaxation and easy-going interaction. In reality, they'd rather be fighting it out, but a certain gentility prevents them from doing so.

Emotionally this relationship can be complex, in that the partners are not always in synch with each other's needs. Power struggles involving sex can disrupt the relationship, and although Leo II's are psychologically astute enough to understand their Leo I mates, they may nevertheless refuse to sympathize with them. Leo I's often require attention and support. They also like their partners to be optimistic and cheerful, and real problems can be raised by Leo II's periodic depressions. In marriage, the biggest problem is who will rule the roost, and in this case it may be the more intelligent partner of the two, not the strongest or most willful.

Friendships that arise during the school years sometimes reflect the value the relationship places on mind power: as friends, these two are apt to be interested in social and physical activities, but their highest value is reserved for learning and academic excellence. If they both have difficulties in this area, or if one partner has more natural ability or dedication than the other, frustration inevitably results. Leo I–Leo II siblings may compete for the attention of their parents by trying to outdo each other in their studies, a struggle later perpetuated by getting into better colleges and universities and securing higher-paid and higher-level career positions. Such sibling pairs should try to discover their own individual strengths and vie less fiercely for approval. On the job, co-workers in this combination often succeed through dedication and hard work.

ADVICE: Discover your real strengths. Don't be ruled by the expectations of others. Try to be more thoughtful and attentive. Cultivate kindness and sympathy.

LEO III

Dauntless Self-Confidence

This relationship is outstanding for initiating and taking control of group projects and endeavors. Its focus is often a professional or social organization or activity that the partners head up. The striking attribute of the matchup is its ability to lend balance and harmony to a wide variety of endeavors. These two often achieve such balance through their physical presence, accompanied by solid intuition and dauntless self-confidence. Loyalty and unwavering dedication to a cause in the face of monumental obstacles are characteristic here.

Marital and love relationships are a bit tricky. In fact, the most intriguing and fulfilling of these may be hidden affairs, which arouse a wide spectrum of feeling and expression. Such clandestine relationships may go on for years, and can help both partners get through difficult times they are having with other people. Friendships allow emotions to be more openly expressed, without fear of censure; indeed, Leo I and Leo III friends usually display outstanding loyalty and devotion.

Families are usually fortunate to have a Leo I–Leo III pair to take control in times of emergency or loss. Such couples are also remarkably good at organizing celebrations and holidays but must beware of being bossy or insensitive. Age differences between these two in no way prohibit their adopting such roles together, and in fact can prove beneficial in bridging generation gaps.

Work and career connections between Leo I's and Leo III's are often idealistic in nature. A prevailing shared ideology will act as the motor, driving the couple's unflagging physical activity and granting them solace during periods of discouragement. Financial success is by no means ruled out, but the principal interest here is not usually monetary. Although both Leo I's and Leo III's are usually dominating personalities who like to wield power exclusively, they are remarkably compatible in a dual-leadership role. Sharing duties and responsibilities without strife or resentment is a special talent of this matchup.

ADVICE: Stay open to the suggestions of others. Rest occasionally from your endeavors. Having fun is important too. Beware of hidden resentments.

Kicking Back

At its best, this relationship loves pleasure. But it can also be somewhat solemn when preoccupied with work, training or anything requiring practice to master, and keeping things light and conflict-free will not always be easy here. This goal should be pursued as diligently as more serious efforts. Assuming heavy responsibilities at work or in family matters leaves Leo I's and Leo-Virgos in need of kicking off and giving themselves over to fun experiences that can help them forget, at least temporarily, the demands placed on them by others. Others may criticize their relationship as superficial or hedonistic, but pleasure actually plays an important role in their mental health. Play acts as a tonic for these two.

In love affairs and friendships, these partners may turn to each other to take their minds off the stress of daily life. Leo I's tend to bring out Leo-Virgos' extroverted side; they themselves may be frustrated, though, by this partner's tendency to ignore them, since attention is something they need. On the whole, Leo-Virgos are stronger emotionally, since they really don't care a whole lot what others think of them. But they do crave understanding, which their Leo I partners are unlikely to provide.

A greater challenge awaits Leo I's and Leo-Virgos in the spheres of marriage, family and work, where pressures tend to pile up no matter how hard the pair work on making the daily mood lighter and more playful. Yet these pressures are often self-induced, for these two often overlook other people's willingness to do things for themselves. Together, in other words, Leo I's and Leo-Virgos tend to create difficulties for themselves, claiming to be mature and responsible but revealing underlying workaholic tendencies. Becoming more child-like and less "mature" is often the answer, if only these two could realize it.

ADVICE: Learn from watching children play. Seriousness is not exclusive to adults. Learn to relax. Allow others to take care of their own needs.

Developing Joint Projects

This project-oriented relationship can be productive for both partners. One regularly finds Leo I's and Virgo I's developing ideas together, then coming up with a strategy to give them direction. Their projects are often humanitarian or charitable in nature. Leo I's can be admirable role models here, particularly in their extreme independence and self-sufficiency, which allow their partners in this combination to give of themselves and to put their energies in the service of joint efforts. Virgo I's are happy to function as co-workers or assistants, allowing Leo I's to take the lead; often, however, they are the real powers behind the regal Lion.

Interpersonally, things may not work out so well for this combination. Should objectivity wane in marriages, friendships and love affairs, the nervous and unstable side of Virgo I's and the disappointment, boredom and frustration into which Leo I's are capable of sinking can undermine the relationship. Leo I's crave a variety of experience (they hate predictability) that Virgo I's may be unable to supply. If they tire of the relationship, they may well hang in there faithfully but seek excitement and fulfillment elsewhere.

The most effective Leo I–Virgo I relationships are usually professional and familial. Leo I dynamism and creative force melds with Virgo I structure and efficiency, producing an effective pairing both for developing new and exciting projects and for keeping them running smoothly. As colleagues, business partners, co-workers or boss-employee combinations, Leo I's and Virgo I's can lift their organization to the highest level of performance and satisfy both financial and idealistic needs. On the domestic front, parent-child or grandparent-child combinations can keep the family on the right track while guaranteeing fair and equal treatment to all.

ADVICE: Keep your eye on the object. Don't let personal considerations deter you at work. Try to be more understanding and sympathetic in love.

THE WEEK OF THE ENIGMA
VIRGO II

Not Everyone's Cup of Tea

As partners these two will have the ability to accept each other's often peculiar personal characteristics and to be sensitive to each other's needs and wishes. Together they will also treat those outside the relationship the same way, usually giving every person or idea, no matter how strange, a fair chance without prejudice. In fact, the relationship is particularly drawn to unusual and out-of-the-way experiences and people. Recognizing the odd and offbeat elements in everyday events is a specialty of this combination, and in their opinions they are likely to give a different spin to events and topics, throwing a whole new light on them. Their outspokenness, however, is not always appreciated—this combination may not be everyone's cup of tea.

A strong physical or sexual attraction is often missing between these two. Leo is a fire sign and Virgo earth, but their relationship is governed by a mixture of air and water, elements here implying lighter and less passionate or earthy feelings. The couple is often interested in intellectual, aesthetic or spiritual matters, then, and their love affairs and marriages, although highly empathic, are apt to be more platonic than sensuous. Virgo II's are often ambivalent about Leo I aggression, being alternately attracted to and repelled by it, and Leo I's find their Virgo II partners intriguing but ultimately a bit negative and critical.

Friendships here have their ups and downs. Both partners must feel free to go their separate ways, which generally means that Virgo II's have to be allowed to withdraw somewhat from the world and Leo I's to advance toward it. Parent-child relationships can demonstrate great sensitivity and understanding despite tremendous temperamental differences. No matter which of the two is the parent and which the child, they will respect each other's attitudes even when they don't sympathize with them. Working relationships, especially co-worker matchups, are ineffective unless the pair can settle their personal differences.

ADVICE: Appreciate things as they are. Not everything has to be unusual. The bizarre is only one element of life. Try to pay attention to practical details.

THE WEEK OF AUTHORITY
LEO I

September 11–18

THE WEEK OF THE LITERALIST
VIRGO III

Bringing Truth to Light

Both Leo I's and Virgo III's tend to be more concerned with principles and ideas than with people, and when they come together they often concentrate on bringing the truth to light—facts that have been hidden, or opinions that have been hushed up, in service of some less-than-ethical intent. Leo I–Virgo III couples are potential crusaders. Truth and honesty are more important to them than anything else, an uncompromising stance that sometimes prevents them from taking people's feelings into account, so that they can step on some sensitive toenails—particularly each other's. Both are strong-headed, and neither is at all shy about voicing his or her opinions. Things will run smoothly as long as they believe in the same ideas; expect clashes, however, should they disagree. Also, the truths they reveal often have more to do with the underlying issues of their own relationship than with any abstract ideals.

Despite their concern for the truth, in their love affairs and friendships these partners may have little interest in uncovering disturbing facts about each other, especially when things are going well. During times of conflict, however, they are likely to dig deeper, revealing weaknesses and indiscretions in each other to be used as ammunition. Alternately ignoring and investigating the truth may become a typical pattern here. In marriage and career involvements, however, the avenging-angel side of the relationship is likely to emerge unequivocally. The partners will not rest until inequities are addressed and falsehoods exposed. Their particular dislike for pretension and privilege in the wealthy or powerful may lead them to try to humble the mighty. There is an undeniable Robin Hood-type feeling here, a sense of righting society's wrongs and defending the underdog.

Long-kept family secrets may hold a special fascination for Leo I–Virgo III relatives. Investigating such hidden areas is typical here, but so is having the good sense not to reveal them if their exposure could harm the family group. Even so, these two must beware of the temptation to use such facts to further their own selfish interests through subtle emotional blackmail.

ADVICE: Don't always be sticking your nose in other people's business. Remember that curiosity killed the cat. Tend to your own problems. Cultivate kindness.

Yearning for the Beyond

At the heart of this relationship may lie stunning realizations and aesthetic visions. These imaginings can be heavenly or hellish in nature and can deal with either time future or time past; in either case, the relationship may be obsessed with science fiction, spirituality, quest—in short, a yearning for the beyond. These partners want to surpass the normal bounds of time and space. The urge to escape, but also to explore the possibilities of many planes of existence, is undeniable here. Both the Leo I adventuresome side and the Virgo-Libra need to seek ever newer and more aesthetic experiences are activated in this matchup. Leo I's may prove to be powerful figures for Virgo-Libras, being people on whom they can depend.

Love affairs between these two can be highly romantic, in ways that go well beyond carnal desire. Life can be a glorious adventure for this pair. Disillusion lurks just around the corner, however, for partners too carried away by idealism. Whether as friends, lovers, mates, parents or teachers, Leo I's and Virgo-Libras often put each other on pedestals, a tendency that may turn out to be a setup for disappointment when the god-like object of their worship turns out to be actually all too human, and fallible. A great challenge of this relationship is for the partners to see each other as they really are, stripped bare of psychological projections and expectations.

Working relationships between Leo I's and Virgo-Libras must be strongly grounded. Otherwise fantasy will lead to unreality, unreality to impracticality and unworkability, and unworkability to failure. One or both of the partners can often find the necessary objectivity and pragmatism within themselves, but if they are to be successful they must have the strength to back off from their exalted vision of their relationship and to view matters with a cold eye.

ADVICE: Ground yourself in the here and now, but reach for the stars. Cultivate practical skills. Don't overlook what is right in front of you.

 LEO I

September 25–October 2

THE WEEK OF THE PERFECTIONIST
 LIBRA I

Sensible Elegance

This relationship could prove a very comfortable fit for its partners, each enjoying different aspects of it for different reasons. Together this pair will take an orderly, reasoned and structured approach to just about everything. This will satisfy the Libra I need for attention to detail and will delight Leo I's, who always have to have a system to fall back on. In addition, the relationship grounds and gives form to the more excitable and aspiring aspects of both the Leo I and the Libra I characters.

No matter how romantic a love affair between a Leo I and a Libra I may be, it always has a strongly sensible streak running through it that will rarely allow it to be dominated by self-destructive or unrealistic impulses. The romanticism here is elegant, polished and highly nuanced. Perhaps a tad too self-conscious as a pair, Leo I–Libra I lovers and mates are always aware of their effect on other people. They will work carefully on polishing their style, dress, movement and speech before appearing together in public.

As friends, Leo I's and Libra I's can make strict demands on each other to keep their relationship on a high plane. Quality rather than quantity is important here. This may make it unnecessary for the partners to see each other that often: when they do, it really counts. Co-workers in this combination are similarly dedicated to producing quality work and will not hesitate to scrap efforts not up to their standards, no matter how much labor has gone into them. As business partners or company executives, these two may put each other and those working for them under excessive stress, since they rarely let up in their intense expectation of total involvement.

Parent-child relationships in this combination can be unmercifully demanding, but the two will also find time to relax and be proud of each other. It is quite possible for such pairs to work on artistic, commercial or playful pursuits together and to achieve results of high quality and interest.

ADVICE: Without sacrificing quality, let up a bit in your demands. Be more natural and less self-conscious. Let things happen as they will.

THE WEEK OF SOCIETY
 LIBRA II

A Locus Within

This can be an inspiring combination in which the partners share a profound emotional contact. Their relationship encourages them to become more introspective, and they may in fact help each other to explore their own inner lives. The psychological astuteness of Libra II's, and their nonthreatening and understanding manner, may well show Leo I's how to slow down a bit in their external striving and to know themselves better and more deeply. Likewise, impressed by the willpower and determination of Leo I's, wiser Libra II's will seek a true locus of strength and determination within, knowing that simply trying to imitate the outwardly directed stance of Leo I's would do little good.

Love affairs in this combination can be highly emotional, yet seldom in an outwardly expressive way. When these partners are together, the magic chemistry of their relationship relieves them of their social and career responsibilities, allowing them to relax in the safety of mutual empathy. In short, these two feel comfortable, safe and trusting with each other. Such attitudes bode well for marriage. The only real problem here is whether the pair are willing to take on that responsibility, a question that may arouse indecision.

In work and family relationships this pair don't always see eye to eye. To Libra II employees or children, the attitudes of Leo I bosses or parents often seem didactic and rigid, while Leo I's are disturbed by Libra II indecision. Should Libra II's be in the driver's seat, they may have difficulty standing up to the powerful and often rebellious stance of a dissatisfied Leo I employee or child. Friendships between these two can be great fun but may also stir up feelings that unaccountably disturb both partners from time to time. This phenomenon may suggest a need to settle and resolve deeper issues.

ADVICE: Search inside. Encounter your emotions and go beyond them. Find the path that is uniquely yours. Proceed fearlessly and with conviction.

LIBRA III

Extroversion Belied

These two strong-willed personalities will be more than a match for each other. The heart of their relationship is often hidden: apparently extroverted as individuals, they may actually be taken up in highly personal endeavors that they find difficult to communicate to anyone but each other. Possessed of a vision they cannot share, the pair may seem distracted to other people, who will often misunderstand their intentions and actions. Although Leo I's are highly dominant, they don't always feel comfortable as leaders, and the Libra III is more likely to run the relationship. This combination is explosive, combining the fiery nature of Leo with the airy makeup of Libra. Yet the relationship is ruled by earth, an element in this case connoting sensuousness, physical pleasure and also stubbornness.

Passions may run high in love affairs and marriages, which may also be strongly sensual. Yet they are seldom high in self-understanding and awareness. Neither of these partners is too interested in investing time or patience in recognizing their partner's nonsexual needs. Strangely enough, these two, who face so many challenges squarely, may be ill prepared to cope with the major issues of their own relationship.

As friends, Leo I's and Libra III's are well suited to each other. Since both are allergic to dependent types, they will appreciate each other's self-sufficiency. Power struggles are rare here. Libra III's may find in their Leo I partner a loyal figure they can depend on or even lean on in times of need. These friends often find themselves at the center of social, school or family groups, where they exert a grounding and directing influence. As co-workers, similarly, they can function as the dynamo driving a department.

Conflicts often abound in parent-child and sibling matchups in this combination. Here both partners' extroverted sides lead to flamboyant displays of temperament, which may point to a lack of self-awareness. The pair will benefit from staying calm and thinking through their problems together.

ADVICE: Try to fathom your own mysteries. Pay attention to feelings. Take the time to understand. Find the calm at the eye of the tornado.

THE CUSP OF DRAMA & CRITICISM
LIBRA-SCORPIO CUSP

Sensitivity to Criticism

This relationship is often based in a profession or career, where it may be a winning combination. But it can leave a lot to be desired in the personal realm: it tends to make its partners hypersensitive, and since they are both already highly critical, their pairing can amount to a prescription for pain. Even outside this relationship, Leo I's are extremely sensitive to criticism, an Achilles' heel that Libra-Scorpios will target when challenged or hurt. Both partners tend to be demanding of each other, a trait that can be constructive at work or in marriage but will put a lot of stress on less structured kinds of comradeship.

In friendships, love affairs and sibling matchups, Leo I's and Libra-Scorpios often get lost in their own little world. As lovers they could give their sexuality too much importance in the relationship, generating problems rather than pleasure. Their marriages may well be powered by an idea, ideology or religious belief, areas that let them invest their emotions in some kind of group activity rather than reserving them for their personal lives. A tendency to go off the deep end is undeniable here. The couple must be careful not to lose sight of their domestic life together, particularly if they have children.

As friends these two will compete with each other, so that their relationship can help them try to better their own personal best. One can imagine that it might also cause them some hurt feelings if begun during adolescence. As siblings Leo I's and Libra-Scorpios often escape into fantasy, a protective mechanism against unkind or misunderstanding parental attitudes.

It is as colleagues that these two not only demand but usually get the best of which their relationship is capable. Both partners are open to investing all their energy in their projects, knowing beforehand that their endeavors will benefit all concerned. They are not one of those teams who need to operate on their own, as an entrepreneurial or business partnership; they can function very effectively within a group.

ADVICE: Let up a bit in your demands. Be less critical of yourself and more critical of your ideas. Build emotional ties. Pay more attention to personal needs.

THE WEEK OF INTENSITY
SCORPIO I

All or Not at All

Leo I's and Scorpio I's share a belief in being truthful no matter what. Their relationship synergistically increases this quality, which may well become its core focus. Things aren't too easy between these two, since both tend to be demanding and believe in giving their projects their all—or not at all. At the same time, they often see the truth as something relative, rather than an absolute written in stone. For the most part, however, both partners agree that honesty, integrity, ethical behavior and sticking to the facts as much as possible are of paramount importance.

Since Leo I and Scorpio I are square to each other in the zodiac (that is, at 90°), astrology predicts friction and conflict in their relationship. And given that these two are some of the most stubborn individuals of the year, friction is indeed a certainty. But friction can also mean passion. Although Leo is a fire sign and Scorpio water, the Leo I–Scorpio I relationship is governed by earth, an element here connoting a strong physical connection. Sexuality is usually important in this relationship. In love affairs, honesty continues to play its part, being combined with passionate and erotic intensity. Marriages may be no less passionate than love affairs but are certainly more demanding in terms of responsibilities.

Leo I–Scorpio I friendships can be very close. Despite disagreements and emotional upset, especially because of their honesty, these two usually have a great deal of respect for each other and can count on each other in times of trouble. As much as they hate to admit it, both partners will occasionally be forced to take personal or mitigating considerations into account and to allow for lapses in truthfulness, even in themselves.

Seemingly insurmountable difficulties may arise in parent-child and co-worker matchups, but these can also be challenges to break down or overcome barriers. Leo I pride and Scorpio I perfectionism may have to be sacrificed at times to hammer out compromises; but once an issue has been settled or agreed upon, partners will generally keep their word faithfully.

ADVICE: Be more human in applying standards of truth. Forgive and forget. Cultivate empathy. Beware of rigidity. Bend with the wind.

THE WEEK OF DEPTH
SCORPIO II

Phoenix Rising

This relationship may be likened to the flame that consumes the phoenix and then summons it forth from the ashes. Metamorphosis, both of the partners and of the relationship itself, is characteristic here. This is especially true during those fateful periods in the lives of its partners when they reach a crossroads or dead end. At this point the magic of rebirth emerges, propelling both them and their relationship to a higher level. A spiritual or developmental transformation at the individual or personal level is implied here, but the rejuvenation of a company or family may also occur.

Leo I fire can really bring Scorpio II water to the boil in love affairs. The steam that results is blistering in its heat and can exert an irresistible pressure on both partners. Their already strong sexual drives are amplified by the relationship's synergy, raising their lovemaking to new heights. Still, unless they work to let the relationship grow and change, it may get old, and they may both tire of its predictability. Scorpio II's will have the greatest tendency to hang in there. Without periodic renewal, however, the relationship will not be what either partner really needs.

Sibling matchups are generally close and can act as the family's linchpin, or else as the force that propels it through periods of major change. In the course of such changes the sibling relationship may itself undergo a transformation or may act as a catalyst, advancing the chemical reaction in the family without being significantly changed itself. In the workplace, executives in this combination sometimes battle it out for the top spot, but collaborate later on with increased respect. Co-workers may not be able to spend long periods of time in each other's presence without getting itchy and irritable—they will have to work on establishing a modus vivendi. Adversarial relationships between these two can be frighteningly violent, with Leo I's generally initiating the conflict and Scorpio II's springing from a defensive posture into attack mode.

ADVICE: Keep violent impulses under control, but blow off steam occasionally. In the emotional sphere, act wisely. Keep your love alive.

July 26–August 2

THE WEEK OF AUTHORITY
LEO I

November 12–18

THE WEEK OF CHARM
SCORPIO III

Fitting and Proper

There is often a feeling of rightness about this relationship, a sense that it has achieved a certain balance and appropriateness. The partners generally have a feeling for kairos (the right time for action); they will seldom have to strain to achieve their goals but can ride the wave of inevitability and kismet. Such cosmic surfing shows the relationship's ability to "hook into the Force," whether of earthly, stellar or divine origin. Although Leo and Scorpio are fire and water signs, respectively, the Leo I–Scorpio III relationship is ruled by earth and air, the other two elements, here signifying an easy balance between the ethereal and physical poles of existence.

The relationship often fosters a need for justice and for righting wrongs. Whether it emerges at home, at work or in the social sphere, it will justify its own existence by working to bring everyone it encounters their just rewards or desserts, including the partners themselves. One result is that it can be seen as giving with one hand and chastising with the other, particularly when it is a marriage or a career or family matchup. If tendencies to be judgmental and to claim infallibility here are not kept under control, the relationship may wind up dispelling the atmosphere of fairness it sets out to create.

Friendships between Leo I's and Scorpio III's are less common than rivalries or outright enmities. If these two don't like each other, they will usually make no bones about it, even in the presence of others. They will also deal in short order with any group or individual who desecrates beauty or undermines harmony.

As enemies, these two will quite likely give no quarter and take no prisoners, whether in intellectual, emotional, physical or even spiritual or religious combat with each other. Such are the more uncompromising aspects of this relationship that it will face few problems with vagueness, indecision or miscommunication.

ADVICE: Don't try to play god. Be more open and forgiving. Beware of succumbing to the dark side. Power may have to be relinquished. Foster kindness.

THE CUSP OF REVOLUTION
SCORPIO-SAGITTARIUS CUSP

Positive and Upbeat

These two are capable of evolving fresh and new ideas. Their relationship usually focuses on following its intuitions and hunches, especially in sniffing out what could be the sweet smell of success. Together they usually concentrate on the positive and upbeat side of life, and if success is not forthcoming, they waste little or no energy on detailed analyses of failure—in fact, they've probably already moved on to something new, provocative and exciting. Scorpio-Sagittarians are usually fairly realistic, but their relationships with Leo I's are generally optimistic. There is little room here for nagging or negative criticism.

Romantic and marital matchups between these two sometimes emphasize youthfulness by pairing partners of different generations. Rather than youth admiring old age here, the older partner, whether Leo I or Scorpio-Sagittarius, values the freshness and vitality of the younger one. The tragedy of such matchups is apparent when the older partner grows ill or incapacitated or the younger member becomes restive and wants to roam. All such relationships should stress the value of age and maturity equally with that of youth and innocence. Married couples in this combination may exhibit a special interest in children and small pets, whether their own or other people's. In the family, this is a natural combination for grandparents and grandchildren, or for older aunts or uncles and younger nieces or nephews. True intergenerational sharing is possible in such cases.

Friendships between Leo I's and Scorpio-Sagittarians can be lighthearted but will have an underlying air of purpose. These two rarely give themselves over to the pursuit of entertainment and pleasure only—they are likely to put their innovative talents in the service of some sort of larger group, such as a club or their own social circle. Working relationships between these two are seldom successful except at the highest executive levels, where innovation may be most appreciated.

ADVICE: Encourage intergenerational understanding. Respect age differences. New wine is not always the best wine. Exercise a bit more patience.

Molten Feelings

Communication between these two is usually swift and direct. Both for themselves and for others, their relationship can be extremely demanding, putting a particular stress on getting the job done as well as possible. Each partner brings out the other's perfectionist side. They are both normally impulsive, but here the relationship's wisdom kicks in, creating a feeling that things must be planned before being attempted. The slogan in this respect might well be a familiar rule of carpentry: "Measure twice, cut once." Both Leo and Sagittarius are fire signs, but the Leo I–Sagittarius I relationship is ruled by air, emphasizing mental concentration and willpower. Leo I and Sagittarius I are trine to each other (120° apart) in the zodiac, so that traditional astrology would predict a comfortable connection between them; but this fiery relationship can be fiercely competitive.

Passionate love affairs are not uncommon between these two. In bed things can get pretty wild, but such molten feelings can burn out over time. The hair-trigger temper of Sagittarius I's and the blockbuster energies of Leo I's can also collide and cause blowups. When things turn cold between these two, they may sometimes continue as friends at a lower emotional level. In marriage, Leo I and Sagittarius I honor and honesty stand them in good stead, but they can make excessive demands on their children and other family members. Learning to make fewer demands and lowering their perfectionist expectations will be essential if they are to maintain a modicum of domestic tranquillity. This can be a classic friendship. Warmth and understanding radiate between these two—at least when they are getting along. But competition over career matters, shared love objects, money or a host of other concerns can disrupt harmony at any point, turning the relationship into a clash of wills. Leo I parents are always fiercely protective of their children, but here this trait can manifest in expectations that are just too high, making Sagittarius I offspring rebel. Sibling and co-worker matchups are unpredictable; constancy in day-to-day interactions is difficult for this pair.

ADVICE: Even out your feelings. Seek moderation in daily life. Beware of burnout and overload. Indulge your warm and hedonistic side. Relax.

THE WEEK OF THE ORIGINATOR

Securing Success

Immature power-struggles may break out in this combination from time to time as these two compete for the spotlight. Since this problem can be eliminated when they work together to secure worldly success for themselves as a duo, partnerships of all types, including marital and professional, are often beneficial here. In personal relationships, Leo I's have a calming effect on the excessive aspects of the Sagittarius II personality, guiding this partner's energies in a more constructive direction. Sagittarius II's, for their part, may be inspiring for Leo I's.

Love affairs in this combination can be idealistic yet also selfish. The partners can become excessively hungry for attention from each other, in which case resentments inevitably arise over who is more (or less) interested in whom. It is not uncommon for childish rivalries to break out for the attention of a third person, often a mutual friend. Marriages are not particularly recommended here, not because the couple are incompatible but because they may be unable to achieve the maturity and balance necessary for them to create a peaceful domestic setting together, let alone raise children. Career connections can develop between spouses, however, providing an outlet that will direct attention away from problems at home.

Friendships between these two can be extremely supportive and understanding. Should they launch a concerted effort to make a go of it in a social, sport or business enterprise, they often succeed, but they are better at initiating a project than at running one day-to-day. Sibling relationships, especially of the same sex, are very close, despite the pair's differences: Leo I's usually value education through schooling, Sagittarius II's education through life experience. These matchups are usually important in inspiring the family and moving it forward. Leo I–Sagittarius II co-workers tend to rebel against unfair treatment and to push for the rights of their colleagues. They may set themselves up as the group representative in negotiations with management.

ADVICE: Work at self-sufficiency. Don't be so needy of approval. Don't waste your energy on rivalry and rebellion. Seek constructive goals.

Doing the Dance

These two dominating personalities generally find themselves interacting most successfully in the kind of social setting that stresses knowing how to play the game. Whether they are partners or rivals, they will do their dance with each other according to well-established rules of conduct. Strategic thinking plays its part in this relationship, for both Leo I and Sagittarius III enjoy being able to bounce ideas about how to deal with others off a serious and knowledgeable partner. Sagittarius III's can get a bit serious sometimes, and their darker moods may weigh heavily on Leo I's. On the other hand, they themselves may sometimes find Leo I's a bit impetuous and premature in their judgments and actions.

Privacy is important in Leo I–Sagittarius III love affairs, which nevertheless tend to be quite involved with family and friends. Parties, outings and social gatherings of all types attract these two, who are likely to throw themselves into these events rather than be found standing on the sidelines. This kind of active social participation usually bodes well for the relationship's longevity, for if left alone too long, this couple may clash and fall into power struggles. Marriages specialize in advising other people and guiding them through difficult periods with compassion and understanding.

Parent-child relationships in this combination can be extremely problematic and trying. Leo I children often turn to authority figures other than their parents, who can be extremely intolerant of their children's need to think for themselves. When the relationship manifests among either friends and business partners or rivals and opponents, it will have its ups and downs, with friends sometimes acting hostile and competitors sometimes making friendly gestures. The pair respect each other, but more because they recognize each other's power than because they really acknowledge each other on a human level. Each of them knows well the other partner's ability to inflict pain.

ADVICE: Reach agreement whenever possible. Don't waste time and energy in heavy disputes. Learn the art of compromise. Develop lasting values.

Dropping Bad Habits

The theme of this relationship has to do with moving from the past toward the future. Of course, development and evolution are implied here, but also both the passage from the old to the new and the continuance of tradition, both the dropping of bad habits and the streamlining of out-of-date approaches. As individuals, Leo I's and Sagittarius-Capricorns have both a strongly traditional side and modern thoughts that cry out to be recognized. They generally rely on intuition to know how much dead wood has to be cut away and what direction a family or business should take.

Love affairs in this combination may prove difficult. Sagittarius-Capricorns require their partners to have plenty of patience and an abiding interest in their problems and struggles, whereas Leo I's need an appreciative audience and freedom from heavy moods and negativity. The relationship rarely meets all these needs, often resulting in frustration and a desire to escape.

In marriages and career matchups, Leo I's and Sagittarius-Capricorns will want the benefits of both conventional and more forward-looking approaches. Together they will want to keep up with all the latest trends and even start some new ones, but they have the wisdom to build on past efforts, analyzing them in order to discover their weaknesses and their strengths. Leo I's will sometimes be put off by Sagittarius-Capricorn silence, often interpreting it as criticism or disapproval; Sagittarius-Capricorns will often find Leo I's overaggressive and will resent their claimed omniscience. But they will also appreciate the relationship's openness to their unusual ideas, and should these two overcome their personal differences, their relationship stands a good chance of succeeding. At its best, this is a pioneering duo capable of forwarding the aspirations of whatever group it represents. Friendships are likely to be difficult, polarizing Leo I extroversion and Sagittarius-Capricorn introversion. In parent-child relationships in this combination, the partners are likely to have problems communicating openly with each other and developing deep tolerance and understanding.

ADVICE: Open up avenues of communication. Try to bridge gaps and overcome differences. Develop empathy. Increase personal understanding.

An Escape from Reality

One might expect this combination of powerful personalities to be extremely heavy, but it is often the opposite, having a very theatrical quality—these partners act out their fantasies by projecting them onto each other. The relationship also has a tendency to flee from life's pressing realities, so that its partners may, for example, turn to drug use. Yet the matchup is not without ambition, and in fact both of these individuals have a great deal of drive. One finds a commitment to style in whatever they do. Combined with their desire to fulfill their fantasies, this produces a sometimes excessive flamboyance. This pair will probably ruffle quite a few feathers. Leo I and Capricorn I are in quincunx aspect to each other in the zodiac (lying 150° apart), which exerts a pressure to make them a somewhat unstable pair, underlining their tendency toward eccentricity.

Love affairs can be exciting but remarkably cool. A certain objectivity takes the place of deep passion and emotional exploration. The strong bursts of energy that usually emanate from Leo I and Capricorn I personalities somehow miss the mark in these relationships, which are almost ineffectual at times. Yet marriages can work here if the partners make themselves and each other uphold their mutual responsibilities. More often than not, they will be playful with each other, but they can be rather indolent when it comes to cleaning up or looking after the kids.

Working relationships are undermined by unserious attitudes and interpersonal instabilities. Pairs of friends and of siblings are likely to have a great old time, as long as not too much is expected of them—they will rarely develop deep bonds of understanding. Parent-child relationships generally bring out the heavier side of Leo I's and Capricorn I's, often resulting in a dictatorial parent and a rebellious child, especially when it is the Capricorn I who is the parent.

ADVICE: Try facing up to the truth. Escaping can be pleasant but often unproductive. Build a firm basis for your life. Coordinate energies.

 CAPRICORN II

Head to Head

Fortunately or unfortunately, there is no way around the power issues in this relationship. There seem to be only two alternatives for this pair: they either go head to head with each other or join forces in a drive to the top. Given that power is the focus here, Leo I's and Capricorn II's would seem to have little choice but to express the more ambitious and aggressive sides of their personalities. It is usually the Capricorn II's who win out, since these personalities generally don't even recognize defeat, let alone admit it. Leo I's, on the other hand, are often discouraged by a major setback or a series of smaller ones. This couple may ultimately need to learn the spiritual lesson that perhaps the greatest power lies in resisting ego drives and developing love, understanding, acceptance and kindness. Learning this lesson can be more rewarding than money, career success or triumphing over an opponent.

Love affairs here are too often more concerned with who has the upper hand than with real feeling. Leo I's and Capricorn II's may squander what love they have by transmuting it into a desire to control and dominate. Marriages are happiest when the partners share duties equally and leave each other alone much of the rest of the time.

Friendships may not work out at all for this matchup, not, at least, the kind based on sheer amicability and pleasure-loving pursuits. Terrible struggles can occur in parent-child relationships, whichever partner is the parent; both partners may eventually learn that at some point (usually before the parent simply leaves the room) it is in their own best interest to come to terms with each other. Career matchups are tricky, for Leo I's and Capricorn II's facing each other at the same level in a hierarchy may expend too much effort keeping each other down and not enough working together to make group efforts a success. Even when they do manage to push the company forward, they may do so for selfish reasons.

ADVICE: Examine your values. Take time off and think about what you are doing. Cultivate spiritual values. Pay attention to the feelings of others.

THE WEEK OF DOMINANCE
CAPRICORN III

Role Model

These two share a frankness and a facility of the mind that will surely hold their relationship together—sometimes past the point of usefulness. Still, they will appreciate the combination's honesty, which will be of a kind they experience with few others. They are both strong and dominating people, and one would expect their matchup to be fraught with difficulty, but they are in fact quite capable of setting aside their power struggles in order to learn from each other. In this sense, each is the other's role model. Each one admires and learns from the other's strengths. They are happy to pit themselves as a unit against the world, using their relationship's strategizing skills to achieve their joint aims. Capricorn III's are prone to idealize someone they know, and Leo I's may well be the one they pick. Lacking a certain self-confidence, they may see a Leo I as the epitome of the successful and self-assured person they themselves would like to be some day.

Love between these two is exceedingly complex. Because Capricorn III's tend to idolize their Leo I lovers, they cede the upper hand in the relationship to them, at least temporarily. In doing so they may actually be unknowingly setting up the Leo I for a fall from grace in which he or she is totally rejected, having failed to live up to an image of perfection. Marriages are not particularly recommended unless they can strike a more equal balance of power, or unless the couple share specific worldly ambitions.

In teacher-student, boss-employee and parent-child relationships, Leo I's exert a marked influence on their partner but generally also understand how desperately Capricorn III's need to become their own person. A sensitive and understanding Leo I will guide a Capricorn III in the direction of ever-increasing responsibility. Care should be taken, however, to control the frankness that is typical of the relationship. Needless to say, an unaware or more brutal Leo I attitude can leave lifelong scars in the Capricorn III psyche.

ADVICE: Scale back expectations. Even out the power structure. Beware of idolization and worship. Keep criticism from being unduly negative.

THE CUSP OF MYSTERY & IMAGINATION
CAPRICORN-AQUARIUS CUSP

Extraordinary Chemistry

This relationship is one of the classics in the whole year for successful professional or marital partnerships. No matter how theoretical, idealistic or imaginative Leo I's and Capricorn-Aquarians may be as individuals, together they come down to earth with a bang. Their relationship brings out in them a practical and sensuous side of which neither may previously have been aware. In this respect the chemistry between them is quite extraordinary. Leo I's and Capricorn-Aquarians may fall in love at first sight or develop their relationship slowly and surely, but in either case their matchup has staying power over the years, and in retrospect may be viewed as a wonder that was simply meant to be.

Love, marital and professional pairings entail the danger that the partners, no matter how powerful individually, may submerge or lose their identities in the relationship. In this sense the matchup's very success may be its undoing. Should either person die, or be lost to the other through circumstance, extreme grief and feelings of deprivation or anger may prove debilitating—left alone, these partners may feel that their life is over, or that they cannot continue. While the relationship is at its height, then, great care should be taken to preserve individual prerogatives, so that the partners do not become totally wrapped up in the relationship's protective cloak.

Sibling matchups and friendships between Leo I's and Capricorn-Aquarians often stand a better chance of remaining objective. There may, in fact, be little interest on either side in elevating the relationship to a position of great importance. At the same time, it should not be taken for granted that easy and pleasurable attitudes will always prevail here. Assuming responsibility and bringing an element of hard work to the relationship will often ground it and lend it more permanence and satisfaction.

ADVICE: Maintain individuality. Never take good feelings for granted. Hard work is necessary. Don't be self-sacrificing. Selfishness can be healthy, too.

THE WEEK OF GENIUS
AQUARIUS I

An Inquiring Spirit

This relationship manifests a powerful attention to detail and to keeping wayward elements under control. Leo I and Aquarius I lie directly opposite each other in the zodiac, so that traditional astrology predicts difficulties and conflicts for this combination, but the intensity they generate can often be made to serve useful ends. Leo is a fire sign and Aquarius air, but the Leo I–Aquarius I relationship is ruled by water, an element that in this context asserts emotional and free-flowing energies. Leo I's are amazed at the natural intelligence of Aquarius I's and will occasionally feel some resentment that their partner has to work less hard than they do to acquire knowledge. Aquarius I's, on the other hand, may depend heavily on the steadfast strength of Leo I's, and on their ability to handle almost any situation that arises. Compensating for each other's weak spots is one of this relationship's greatest talents.

Love affairs between these two are not especially recommended. Aquarius I's can rarely supply the understanding and patience that Leo I's need, yet will expect Leo I's to be very attentive to them—a trait that may naturally arouse resentment. Marriages are more apt to be successful. Hard-working Leo I's will find the light, enthusiastic mood of Aquarius I's pleasant to come home to, and Aquarius I's will appreciate the capable and dependable shoulder that Leo I's always offer them to lean on.

Friendships and sibling relationships are challenge-oriented, ready for adventure at almost any moment. Spontaneous and lively, these companions will spur each other on to new heights of achievement. Career matchups can be especially outstanding: no subject is off limits to the relationship's insatiably inquiring spirit. Research and development projects are particularly suitable for them. Financial matters are best left to Leo I's, or to a good adviser, since this area is not a traditional Aquarius I strength.

ADVICE: Spend time and energy on personal matters. Cultivate patience and understanding. Affection shows you care. Even you have limitations.

THE WEEK OF YOUTH & EASE
AQUARIUS II

Deepening Effect

To say that these two don't always see eye to eye would be an understatement. This relationship arouses deep feelings, and learning how to channel them in the right direction may be the overwhelming challenge here. Destructive and even hurtful tendencies emerge in the emotional realm, but at the same time the relationship can exhibit great pride in its partners' accomplishments. Leo I Authority does not always take a favorable view of Aquarius II Youth and Ease. Although Leo is a fire sign and Aquarius air, this relationship is governed by water, here betokening emotional expression and upset.

In friendships and love affairs, Leo I's can be enchanted by the easy energies of Aquarius II's, who will, in turn, be gratified to have aroused and satisfied this partner's drives, both sexual and other. The relationship's impulse toward deeper emotions and intensity comes into play in the likelihood that Leo I's will urge their partners to dig a bit further into themselves; Aquarius II's are in some circumstances capable of forsaking certain superficial attitudes of theirs and becoming more serious about emotional matters, and this may be one of those occasions. They will find the task hard at first, but ultimately rewarding. In Leo I–Aquarius II marriages, having fun has a high priority, but so does fulfilling family responsibilities.

Father-son and mother-daughter relationships in which the Leo I is the parent can fulfill the classic scenario for intergenerational conflict. These parents should not expect obedience and respect for their authority. If they are unwilling to accept their Aquarius II child as an independent, free-thinking individual, there will be room for little but strife. More understanding Leo I parents will let their children go their own way, and won't load them down with responsibilities that will be difficult or impossible for them to handle. The rewards for such wisdom can be felt when Aquarius II children, of their own free will, come to Leo I parents to ask advice. In the workplace, differences in approach and temperament probably doom the matchup to bickering and conflict.

ADVICE: Allow emotional interaction to deepen. Learn to control outbursts. Be patient and act intelligently. Have fun, but realize the value of serious expression.

THE WEEK OF ACCEPTANCE

A Destiny of Experience

This relationship will put its partners through a series of formative or educational experiences that can have a determining effect on their lives. The relationship takes a practical approach, weighing all actions before making a decision. Its structure is solid. The partners' mutual enjoyment of food, wine, art and other sensuous pleasures is certainly a strength, but the relationship's challenge will be to strive for more metaphysical, spiritual or universal goals. Even so, the relationship can be great fun for both partners, and can feature extremely close bonds of understanding and sharing.

In matters of love, the relationship's physical side is likely to be more off than on—strong sexual attraction is not the rule here. Leo I's often come on too strong for the tastes of Aquarius III's, who may, for their part, impress their partner as erratic and emotionally volatile. Marriages can be settled and calm but rarely have a thirst for mutual experience (which is, however, a characteristic of friendships in this combination). Should either partner be a recognized teacher or other authority, the relationship is likely to succeed in moving in a more philosophical or spiritual direction.

As friends and schoolmates, Leo I's and Aquarius III's will seek to do as much as possible together, at times visiting each other so often that they practically live together. Telephone, e-mail, Internet chat—nothing will satisfy their desire for contact with each other. These close bonds will often continue into early adulthood before being loosened by other commitments or logistical realities. They also characterize siblings in this combination, so that they may often be taken for friends.

Leo I–Aquarius III co-workers function well as a team, generally trying to learn more about their profession and to advance together in the company hierarchy. More polarized matchups, such as boss-employee or parent-child, often arouse personal animosities that create problems for the organization or family of which they form a part.

ADVICE: Look a bit beyond the here and now. Keep an eye on your physical condition. Beware of obsessions. Are you creating problems for others?

THE CUSP OF SENSITIVITY
AQUARIUS-PISCES CUSP

Palpable Magnetism

Together these two know how to charm the pants off people. Part of the reason their relationship is so magnetic is its deep understanding of what others want. But people are also just plain attracted to them because of the chemistry between them, which is magnetic itself, and palpable. Extremely up-to-date, they can sense coming trends and even help create them, whether working professionally or within a social or family circle. Among other things, this will make them, for example, infallible gift buyers—anyone getting a present from them will be proud to have received such a thing. With salesmanship like this, the pair can be successful at anything they do.

Leo I–Aquarius-Pisces love affairs can be deeply passionate, but the couple also risk becoming highly dependent on each other, or even falling into sex and love addictions. Should these habit-forming tendencies extend to drug use, they could prove deadly. Because magnetic desire plays such a powerful role here, both partners must be careful to stay somewhat objective and guard against excessive behavior.

Marriages and working relationships are especially favored here. At work, it is often Aquarius-Pisces who first attract the attention of superiors or potential clients, but this is in part because Leo I's have already lent them the emotional support they need to gain self-confidence. This support can also be financial and moral. Aquarius-Pisces, for their part, can help their Leo I mates and partners to discover their inner sensitivity, and to express their feelings more easily.

Friends and siblings in this combination can be real charmers as a duo, but generally see through each other's manipulative ploys well enough to view them with a cold eye. In fact, the reality factor here can be a bit too high, keeping the partners from expressing their true feelings for fear of playing the fool.

ADVICE: You know what others want, but do you know what you need? Don't be afraid to show your feelings. Beware of all addictive drugs.

February 23–March 2

THE WEEK OF SPIRIT
PISCES I

Being Oneself

The hallmark of this relationship is unaffected and natural behavior. There is little need here to smooth over differences or even to reconcile opposing points of view, for the relationship fosters understanding and acceptance. Indeed, it usually only imposes a single demand and law: be yourself. Generally speaking, these two trust each other. Each knows where the other stands, and each respects the other for doing so. Leo I and Pisces I lie in quincunx aspect to each other in the zodiac (150° apart), a position susceptible to instability, but in this relationship any uncertainty often translates into excitement and the thrill of the unknown.

Love affairs and marriages between these two can be quite unusual. Leo I's habitually pursue internal rather than external goals, seeking to realize purely personal goals or to better their own best; Pisces I's are likely to assent and join them in this tendency. As a couple, then, they may give more priority to the interior creative life than to physical or sexual expression. Not that earthy elements are absent—in fact, the Leo I–Pisces I matchup is ruled by earth (even though Leo is a fire sign and Pisces water), and emphasizes a grounded and practical approach to life. But sensuous rather than sexual experience is usually stressed here, and the pleasures these two may well go for grow less out of physical contact than out of their mutual love of food, music, art and creature comforts.

Career relationships in this combination work out best when the pair's idealism and positive attitudes are given full rein. Routine, unimaginative or restrictive jobs are not recommended for these two. Parent-child and sibling matchups stress openness and, often, share a love of exploring or luxuriating in beautiful natural surroundings. Leo I–Pisces I friendships revel in the joys of life, but can show great compassion for suffering and may try to help the disadvantaged, perhaps through volunteer work in social, religious or community service.

ADVICE: Be a bit tougher. Positive criticism can help. Push yourself a bit more. Even the most natural and comfortable behavior can be refined and better channeled.

March 3–10

THE WEEK OF THE LONER
PISCES II

Attraction and Repulsion

This matchup has a peculiar effect on its partners: at first very seductive for them, it later somehow encourages a rebelliousness that could threaten its longevity. It can be highly charismatic to other people, attracting all sorts of admirers and hangers-on, but an overload of social and personal responsibility can prove debilitating to these partners, who are usually better off when they hide their light a bit and turn down the charm. Together they can make great strides on personal and spiritual levels, and it would be a true shame if they neglected such areas.

Love affairs in this combination can be stormy. Disagreements and clashes over responsibility, money and divided attention may periodically surface. Pisces II's are often the more faithful of the two and will suffer a great deal should their Leo I mate turn elsewhere for affection or solace. Marriages here are not especially recommended: the partners are unlikely to satisfy each other beyond a certain level and, in the long run, are unlikely to build a stable emotional life together.

Leo I–Pisces II friends and siblings have a strong rebellious side to express. Prone to trouble, they must be careful not to darken their name, gaining the kind of reputation that will make others cross to the other side of the street when they appear in public. These two should try to arrive at personal values that are not just defined in opposition to parental or societal moral codes. Other kinds of family relationship may be so close as to be smothering—the partners' rebellion here may be against each other.

At work, Leo I's and Pisces II's can do exceptionally well when engaged in artistic or creative pursuits together. If their creative impulses can be put in the service of a commercial enterprise, they can be professionally and financially successful. But they risk periodically losing sight of their business goals and getting lost in the creative or technical side of their work. Both partners must be able to pull themselves back to reality and tend to the practical and monetary side of things.

ADVICE: Not everything you attract is desirable. Be more selective. Keep an objective eye on finances. Tone down the excitement factor.

THE WEEK OF DANCERS & DREAMERS
PISCES III

Sharing the Truth

Highly philosophical, this relationship seeks to share the truth with other people. Yet without its priority on communication, it would tend to isolate itself from the world and, in fact, will probably do so when its abilities to share beliefs and ideas are frustrated. Although Leo is a fire sign and Pisces water, their relationship is ruled by earth and air, here accentuating a mix of energies in the practical and ideological spheres.

Friendships and marriages are often built around spiritual, religious or intellectual ideas shared by the two partners. Perhaps it was these common beliefs that brought the pair together in the first place, although they may also have been fostered by the relationship itself while in progress. In either case, it is quite common for the pair to set up a structure for daily life based on such a system of belief, and to subordinate most of their activities to this higher authority. Any internal struggles within the relationship often result from irritations and frustrations caused by neglect of pressing emotional issues. Love affairs are possible, but here the tendency to embrace a structure of belief is less propitious. And should an affair develop, the couple are likely to see their romantic or sexual feelings elevated to an exalted plane—which only leads to disillusion if expectations are disappointed, as is often the case.

Leo I–Pisces III parent-child duos can suffer under the premature and rigorous influence of heavy ideologies. But should the family manage to establish a more tolerant and less serious setting, Pisces III's usually make the better parent in the matchup and can be extremely attentive, nurturing and understanding to their Leo I children. The emphasis on communication here is highly personal—parent and child must be careful not to cut themselves off from familial or societal interaction. Leo I–Pisces III commercial enterprises and work relationships are not usually favored.

ADVICE: Try to see things on the human level. Don't neglect personal issues. Come down off your cloud sometimes. Promote flexibility.

THE WEEK OF BALANCED STRENGTH
LEO II

August 3–10

Standing Steadfast

Leo II's are often equally matched—if they are opponents or rivals they will give each other a run for their money. Whether this relationship is combative or supportive, it tends to allow its partners to express the best of which they are capable yet its energy will focus on supporting its own strengths rather than theirs as individuals. When one partner is depressed or hurt, for example, the other will often do double work for a time to keep the relationship's energy level constant. Leo II's tend to rely and depend on each other, however, and should one of this pair suffer a prolonged collapse the other may be unable to carry the weight for too long.

Love and marriage between two Leo II's can be either demanding or easy, depending on their reasons for choosing each other. The partner who loves less will generally have the upper hand in power struggles. Although Leo II's who love more are vulnerable, they generally wouldn't have it any other way, and will usually stand steadfast in times of trouble as long as they can keep on an even keel emotionally.

Should Leo II friends be romantically attracted to the same person, real problems will emerge. Their loyalty to their own relationship will be sorely tested, and if either of them deserts the other by following his or her desires as an individual, their friendship will probably disintegrate. Most often, however, Leo II's choose to remain loyal to each other in such situations, leaving the third party out in the cold. Leo II's generally befriend each other for life and can provide each other with tremendous mutual support and encouragement.

Sibling and co-worker matchups are strong, dependable and therefore of great value to the family or company of which they form a part. Occasional battles are inevitable between them, however, with Leo II fur flying in all directions. Little if any quarter is generally given in such combat; nor is it advisable to come between these adversaries—they must be left to settle things alone, whether physically or verbally.

ADVICE: Minimize power struggles. Needs can be met through consideration and patience. Preserve emotional stability. Loyalty should be freely given.

THE WEEK OF LEADERSHIP
LEO III

Radiant Warmth

This relationship is likely to be easygoing, with each partner enjoying the ability to bask in the steady radiance of the other's strength. These proud Leos are generally well suited, being relaxed and accepting with each other. The lack of open combat between them is surely a good thing, and even mandatory for the relationship's continuance, considering the alternative: these two have an enormous capacity to inflict mutual hurt. As it is, though, any threat against one of these lions, whether overt or insidious, will be considered an attack on the other, and each partner will come to the other's defense. This trait is so pronounced that it can almost be too protective, preventing the individual from handling their difficulties on their own.

Both friendships and love affairs can be warm and romantic. Sexual relations need not be as torrid as one might think—they lean more to gentleness and tenderness, which are the rule rather than the exception. The couple's preference for sensuous rather than highly sexual or erotic passions tends to emphasize passive rather than active attitudes, mentally as well as physically.

Leo II–Leo III business relationships and marriages share an aggressiveness and a will to succeed, blunted only by their easygoing self-confidence. This latter trait, however, can cause problems if the pair overlook present difficulties and refuse to acknowledge the seriousness of recurring problems until it is too late. Long before they themselves spot the warning lights, their employees or children may see danger ahead, but may have been taught by experience to stay quiet for fear of being accused of alarmism. Later on, though, their Leo II–Leo III bosses or parents may blame them for failing to report a warning, so that they're damned if they do, damned if they don't.

Leo II–Leo III sibling matchups, especially of the same sex, will be highly competitive in their early years. In time, however, they usually grow to be understanding, protective and accepting.

ADVICE: Try to be more attentive. Heed warning signs. Don't just shrug off difficulties—do something about them. Listen to other people's opinions.

THE CUSP OF EXPOSURE
LEO-VIRGO CUSP

The Driver's Seat

The focus of this relationship is the provision of effective leadership to attain specific goals, whether commercial, social or personal. A guide or authority figure is often necessary here—usually one of the two partners, but also sometimes the pair as equal partners leading other people. These two often find themselves involved in a higher cause or ideal to which they dedicate their relationship. By keeping the cause in mind, they may be able to avoid competition for leadership. Otherwise, Leo-Virgos of the more aggressive kind can run into problems with Leo II's over who will occupy the driver's seat. Leo-Virgos of the quieter type can be quite content to let Leo II's take control and to play a secondary role, perhaps as advisers. Sooner or later, however, they too will want an equal say.

Love between these two is likely to be secretive and passionate. Their affairs may well be illicit, with a Leo-Virgo unhappily married to an unresponsive spouse seeking appreciation and pleasure in the arms of a fiery Leo II. Marriages here easily grow stale with time, but both partners tend to hang in there, sharing leadership roles. As parents, Leo-Virgos are more dutiful than naturally attentive to their children and may depend on Leo II's to take up the slack.

In career matchups, Leo II's and Leo-Virgos can engage in fierce power struggles but are usually sensible enough to realize that these conflicts are a waste of time and energy and to apply themselves to the cause at hand. Often the most successful duos here are business partners, who recognize their individual strengths from the start and agree to compromise over who has the final say. Should Leo-Virgo analytical skills gel with Leo II steady energies, career associations here are likely to be profitable. Because neither Leo-Virgos nor Leo II's are overly trusting, they may prefer to go into business together when they are already joined as friends, siblings or spouses.

ADVICE: Settle power issues. Be aware of the effects of your actions. Develop deeper bonds of trust. Don't ignore those who need your attention.

True Soulmates

These two may find themselves to be true soulmates. Difficulties seldom deter them from seeking each other out and establishing a relationship; as a matter of fact, social, racial or financial barriers will only spur them on. This combination is often highly personal, featuring mutual acceptance and sympathy. Strong empathic bonds assure close communication and sensitivity to each other's needs, not only in romances but in friendships and other social ties. It is a relationship that fosters both intellectual and emotional understanding.

Love affairs in this combination and the marriages that often result from them can be highly soulful. Virgo I's do not find emotional fulfillment easily and are subject to nervous instabilities, but relationships with Leo II's give them appreciation, support and the security to express their feelings constructively. Leo II's, for their part, benefit tremendously from Virgo I order and structure and appreciate the relationship's need for firm decision-making. Deep meditative states can appear here, but the relationship has a tendency to isolate itself and must beware of losing touch with worldly realities.

Friendships between these two tend to be idealistic yet to have a strong practical base. They are highly dependable and capable of shouldering heavy responsibilities, but their real focus is sharing philosophical or ideological concepts and putting them into practice in everyday life. Working matchups, on the other hand, may not be ideal, given the pair's vulnerability, subjectivity and sensitivity. In the family, similarly, sibling and parent-child pairs can be empathic to a fault—the partners overreact to each other's moods and have difficulty establishing stability.

ADVICE: Don't turn your back on the world. Keep in touch with everyday realities. Don't be guided by rebelliousness. Keep your ideals fresh and pure.

A Need for Introspection

The great challenge of this relationship is to uncover hidden feelings or psychological tendencies and allow them to be expressed. Both partners have a tendency to isolate themselves, which makes it difficult for them to become emotionally close to other people. Their relationship can magnify this leaning, creating emotional distance even between themselves. There is an acute need here, then, for greater awareness and self-examination. A conscious decision to be more open and trusting will help enormously. These two need to devote a lot of time to earnest discussion and personal exploration. Their forays into private and often repressed realms will require great willpower from them, but the rewards will be great.

Love here can be physically satisfying, even passionate, but usually in an objective sense rather than as a deep emotional involvement. These partners are often cool in such encounters, preferring detachment to merger. Marital and family relationships are often stormy battlegrounds of personal struggle, often with unconscious sources. Complex dynamics are at work here: feelings may run the gamut from adoration to resentment, from resentment to rejection. Periodic volcanic upheavals indicate the depth of feeling involved but also the shallowness of understanding. As spouses and as parent-child combinations, Leo II's and Virgo II's who take the time to tunnel deeply, in a patient, understanding way, will begin to fathom the nature of their problems. The many valuable realizations that can result will help to even out emotional expression and build bridges of understanding.

Friendships in this combination may focus on a given activity, such as a hobby, or may go deeper, exploring intensely personal realms. The choice is a tricky one, for a pleasurable association can be disturbed or even destroyed by curiosities that move too far too fast in trying to uncover well-kept secrets. Career involvements between Leo II's and Virgo II's can be productive and rewarding if personal differences can be settled.

ADVICE: Take time for inner exploration. Strengthen your will to understand, for understanding brings reward. Give whatever it takes.

Emotional Challenges

This combination will prove quite a challenge for its partners, since it focuses on feeling and spirit—neither of them areas in which these two feel particularly comfortable. The relationship will certainly bring out previously repressed emotions. Its focus may be the difficulty Leo II's and Virgo III's generally have with feelings, which these tough individuals often see as messes they would rather avoid. In this combination that will be impossible. The relationship will confront them with an area of life that they need to explore further and, ultimately, to work out. Fortunately, the process will have a certain flow to it, so that the lessons it has to offer will occur before the partners even realize what's happening.

Love and marriage will have their problems. Virgo III's are oriented toward mental activity and practicality, and although Leo II's are attracted to intelligence, they actually do best when they rely on their intuition. In marriage, friendship and love, they are rarely strong enough to stand up to Virgo III criticism or relentless logic. Leo II anger and hot-headedness, meanwhile, will be difficult for Virgo III's. This couple's interactions often alternate from emotional outbursts to frustrated silences reflecting repressed anger.

Family matchups in this combination, especially between parents and children, are often confrontational. Virgo III children can be very critical of their Leo II parents, who are prone to being authoritarian. Should Virgo III's be the parents, they are likely to find their Leo II children wild and uncontrollable. Their attempts at discipline will rarely meet with success.

Career matchups may succeed in avoiding the sensitive subject of feelings, but the partners will still feel a certain emotional wariness around each other, which can make them tread a bit too lightly in each other's company. Otherwise, direct Leo II energy and Virgo III attentiveness can meld well. These two can be successful at a variety of tasks, preferably objective ones in which the job just needs to get done without fuss or bother.

ADVICE: Learn how to handle your feelings, and beware of repressing them. Even out mood swings. The mind can only take you so far. Follow your heart.

VIRGO-LIBRA CUSP

Being Well Prepared

This relationship will focus on building a solid and dependable structure within a social, family or professional group. Overcoming technical obstacles and subduing tasks or problems to a smooth-running system are the forte in this combination, which makes for an excellent working arrangement, with the partners sharing leadership and occupying clearly defined roles. Creative problem-solving comes naturally here.

Virgo-Libras need a strong, reliable figure to depend on—a person quite like a Leo II. Co-worker, spouse and parent relationships are all favored here. But although Leo II's enjoy feeling appreciated, there is a danger that Virgo-Libra will view them as infallible. If they also represent a Virgo-Libra ideal of physical beauty, they may have difficulty extricating themselves from what may become an exceedingly tender trap. In another scenario, Leo II aggressiveness may not be entirely welcomed by Virgo-Libras, who are often extremely particular about how they are approached or touched.

Friendships, family ties and marriages in this combination tend to stress tradition, solidity and purpose within the context of their social circle. Leo II's will find it immensely rewarding to put their powers at the service of such a group, and Virgo-Libras will benefit from using their creativity and taste to make life more enjoyable and comfortable for those they care about. Power struggles rarely arise in this relationship, but unusually close attachments can blunt individual initiative, particularly in the case of Virgo-Libras. Should Virgo-Libras become unduly dependent on the relationship, Leo II's may get uncomfortable and back off.

As boss-employee pairs or co-workers in a team effort, Virgo-Libras are likely to give direction and purpose to projects that feature the near boundless energy of Leo II's. Efficiency and planning will figure prominently in such efforts, for these two tend to be well prepared when they go into battle.

ADVICE: Keep things in perspective. Don't let needs and wants get out of hand. Ask what is in it for you. Don't refuse help when it is offered.

Life's Passing Scene

The liveliness of this relationship is unmistakable, yet it is often accompanied by an underlying tinge of sadness. Leo II's and Libra I's certainly enjoy excitement, and can make rather a volatile combination, yet at the same time they are realists about the passing scene, and recognize life's transitory nature. Philosophical reflection is important to them and can become the focus of their relationship. Away from the bustle of the world, where they are viewed as extroverted and even exhibitionistic, the relationship offers them the quiet haven they need to explore spiritual and ideological issues.

Love affairs between these two can be emotionally volatile. Both partners tend to have strong sexual drives, but deep feeling is unlikely to develop between them, and there may be little to hold their relationship together. Marriages are not recommended for this pair, since neither partner is likely to be too interested in assuming domestic responsibilities or raising a family.

The combination's philosophical bent emerges strongly in friendships. Highly valued here are irony and humor, especially black humor, emphasizing life's grim side. Over the years, however, a quite negative and critical view of the world may progress to a more hopeful and spiritual one. The intellectual penchant of Libra I's and the intuitive strengths of Leo II's can both find expression in this matchup, but both partners often neglect the importance of feelings. They need to recognize that emotion plays a more decisive role in life than they are prepared to admit.

At work and in the family, Libra I bosses and parents can be hypercritical of their Leo II children or employees, who are often under the sway of their mental power. Leo II's are more geared for action, and often express themselves with an immediacy that Libra I superiors can find alarming. This relationship encourages Libra I's to be a bit more fearless and Leo II's a bit more thoughtful.

ADVICE: Take life a bit more seriously. Don't just observe the passing parade—try to make a difference. Serving others can benefit you greatly.

Psychological Barriers

This relationship is more complex than one would think. Although the pair usually get along well, there are emotional and psychological barriers between them, which are most obvious in the role played in the relationship by approval and disapproval: each partner will use these judgments as a tool to try to get beyond the other's psychological boundaries—not a very healthy strategy. Differences in temperament between these two can bring out their nervous sides, yet despite their areas of conflict, the entertaining and sparkling side of Libra II's can lift the spirits of Leo II's. By example, Leo II's can, in turn, teach Libra II's how to be more assertive and to act decisively.

Deep psychological barriers may have to be overcome in love affairs. Libra II's can be extremely helpful in encouraging Leo II's to be introspective and gain insights into both themselves and the relationship. Too often, however, Libra II's themselves may resent the relationship (no matter how much they are in love) for putting these psychological demands on them. Their ambivalent feelings could well lead only to further indecision. Too often this affair is left hanging in a void. In marriages, too, positive attitudes and immense willpower will be needed to avoid judgmental attitudes and to encourage accepting ones if depression and uncertainty are to be beaten. Sibling relationships and friendships are likely to be mutually protective, with the powerful physical presence of Leo II's and the social expertise of Libra II's melding. Both partners will be able to call upon each other occasionally in time of need; even more important, they can regularly have great times together. Although Leo is a fire sign and Libra air, the Leo II–Libra II relationship is ruled by earth, an element here signifying practical abilities and the ability to work together. If they can put their personality differences aside, these two can serve well as co-workers, getting the job done effectively. In business partnerships and other entrepreneurial endeavors, however, the personal side of the relationship can prove unsettling, so that these arrangements are not recommended.

ADVICE: Keep it light. Don't let moods get you down. Strengthen your determination to move forward. Keep positive goals in mind.

Two Captains at the Helm

The visionary or dreamlike quality in this combination can be unsettling. There is a choice—harness this trait's creativity or be unnerved by its fluctuations—but these two dominant personalities will find the energies at work in their relationship difficult to grasp. Feeling threatened, both are likely to dig in their heels. Power struggles and conflict may be inevitable, but if they can overcome their insecurities, the more aspiring elements of their personalities can meld, so that visionary projects can sometimes be launched and realized.

A big problem here is the flamboyant and dramatic nature of Libra III's, which Leo II's may see as highly artificial. Meanwhile, Libra III's might view the Leo II approach as too direct and unnuanced. But the first question that will have to be settled is, Who's the boss? The only solution may lie in compromise, with the partners sharing the helm. This will almost certainly be difficult, however.

Love affairs are likely to be stormy and short-lived, but working relationships and marriages have a good chance of success if duties are well defined. The relationship should set up clear boundaries, deciding clearly which areas are the province of each partner. It is when these two are constantly looking over each other's shoulder that troubles start, for each is extremely sensitive to the other's criticism and disapproval. These relationships often work best when other people take care of practical matters (such as bookkeeping, cleaning, taking messages, etc.) and the Leo II–Libra III pair is left free to follow the promptings of their joint imagination.

Siblings in this combination sometimes get lost in their own adventuresome world of fantasy, especially in childhood. Going through adolescence together may be painful for them—they will have to give up the wonderful times they had together earlier on and assume more responsible roles. Friendships are most successful when responsibilities are kept to a minimum. Dynamic and physical activities involving risk and danger are especially attractive to this pair.

ADVICE: Try to hammer out agreements. Be diplomatic. Compromise is not a dirty word. Try to be more sensitive to each other's needs.

LIBRA-SCORPIO CUSP

Unspoken Agreement

The Leo II–Libra–Scorpio relationship is usually firmly grounded in the here and now. It often focuses on cold, hard facts and demands that the literal truth be told. Honesty in both work and personal matters is obligatory here, and woe to the partner who breaks this unspoken agreement. Although Leo is a fire sign and Libra an air sign, the Leo II–Libra–Scorpio relationship is governed by earth, an element here suggesting strong practical thinking but also sensuousness and seductiveness.

Love and marriage can be painful for these two if they do not see eye to eye, or if their physical relationship turns sour. Passion has a way of leading to provocation and provocation to combat, all in very short order. Formidable as Leo II's appear, in a knock-down, drag-out psychological confrontation they are usually no match for Libra-Scorpios, who will know exactly how to hurt them, wounding their pride and undermining their self-confidence. Should a stormy love affair lead to a difficult marriage, Leo II's tend to hang in there far beyond the point when it would be better for everyone if they quit.

Parent-child relationships in this combination can be loving but disillusioned, particularly if a Leo II parent falls from grace in the eyes of a Libra-Scorpio child. Both parents and children expect the promises they make to each other to be kept, and hold each other strictly to their word. Sibling matchups are no less unforgiving, although brothers and sisters can be much more objective about each other, and more respectful of each other's strengths and weaknesses.

Friendships and work relationships between Leo II's and Libra-Scorpios can generate tremendous energy. Getting projects and productions moving, whether commercial or social, is a forte in this combination. High-quality work is to be expected of such matchups, along with an equal demand for tasteful and unostentatious presentation.

ADVICE: Forgive and forget. Don't allow expectations to build up. Try being a bit more flexible. Take things more figuratively and less literally.

Experiencing Rebirth

This combination is protective and nurturing but also generative. Creative forces are strong here—so strong, in fact, that together these partners may experience a sort of rebirth. Their relationship gives them a chance to move to a higher personal and spiritual level. Their respective fortes, Balanced Strength and Intensity, are well matched, complementing each other in career, educational and social undertakings that allow Leo II equanimity and Scorpio I drive to coalesce. Both Leo and Scorpio are fixed signs, so that neither of these personalities is likely to give ground in an all-out argument. By working side by side in a variety of endeavors, however, they can win each other's trust.

In love these two are seldom content to sit back and simply enjoy life's pleasures, sexual or otherwise: They have a drive to move forward. This will often move them in the direction of marriage. Having children and owning their own home can also be important parts of the scenario. They should be aware, however, that progressing in this way need not make them steadily more serious and inflexible, losing the spontaneity and fun that characterized their relationship in its beginnings.

Friendships and sibling relationships between Leo II's and Scorpio I's can be intense and competitive, especially on the physical plane. Whether rivaling each other as opponents or trying to beat their personal or mutual best, these two will sometimes compete unmercifully for victory. They should be careful not to hurt themselves by going too far in this direction.

In professional relationships, Leo II's and Scorpio I's are happiest when able to bring new ideas into the workplace. As an equal team, they are capable of working hard, but only when they choose. Motivation is an important consideration here, for they will give generously of their talents and energies if they believe in the products and goals of the organization they serve.

Heavy Energies

This combination channels serious energies. As fixed signs, Leo and Scorpio tend to be stubborn and inflexible, so that Leo II's and Scorpio II's don't change easily and are not readily open to compromise. Furthermore, since these two are square to each other (90° apart) in the zodiac, traditional astrology predicts tension and problems for their relationship. Yet feelings run very deep between them. If they can only handle each other, their matchup will be richly rewarding emotionally. Fortunately, there is a unifying theme in their relationship—an appreciation for and enjoyment of physical, sensuous beauty. The whole question is how sensuousness, sensuality, sexuality and pleasure in general are to be approached here.

In love and marriage, these partners are sometimes more successful in a joint involvement in art, nature, fashion, music or film than they are in their interactions with each other. When they can objectively express sensuous desire or appreciation toward an object they both admire, they can experience a great deal of mutual satisfaction. Yet when sensual desire moves these same personalities toward each other, they can get bogged down in a maelstrom of conflicting thoughts and feelings. Sexual interactions between these two may be very powerful but can also be extremely upsetting if they are not handled well psychologically. Simple sensuous expressions—a touch, a look, an affectionate gesture—are rarely a problem, but overt sensuality can become quite problematical, especially if drug, food or love dependencies arise. It is in the sphere of friendship that outright addictions can prove most damaging, although highly pleasurable in the short term.

Leo II–Scorpio II family relationships, particularly parent-child matchups of the opposite sex, are deeply loving, but there is often some blockage in that love's expression. Mother-son and father-daughter pairs may be close but frustrating, and the closer they are the worse their problems may become. Learning to lighten the mood, to have fun together, and to share feelings with other family members can help. Working relationships between Leo II's and Scorpio II's are not recommended unless the partners can be strictly objective.

ADVICE: Enjoy your mutual appreciation of beauty. Beware of addiction to physical pleasures. Cultivate true affection and kindness. Lighten up a bit.

Good Humor

The partners in this highly entertaining matchup will really appreciate each other for who and what they are. Good humor often prevails when they are together, no matter how little time they may have available to spend with each other. Their relationship stays fresh and new over the years. It is also often somewhat unrealistic and naive about the world. Leo II's and Scorpio III's do learn important lessons from their experience, but they can be unusually willing to put any feelings of having been wronged behind them—in other words, to forgive and forget. This is because of the security they feel in their relationship, and the good feelings it engenders.

This security through good feelings is especially evident in love affairs, friendships and marriages. Although neither Leo II's nor Scorpio III's are too trusting in their relationships with other people, together they can open up emotionally to an astonishing degree. Conviviality is a big item here; this pair will enjoy few things more than sitting around a table with friends, indulging in good food and drink and, of course, conversation. Leo II's tend to seek excitement and challenge in many areas of life, but with Scorpio III's they can relax and be themselves. Scorpio III's, too, will enjoy letting their hair and defenses down, and also not having to play the boss, organizer or director.

Career matchups are less favorable here, since the kinds of relaxed attitudes that are typical between these two rarely bring people forward in the professional and business worlds. Leo II–Scorpio III partners interested in making a success of their endeavors will have to push themselves a bit more. In family settings, parent-child and grandparent-grandchild matchups in this combination can be rewarding and communicative, but also claiming, spoiling and overprotective.

ADVICE: Enjoy yourself but don't forget your responsibilities. Good feelings are not the whole story. Trust might have to be earned. Protect your interests.

Doing One's Best

Great pressures can build up in this relationship through its insistence on getting everything just right. Extremely demanding of itself and others, it places perhaps too much emphasis on mental concentration. Since Leo II's are often more at home when they follow their hunches and Scorpio-Sagittarians when they deal with their feelings, both partners may be uncomfortable with the uncompromising focus on logical thought that emerges when they are together, cutting them off from their real strengths. For all their drive and intensity, both Leo II's and Scorpio-Sagittarians do best in relaxed circumstances where they can work at their own tempo. The relationship's insistence on perfection may undercut its effectiveness, then, and arouse frustration.

Both these personalities are full-blooded in their sexuality, yet this strength does not always emerge in the love affairs they have with each other. They can have a strangely inhibiting effect on each other's carnal side, as if they were expecting criticism or reproach. In marriages, too, high expectations can prevent good results. Interactions here are seldom free and easy. Leo II's tend to hang in until the bitter end, but the relationship's strains and pressures may make Scorpio-Sagittarians seek comfort and pleasure elsewhere.

In the family, on the other hand, this combination can be strengthening and stabilizing, particularly when it emerges between siblings of the same sex. These two can easily run the household when elders are away. Friends in this combination often share a common area of interest or activity, which they pursue with zeal. Their family members, spouses and other friends will have to be understanding of their time-consuming and often single-minded involvement with each other.

Work relationships between Leo II's and Scorpio-Sagittarians may have to loosen up a bit, leaving the partners free to operate in their own ways. As long as they touch base with each other from time to time, and refrain from being overly critical, things can go smoothly enough. Leo II directness and Scorpio-Sagittarius elegance and nuance don't always gel, but can complement each other if these guidelines are observed.

ADVICE: Ease up a bit on your demands. Beware of high expectations. Don't neglect your real strengths. Work more in the service of others.

Falling in Love with Love

This enthusiastic, upbeat relationship is all fire. Extroverted and flamboyant, it lends verve to any gathering and also inspires the partners themselves. Youthful and childlike qualities are usually apparent here, energy is abundant and positive thoughts prevail, at least when things are on between these two. During down periods, however, the couple may lack the inner resources to deal with problems, especially emotional and psychological ones. Problems can also arise over who is getting the most attention. Leo II's and Sagittarius I's should be more aware of their own needs and learn how to deal with them without making demands on others.

The combination can be extremely romantic. For Leo II's and Sagittarius I's in love, all other aspects of life tend to pale in comparison with the bright flame between the two of them. Too often, however, falling in love is illusory for them, and has the hidden purpose of taking their minds off their own problems. The relief at apparently not having to deal with unhappiness any more, or at finally having found the right person (even although the partners may have felt similarly before, and ultimately been disappointed), never fails to raise spirits and renew self-confidence. Unfortunately, the opposite may also be the case: should one of the two suffer rejection or frustration, disillusion and depression can be severe. Marriages are usually more stable and lasting, especially when time is taken to allow a deep commitment to form before the actual wedding takes place. The couple should make an effort to keep their romance alive, balancing it with domestic and financial responsibilities in a healthy mix. Since overenthusiasm can be deadly in business pursuits, the matchup is not recommended for partnerships or executive pairs. And co-worker positions in a company hierarchy may bore this vibrant duo. Family matchups, on the other hand, particularly parent-child, can be mutually stimulating, and will tend to keep elders young at heart. Friendships between Leo II's and Sagittarius I's generally need a strong physical outlet, perhaps sports, fitness or other forms of training.

ADVICE: Have fun, but take time to face the truth. Falling in love rarely solves all problems in the long run. Keep an eye on your feelings.

Feeling Normal

This matchup is often oriented toward human interactions, whether in school, religious or social organizations or more informally within a group of friends. Both Leo II's and Sagittarius II's have a character trait of periodically feeling misunderstood, even abnormal. Together, however, they can make their way in the world without feeling strange about themselves. Thus the focus of their relationship is often social development, as the partners learn more about people, institutions and how they work. Since Leo II and Sagittarius II form a trine aspect (lying 120° apart in the zodiac), traditional astrology predicts an easy relationship here, for the most part correctly. Difficulties can arise, however, when each partner's fiery nature begins to flare.

As a romance this relationship can be spontaneous, impulsive, passionate and highly sexual. Emotional maturity is usually absent, however, and the landscape may be dotted with outbursts of feeling, both positive and negative. Leo II's are definitely the longer-suffering of these two: if Sagittarius II's feel rejected or frustrated they are liable to take their leave, and with little warning.

Marriages and friendships between these two can certainly be intense at times but are for the most part easygoing and pleasurable. That there is usually a great deal of understanding between Leo II's and Sagittarius II's doesn't mean there is always total sympathy. The partners are quite independent. A lot of the time they spend together may include the presence of other people, and since in a social setting they tend to be treated rather as if they were a single person, these situations will bring them closer together.

Sibling rivalries are highly challenging, especially between two sisters or two brothers. Matters come to a head quickly between such pairs, but once the storm has broken things quiet down pretty quickly. It is usually better if friends and family don't try to work together, but Leo II and Sagittarius II co-worker pairs often become fast friends. Sarcastic verbal jabs are signs of affection in such relationships.

ADVICE: Show emotional intelligence. Develop patience and self-control. Give others more of a chance. Let go of the past. Don't hold grudges.

Unanimity of Purpose

The main thrust of this relationship is to play a pioneering role in the commercial, family or social organization to which the pair belong. Any cart pulled by two such powerful horses as Leo II and Sagittarius III is sure to get to its destination—as long as they are both pulling in the same direction: capable of giving leadership and direction to any endeavor, these two can also stalemate a project if they have a strong difference of opinion. An important challenge here, then, is to preserve unanimity of purpose. Leo II's will sometimes take a back seat to Sagittarius III's when a project obviously won't function with more than one boss, but more often a judicious division of responsibilities may be necessary, allowing the pair to codirect a project without too much fur flying.

Work and family relationships in this combination tend to be more effective when kept impersonal and goal-oriented. If personal feelings are not kept out of the workplace or home, aggression can explode, or quieter irritations can become the slow friction that finally brings a project screeching to a halt. It is important to both Leo II's and Sagittarius III's to find a human level on which to relate, however, so that the area of sharing thoughts and feelings is almost certain to create challenges for the relationship to face.

Love affairs and marriages between these two can experience tremendous power struggles over who will be top dog. For one partner to have a higher salary or career position than the other is likely to become an issue between them. Yet competitive social and economic drives can actually unify the relationship, not only by stressing common values but by underlining the necessity of hard and productive work to strengthen the bond. Both partners must take care that affection, tenderness, love and kindness do not get left out in the rush toward success. Friendships between Leo II's and Sagittarius III's must reckon with the fact that both personalities go through moods; at such times it's best for them to be left alone.

ADVICE: Don't put all of your eggs in one basket. Seek spiritual and emotional values. Worldly success is not the only thing. Give up power struggles.

 SAGITTARIUS-CAPRICORN CUSP

Pulling the Strings

These two may find themselves acting out a drama over which they have no control. Their relationship has a peculiarly fated quality to it, with each partner taking on defined roles, as if someone were pulling the strings. Well directed and strong minded, the relationship knows where it is going and what it is supposed to do, but the question is: do its partners? As a unit, Leo II's and Sagittarius-Capricorns are unified by a single-minded purpose that can transcend many limitations and barriers. This relationship is governed by the element of air, granting it a great capacity for strategic thinking and deep powers of concentration.

Love affairs between Leo II's and Sagittarius-Capricorns can be deep and passionate. They will also show a high degree of curiosity: both of these individuals have a secretive side that few can penetrate, giving them ample room to flex their investigative muscles when they come together. Should they touch on a hidden nerve, however, or dig a bit too deep, quite theatrical displays of feeling are likely to result. Marriages in this combination can bring great joy to both partners but also deeply felt sorrow. In fact, the pair are likely to run the gamut of human emotion before they are finished with each other.

As friends or siblings, Leo II's and Sagittarius-Capricorns are likely to be quite extroverted, engaging in challenging and exciting activities. Danger often draws them like a magnet. Although comfortable in taking risks, the pair will have to recognize limitations and draw up boundaries that they must not overstep. Competition here is generally positive in nature, impelling mutual efforts forward.

In the professional sphere, Leo II's and Sagittarius-Capricorns can often work side by side for years on end. Their common purpose and feeling for the large line and the dramatic gesture are balanced by strict attention to detail. An important challenge for them will be allowing both partners their own individuality without compromising the interests of the group.

ADVICE: You could be wrong. Be open to contrary points of view. Don't wear blinders. Keep your peripheral vision active. Answers create questions.

A Monolithic Stance

Too often, this combination elevates power to a position of primary importance, ignoring more human considerations. And should the drive for power be internalized within the relationship, the couple are likely to slug it out, and in not too pretty a fashion. Strong conflicts will probably emerge between these two. Yet Leo II's and Capricorn I's also share many values, and may even at times adopt a monolithic stance that can be somewhat unfeeling to their colleagues, friends or children.

Power struggles can push love affairs onto the rocks if they are combative enough. The couple's inability to open their hearts to each other will signal the end, even if their sexual expression is still going strong. Capricorn I–Leo II marriages are likely to be ambitious, seeking the very best that life has to offer in terms of material wealth and possessions. Failure to accomplish these ends can deal a major blow to the relationship's confidence in itself, spawning anger, resentment and blame.

In friendships, extremely close bonds can develop, but they are not always of the most positive sort: Leo II's and Capricorn I's may offer each other a bitter sort of consolation for shared feelings of rejection or inadequacy. Shrugging off such attitudes and renewing the will to try again, and this time to succeed, may give the relationship the strength it needs to serve as an inspirational force in the lives of its partners.

In work and family matchups, Capricorn I's can be extremely critical of the methods of Leo II employees or children, who often adopt a straightforward attitude and just go for it. This offends the moral sensibilities of Capricorn I's, who like to insist on a particular way of doing things. Capricorn I's typically like to set up rules, Leo II's to break them.

ADVICE: Seek deeply human values. Limit your desire for power. Find constructive outlets for your energy. Accept what happens.

Predatory Pleasures

These two make a forceful and piercingly direct pair. Their strength of purpose is unmatched, and their relationship promises them an exhilarating ride of facing challenges and then conquering them. Not only is this combination physically strong, it has fine-honed taste and a perceptive eye—a predator's eye, even. Leo II and Capricorn II lie quincunx to each other in the zodiac (150° apart), so that traditional astrology predicts some instability in their matchup, but between these two instability can translate into excitement and impulsive spontaneity. As individuals, both of these personalities are likely to give their all for their profession or for a cause, and their relationship synergistically magnifies this trait. The result can be an almost monomaniacal drive to overcome and to win.

Strongly sexual feelings may come to dominate love and marriage. Without the attainment of deeper levels of understanding, kindness, acceptance and sharing, these relationships are liable to burn out, revealing selfishness as their true basis. But although both Leo II's and Capricorn II's are tough realists, romantic feelings can add something to their relationship, ultimately leading to the expression of more sympathy. Conscious efforts to expand the scope of the relationship beyond the physical plane will generally bring it longer life. All Leo II–Capricorn II relationships, including friendships, will benefit from a deliberate emphasis on kindness and consideration. Instabilities can be lessened considerably by finding lighter activities to share and enjoy outside the relationship's principal endeavor. Work and family relationships can be interrelated with these two. In both cases, the energies of the group are often aimed squarely at achievement and little else. The goals may be financial or professional but generally demand the pursuit of excellence at the highest level. The kick of these endeavors inevitably lies in competition, and in overcoming adversaries of worthy mettle. Highly analytic abilities are granted to this pair, whether boss and employee, parent and child, siblings or co-workers. Thus weaknesses are mercilessly exposed and improvements constantly made in order to ensure future success.

Giving One's All

This relationship confers on its partners a need to give or do, and to see the tangible results of their efforts. One is apt to see them actively involved in establishing, running and maintaining an organization or service. Leo II's are generally the more ambitious of these two: Capricorn III's are easily contented by reaching a certain level and staying there, but Leo II's are always seeking greater challenges, and this can be a source of tension in their relationship. Yet if Leo II's often serve as models of inspiration for Capricorn III's, whom they may succeed in launching on their way, Capricorn III's will be quite capable of continuing on without further help. The Leo II–Capricorn III relationship is solid, service-oriented and generally able to accept a niche that is challenging but not necessarily top level.

Love affairs and marriages between these two can be enduring, faithful, fulfilling and productive. Not overly given to imaginative or romantic impulses, they tend to be simply stable. The responsibilities of having children and running a household will come naturally to this pair. Physical sensation and pleasure have a primary importance here; comfort and security are usually top priorities for the Leo II–Capricorn III couple.

The practical abilities that tend to emerge in this combination make it ideal for business and career pursuits. Capricorn III's can teach Leo II's a great deal about handling money and can themselves be pushed to succeed by their partner's unflagging energy and ambition. Both personalities will give their all to their relationship while it produces good results. Even in the event of breakdown or failure, both partners will give resuscitation their best shot and will experience tremendous struggles between loyalty and good sense in figuring out when to call it quits.

Parent-child bonds in this combination can be strong and mutually supportive, whichever personality is the parent. Friendships may experience conflicts over the choice of activities, with both partners often showing great stubbornness and refusing to compromise.

ADVICE: Learn to let go. How much security do you need? Take a few chances now and then. Accept failure. Learn to move on. Don't get stuck.

Laserlike Intensity

Together these two are capable of great achievements. Their relationship can be a dynamic one in which they stimulate each other to lift both their performance and their consciousness to a higher level. They must be sure, however, not to burn holes in themselves, or in other people, through the intensity of their connection. Exciting exploits can be this relationship's food, but the diet may be a tiring one, eventually leading to exhaustion. Drawing up guidelines, establishing structures and agreeing on boundaries and limitations will all be wise steps to take if the relationship's healthy survival and effectiveness are to be preserved.

Love affairs between these two can provide enjoyment, especially sexually, but usually only for the duration of a brief fling. If these partners are serious about each other they must be willing to invest time in patiently getting to know each other. Should they marry, Leo II calmness under fire will generally ground Capricorn-Aquarians' more excitable temperament, while Capricorn-Aquarians may at times bring a touch of humor to their overserious partner.

At work these two can be terribly demanding of each other. Unspoken agreements allow few if any excuses to be accepted for forgetfulness or inattention. Leo III's and Capricorn-Aquarians are geared to perform at the highest level of stress, and also of excellence. Hanging out together after work may bring out a whole new side of the relationship, one in which relaxation and pleasure can be pursued as avidly as professional goals are during the day. These two tend to work hard and play hard. Without this kind of work or leisure-time focus, friendships may lack intensity.

Parent-child relationships can be difficult, particularly during adolescence. All types of conflict will be magnified. Elsewhere in the family, sibling matchups, especially of the same sex, can lead to a search for adventure that could involve risk-taking activities bordering on the illegal.

ADVICE: Seek moderation and calm. Lower your stress level. Direct your energies intelligently. Get to know each other better at a deep level.

Trial and Error

Experience is the best teacher, at least according to this relationship. It is not uncommon for these two to team up on a project even when neither of them has had any formal training or experience related to it. They usually achieve surprising and original results. Although this is a potentially inflammable combination (Leo is ruled by fire, Aquarius I by air), it can also bestow a great deal of practicality and common sense. Through a judicious mixture of their natural talents and life experience, these two can put together results that are cogent and almost immediately understandable.

It is a simple fact that some people can learn from each other and others cannot. In this case, it is the relationship that is the true teacher, for it gives its partners the space, the impetus and above all the opportunity to innovate and experiment. In love and marriage these two proceed by trial and error, gaining in depth and understanding as they go forward. Together they tend to learn a great deal about each other and about themselves. Through experience they find out how to treat each other and how to get the most out of their time together. Although impatience, frustration and anger may often surface between this volatile pair, good sense usually prevails.

Boss-employee and parent-child relationships here can be highly productive, often achieving the kind of true equality one finds in co-worker relationships and friendships. Each partner usually has the good sense to know that extremes of authority and rebellion rarely bring projects forward, and that compromise is to be preferred to combat. At times a dangerous edginess can be sensed in this relationship, but it generally serves to further the action. Friendships between these two may concentrate on leisure and entertainment, never reaching deeper emotional levels. Having fun and relaxing together rather than raising consciousness are what these two usually have in mind.

ADVICE: Keep on learning. Try to go deeper spiritually. Beware of volatile emotions. Don't neglect your personal development. Be patient.

Attractive Opposition

This is a highly magnetic relationship. No matter what difficulties these two encounter, the strength of their bond is usually enough for them to overcome problems that would stop others in their tracks. In fact, solving problems can become a way of life for this pair. Although Leo II and Aquarius II stand directly opposite each other in the zodiac, so that astrology might predict difficulties for this couple, the saying "Opposites attract" was never truer than here.

In love affairs, Aquarius II's will be amazed at the depth of feeling aroused in them by Leo II's—indeed, they may not always feel adequate to handle it. Leo II's are comfortable with the relationship's sexually passionate nature, but they, too, feel a little intimidated and puzzled by the complexity of their own emotions in this combination. The matchup challenges both partners in the area of feelings—traditionally an undeveloped area of their personalities, and one that they often prefer to neglect or ignore. In grappling with such issues, Aquarius II's and Leo II's may progress immeasurably in their personal development.

Work relationships and marriages, which these two have a tendency to combine, are usually of a very high order. Aquarius II–Leo II partnerships may do even better professionally than personally, being characterized by an ease of communication and strength of common purpose. Conflicts can arise between more relaxed Aquarius II and more aggressive Leo II spouses, but the relationship can also be characterized by soothing and stimulating attitudes that do both partners good.

As friends, Leo II's and Aquarius II's are likely to get in over their heads. A depth and complexity of emotion can easily emerge between them that they will be unable to handle. It is often better for them to back off a bit, and to meet at a more enjoyable level, albeit also a more superficial one, where they can be a bit more objective about each other, perhaps as occasional companions. In parent-child relationships of either possible arrangement, real opposition in temperament may lead to stormy conflict.

ADVICE: Find your real strengths. Make differences work. Try to understand your emotions. Opposition can be beneficial. Be more accepting.

THE WEEK OF ACCEPTANCE
 AQUARIUS III

A Sea of Good Feeling

Personality appeal and pizzazz rate high in this relationship. Often upbeat, the matchup is filled with a charm and a romantic appeal that are simply irresistible. Of course, both Leo II's and Aquarius III's have a darker side, which they may both be fleeing, but as escapes go, this is a pretty good one. Both of these personalities hate people who put on airs, and are likely to find the naturalness of their own relationship comforting. They have a way of lifting each other's moods. Even so, there is a danger here of deep depression. If both partners crash simultaneously, their effect on each other could work to hold them down and make it extremely hard to recover. It is in the relationship's best interest, then, that at least one of the partners be happy at any given time.

Love affairs here can be sparkling and fun. Entertainment figures high on the list of these partners' essentials, and if they are unable to keep each other amused, they are liable to seek pleasure elsewhere. They should be extremely careful around all addictive substances, from alcohol to painkillers to so-called mind-expanding drugs, for in their hedonistic wanderings they tend to go overboard. Marriages are not recommended unless these habit-forming tendencies, which may also include sex and love addictions, can be brought under control.

Leo II–Aquarius III friendships are likely to swim in a sea of good feeling, at least when all is going well. It may not be exactly accurate to call these two fair-weather friends, but they are not known for giving selflessly in times of need. Recognizing the dark side and not bailing out when the going gets rough are real challenges for the relationship.

Working matchups may not always have the persistence necessary for long-range projects. In the family, Leo II and Aquarius III family members rarely see eye to eye on most issues but can be extremely frank and honest with each other, and hence make trustworthy critics.

ADVICE: Be there in good times and bad. Beware of dark-side takeovers. Escapism and addictions could lead to ruin. Learn the value of silence.

THE CUSP OF SENSITIVITY
 AQUARIUS-PISCES CUSP

Comfortable Openness

This relationship can be extremely honest, in the sense not of obeying moral imperatives but simply of being relaxed enough to allow for openness. Both Leo II's and Aquarius-Pisces are often guarded individuals who do not easily grant admittance to their private emotional world; yet their relationship has an ambiance in which they can share feelings comfortably. At the same time, it also augments both partners' tendency to indulge in flamboyant activities that hide the sensitive and perhaps wounded individual within. One problem here, then, is that the partners may get stuck together in a well of loneliness, depression or addiction from which it may be difficult or impossible for them to extricate themselves.

Love affairs, when on, can be highly sensuous and enjoyable. Although Leo is a fire sign and Aquarius-Pisces an air-water combination, the Leo II–Aquarius-Pisces relationship is ruled by earth, here producing a relaxed orientation on the physical plane. But the relationship can easily get out of balance, and some effort may have to be exerted to maintain its psychological stability, which is crucial for its success. Marriage is not recommended for this pair until they have known each other long enough to be sure of an acceptable level of mental health together.

Working relationships between Leo II's and Aquarius-Pisces are best when entrepreneurial, freelance or executive in nature, for as co-workers in a large organization the duo may be frustrated at being stuck at an unacceptably low level in the hierarchy. As a team these two may well prove quite ambitious, for they have an intense need to prove themselves. As siblings, Leo II's and Aquarius-Pisces must be able to make their collective voice felt in family business. If ignored or not taken seriously, they may respond rebelliously and disruptively. Friendships in this combination can be mutually protective and understanding.

ADVICE: Work on maintaining stability. Even out moods. Don't be afraid to show who you really are. Aggression isn't necessarily productive.

THE WEEK OF SPIRIT
PISCES I

Ineffable Delights

Romance and charm are undeniable in this relationship, but so too may be the rebellion of one or both of its partners. Pisces I's will try to lead their partners in this combination into a captivating world of feeling and romance, but hardheaded Leo II's will only be led so far, and may reject what they perceive as overly claiming attitudes. Ultimately, Pisces I's are likely to get hurt, but the memory of the relationship's ineffable delights may haunt Leo II's for a lifetime.

In love, this relationship tends to whisk both partners away on a magic carpet ride. Unfortunately for Pisces I's, however, the direction the ride takes is often sternly dictated by the Leo II captain. Pisces I's tend to be the more narcissistic of the pair, and realistic Leo II's may see them as in the long run more caught up by their own self-love than by anything the Leo II can offer. Feeling captured but not really appreciated, the Leo II may silently stray off in another direction, barely even aware of having left a somewhat bewildered Pisces I behind. Breakups often occur when hurt Pisces I's close off to a Leo II lover.

Marriages have the potential to be long-lasting, and business or career matchups can also be successful, but both partners should have a clear idea of what they want. The goals of money and power usually come second to personal involvement here at first, but in the long run may surpass it. Pisces I's will rarely be able to stand up to Leo II's, who have the stamina to dominate the relationship and get what they want. On the other hand, they can also be extremely faithful and loving—when it suits their purpose.

Friendships and sibling relationships in this combination can be magnetic, emphasizing sensitivity and a practical sort of spirituality. Interests such as meditation, yoga, martial arts and a variety of artistic pursuits (particularly music) that can find expression in their daily lives will have special appeal for this pair.

ADVICE: Be more aware of needs and wants. Keep lines of communication open. Don't be afraid to talk about problems. Romance can hold you back.

THE WEEK OF THE LONER
PISCES II

Endless Corridors

This relationship generates a lot of energy, but its great challenge is putting that energy toward mutually beneficial ends and endeavors. The major problem here is that Pisces II's tend to sap the energy of their partner in this combination: Leo II's readily adopt a protective attitude to them, seeing them as a great personal treasure to cherish, yet rarely being able to thread the corridors of their emotional labyrinth without feeling exhausted and frustrated. Pisces II's rarely ask for such attention consciously but cry out for it on the unconscious level, to which Leo II's are finely tuned.

One difficulty romantic relationships and marriages will have to contend with is instability, underlined by the quincunx aspect between Leo II and Pisces II (which lie 150° apart in the zodiac). Their energies, however sexually fulfilling or pleasurable, too often go flying off in extreme directions that ultimately undermine their everyday balance. Putting together a few days, weeks or months of consistent behavior can be a real achievement here. Moments of ecstasy and deep depression often succeed each other with frightening rapidity. Boredom or innocuous behavior may be seen as signs of health in such a relationship.

Friendships between these two can make Leo II's more sensitive and Pisces II's more motivated. They often favor objective activities, usually more technical than social in nature, and may even make a success of limited business endeavors—projects on which they embark without financial gain in mind, but that then prove commercial despite themselves. Parent-child and boss-employee relationships can see Leo II's being overpowering even when relatively dormant. Pisces II children and employees may be steamrolled by their energy but may ultimately turn things around, using that energy to power their own motors. Curious and debilitating dependencies may result.

ADVICE: Put energies to practical use. Ground activities in the here and now. Dampening excitement may limit depression. Follow business plans.

THE WEEK OF DANCERS & DREAMERS

Seeking to Surpass

Since this relationship has the effect of stimulating each partner's drive for independence, it is questionable whether they will be able to form and sustain a lasting relationship with each other. Leo II's and Pisces III's rarely have a settling or calming effect on each other and may feel little need to share with each other to any great degree. It is possible, however, for them to evolve a rivalry that in a strange way can bring them closer together, in space and time if not in emotions, than any friendship or love affair could.

Leo II's can be fascinated by the philosophical and independent thinking of Pisces III's, who can be equally thrilled by the commanding social and professional stance of Leo II's. Between friends and siblings such admiration often leads to competition, with each partner benefiting by emulating and even seeking to outdo the other's strengths. Both must be careful to prevent a tendency to try to win at all costs from getting out of hand. In commercial and other career matchups, Leo II's can vie with Pisces III's in a company, usually having the effect of forwarding the action rather than slowing it down. When these two compete directly with each other in rival organizations, Pisces III's will cleverly seek to undermine Leo II's strengths and turn them against them.

The question in love affairs and marriages will be how much time and effort the couple are willing to put into their relationship. No matter how much in love they are, their relationship encourages them to value their independence more than their desire to share or even take from each other. Underlying this mania to be free may be a secret fear of getting too deeply involved with each other on the part of both partners. If this fear can be overcome, renewed involvement and commitment, and less insistence on freedom at any cost, will result.

ADVICE: Put your competitive drives to their best use. Fear may be holding you back from deeper involvement. Independence isn't always necessary.

THE WEEK OF LEADERSHIP
LEO III

The Greatest Power of All

Can one group have two leaders? Two commanding Leo III's can actually get along well in a family or marital situation, since neither wants to dominate or rule so much as to lead. If they can both establish their own, separate areas of influence in which they are the unquestioned authority, it is not impossible for their interactions to be quite peaceful. In career matchups, however, they are likely to be competitors or rivals, even if they serve on the same side. Needless to say, the extreme hardheadedness and power orientation of Leo III's can often lead to combat, although a few confrontations may convince both partners of the inadvisability of frontal assaults in the future. Strangely enough, this matchup may succeed in developing the more subtle side of Leo III's, if only as each tries to figure out a way to persuade or manipulate the other more effectively.

Love affairs between Leo III's, no matter how romantic, will always include some form of power struggle. Even in the most intimate areas, competition for supremacy may rear its ugly head. Perhaps the most important lesson such a couple can learn is that the greatest power of all is unconditional and unselfish love, and that the cultivation of kindness, understanding and consideration can be far more challenging and rewarding than winning.

Leo III spouses do best when they both have their own career. Although they may show interest in each other's projects, and even help each other out periodically, as professionals they are best off maintaining a strict separation. At work, it may be hard for two Leo III's to serve together in the same department, but as executives, advisors or heads of their own divisions they can get along quite well.

In parent-child and other family matchups, the key to avoiding combat is building strong bonds of trust and respect. Over time, and with great patience on either side, such links can be forged. Once they are broken, however, truly frightening scenarios can arise in which combat threatens to break the family asunder.

ADVICE: Lessen power struggles. Develop patience and understanding. Simple acts of kindness carry great strength. Give more, be selfish less.

THE CUSP OF EXPOSURE
LEO-VIRGO CUSP

Secret Aspirations

The bond in this relationship is highly empathic, encouraging openness, acceptance and sensitivity between its partners. But this doesn't necessarily translate to the outside world. Both of these personalities have a hidden side that can be dark, even volcanic; sensing and understanding this in each other takes them a long way in establishing a relationship unique to them. They can easily adopt an "us against the world" stance, which may simultaneously isolate them and support them in their individual aspirations. Leo III's and Leo-Virgos may play complementary roles, especially when Leo III's sit in the driver's seat with Leo-Virgos right behind them pushing them along. In the long run, Leo III's may become dependent on Leo-Virgos, not only for backing them up but also for believing in them.

In love and other close relationships, mutual dependency may continue unbroken throughout life, with each partner secretly needing the other's approval. Breaking such ties will be extremely painful but will sometimes be necessary if the partners are to develop and grow. In marriage, a Leo-Virgo spouse may unmercifully push a Leo III mate to achieve wealth and power, whether by moving up the corporate ladder or by some other means.

Friendships and sibling relationships in this combination may cripple the ability of Leo-Virgos to make it on their own. They will probably have had to play a subordinate role to the Leo III from an early age, which may make them secretive and repressed. Often frustrated in their own ambitions, and carrying the weight of a lifetime of longing for fame or wealth and of resentment over not having achieved it, Leo-Virgo parents can pin their hopes and dreams on Leo III children, who will unknowingly be programmed to be superachievers.

At work, Leo III's and Leo-Virgos are best off as equals in jobs where their strengths can meld profitably for the group without the emergence of invidious comparisons or competition.

ADVICE: Define yourselves as individuals. Recognize what is yours. Be aware of what the relationship means to you personally. Promote equality.

An Inherent Transparency

This combination has a certain inherent transparency: it tends to reveal its partners, both to themselves and to other people, for what they really are. It is a completely straightforward relationship in which any secrets will be thrown up for the world to see. These two actually interact quite well with each other, experiencing few conflicts. Contributing to this, their relationship grants them an excellent sense of timing—they know when to act and to speak. Virgo I's are at least somewhat capable of working with or for Leo III's: they generally don't mind playing a secondary role to this dynamic, somewhat imperious partner. But in the long run Leo III energies will often prove too much for them to handle. Even so, they often have a deep understanding of the Leo III personality, and can lend them valuable support. Leo III's, for their part, may come to depend on having a Virgo I there for them, and in doing so may take this valuable association for granted.

In love affairs it is hard for these two to keep secrets from each other. Where Leo III's are happily dramatic, Virgo I's tend to be quiet and retiring observers; but that doesn't mean they escape the kind of scrutiny that is so common here. When they cannot handle this, nervous Virgo I's will often try to withdraw into their more private, structured world, which will make Leo III's feel rejected. These relationships can be passionate but also highly critical. If the partners can only take advantage of the opportunities they offer, they will be extremely beneficial to personal growth and development. Marriages in this combination are prone to be more judgmental—here Virgo I's will view Leo III's with a cold eye, being unimpressed by their histrionics.

Friendships and sibling relationships can be outstanding but are highly temperamental. In letting it all hang out, these duos show often collide powerfully in the emotional realm.

ADVICE: Even out emotions. Stay open. Take advantage of your chance to develop. Work on eliminating self-consciousness. Let it flow.

Spurred On

This relationship can be spirited and confrontational. Lively interchanges are probable between these very different individuals, and as working colleagues they usually respect each other's strengths, even if they don't care much for each other personally. Virgo II's may attack flamboyant Leo III's for insensitivity and egotism, and may be criticized in return for being uptight and judgmental. These two are extremely sensitive to disapproval, but there is a willingness to listen here, with the partners' ideas about each other often having a positive effect by spurring them on to better their best efforts.

If Leo III–Virgo II love affairs form at all, they are likely to be very direct, and short on emotional nuance. Underlying the couple's no-nonsense attitudes, however, may lie a welter of emotions that cannot be easily expressed. Suppressed feelings of anger, envy or even lust often dictate how these two treat each other in everyday life. The domestic responsibilities of marriages make them more likely to work out.

Friendships between these two can run extremely well. Close ties of belief, perhaps aesthetic, perhaps religious or spiritual, can open up new worlds, proving not just interesting but comforting. The matchup's need to share allows the partners to overcome their more selfish impulses and their fearfulness of being ignored or forgotten.

Career rivalries are not uncommon here, particularly when both partners have carved out their own niche. These two don't really deign to compete with each other, but they do keep a very close eye on each other's activities. Should Leo III's and Virgo II's work for the same organization, they are best off operating in different departments and having only occasional contact. Leo III–Virgo II sibling pairs may be extremely sensitive to each other's needs, but they can also be very irritable with each other—it is important that they both have their own private space.

ADVICE: Join forces occasionally. Overlook differences and leave the past behind. Be a little tougher. Promote openness and understanding.

THE WEEK OF THE LITERALIST

An Effective Working Combination

The strengths of this relationship are organizational and structural, so it is not surprising that the focus here can be reorganizing family, social or business groups or initiating new projects. Yoking the directional strengths and drive of Leo III's with the rationality and pragmatism of Virgo III's, these two can form an effective working combination. Virgo III's may not always approve of the showy manner of Leo III's, but they do not deny this personality's effectiveness in getting people's attention and holding it. When these two work together it is usually best for Virgo III's to do the early inside work (planning, writing proposals, doing research) and then send their well-prepared partner out into the world to make the case. When Leo III's return to report results, Virgo III's can close the circle by analyzing the data, beginning the cycle again.

In love affairs, both partners will usually be extremely guarded emotionally. Their sexual interactions can be quite thrilling, but this is no guarantee that the couple will reach any really deep level of feeling. They can both be quite selfish about getting what they want out of these relationships. As spouses they may cooperate and interact more easily, and will probably be very effective in setting up an efficient and workable family structure for daily domestic life, but they may also engage in power struggles. Although they both have nurturing tendencies, they would be advised to talk seriously about their ideas on child-rearing before committing themselves in this area.

Virgo III–Leo III parent-child relationships can be demanding and stressful, whichever partner is the parent. Even so, they will probably be the backbone of the family. Friendships in this combination, however, are likely to drift directionless if they lack a specific project to work on. Although both Virgo III's and Leo III's can stand sorely in need of relaxation, this relationship won't necessarily give it to them.

ADVICE: Build greater bonds of trust. Try to have more fun. Share as much as possible, and in all areas of your life. Open your heart if you can.

Far from the Madding Crowd

More than most, this relationship is taken up with the personal side of its partners' lives. Its focus may be their mutual exploration of hidden areas of their characters—areas perhaps quite unknown to them, for both Leo III's and Virgo-Libras tend to lean heavily on social involvements, especially in their careers. This combination introduces them to a world of deep feeling. Perhaps just because they relate so well socially, they can feel relaxed enough with each other to begin exploring this private world, far from the madding crowd.

In love affairs, friendships and marriages these two often put social interests aside. Having gotten enough company during the workday, they tend to hang out with each other privately in the evenings or on weekends. They are not opposed to socializing occasionally with friends or family, and will add color to any gathering, but they often can't wait to get away to be alone together again. Should their relationship become an active pursuit of intimate pleasures, all well and good, but such pursuits are rarely enough in themselves: the relationship demands the kind of serious attitudes that lead to understanding and personal growth, and the partners will generally have little choice but to obey if they want to feel satisfied and fulfilled.

Career matchups between these two often don't work out, just because they cannot provide the intimacy that the relationship requires. At work, the deeper analyses of motives, plans and hunches into which these two naturally fall tend to make them self-conscious, and are most often counterproductive to the job at hand. Leo III's and Virgo-Libras bring flair and style to their family group, but their need to be alone together, particularly when they are siblings, may lead to their shutting out everyone else.

ADVICE: Find a balance between social life and private life. Let go of claiming attitudes. Follow the evolutionary path. Don't shut others out.

LIBRA I

The Perfect Facade?

The intensity of this very interesting combination can strike sparks, but these two can equally well seem to get along in an easygoing and comfortable way day-to-day. The face their relationship presents to the world can be a tad misleading, then. For one thing, the nagging question keeps arising as to what is on view here: something completely at ease, or a perfect facade? In fact, there is a lot more mystery here than anyone would care to admit. Although the relationship radiates self-assurance, insecurity lurks behind its doors.

Leo III–Libra I love affairs keep many secrets that not only never see the light of day but are never even suspected from outside. It's not that the couple has any great desire to conceal or hide things, it simply knows how to keep things to itself without arousing suspicion, an art indeed. Marriages, too, can develop a deep intimacy that precludes the need to talk about it to other people, even the closest family members. The same is true in friendships, which can adhere to pacts of loyalty that are both unbreakable and unspoken, never having been discussed or openly agreed upon.

Family secrets and the like are also characteristic of parent-child and grandparent-grandchild relationships. Leo III parents may exercise a strange and puzzling power over their Libra I children, and vice versa, as if each partner were always on the point of revealing something damaging about the other, especially in the area of broken promises. A love of humorous games, riddles and paradoxes is also characteristic of this relationship, which can keep both relatives busy and amused for hours.

In the professional world, business partners in this combination can be highly persuasive in selling a product, usually because they have an inspiringly natural and unassuming manner. Calculation will be quietly at work, however, particularly when there is the possibility of a good cash return. These two are rarely swindlers or cheaters—they believe in what they are selling, but not always as much as the buyer does.

ADVICE: Are you being completely honest with each other? Something doesn't make sense. Have you solved your own mystery? Open up some doors.

Gloucester thus cleared the path to the throne, was proclaimed king, and the princes were murdered shortly after.

Brightening Up

This relationship can be extremely sensitive, sympathetic and understanding, especially in times of trouble. Libra II's have a way of lightening and brightening the day of a Leo III. Their psychological acumen can help Leo III's to work on emotional problems, teaching them how to deal with the demons that beset them. The relationship can also prove tremendously beneficial to Libra II's, strengthening their resolve and steadfastness. Leo III's may be protective of these partners to a fault, shielding them from worldly intrusions and taking a strong stand by their side when the going gets rough.

Love affairs between Leo III's and Libra II's can be sensual and pleasurable for both partners. Although Leo is a fire sign and Libra air, the Leo III–Libra II relationship is ruled by water, an element here producing free-flowing emotion and deep sympathy. Marriage can be recommended for this couple but will also test them: the hard realities of daily life may dampen their ecstatic moments and deaden their spontaneity and romantic impulses. They will either succeed magnificently or fail to cope with the exigencies of finance, child-rearing and other domestic responsibilities. Also, in both marriage and friendship, Libra II's may come to feel totally dominated by Leo III's, who only mean the best but can actually make their partners' personal development difficult or impossible. In cases such as this, Libra II's may learn invaluable lessons in standing up for themselves.

Fantasy may play too large a role in the relationship between Leo III's and Libra III's for them to make good business partners or co-workers. Siblings and parent-child combinations, however, can take their imaginative flights to the limit without causing much harm to other relatives. Leo III parents are prone to spoil their Libra II children and to dote on them.

ADVICE: Back off a bit. Your concern may not be helping. Tend to practical matters. Learn to see the miraculous in the ordinary. Stay grounded.

All or Nothing

The emphasis in this combination is on practicalities—on fortifying intentions, clarifying issues, bringing projects to fruition. Yet intense rivalries can also emerge here. This is actually not at all surprising when one considers both partners' intense need to assume the leadership role, a need that can precipitate a break between them when they meet within an organization; they may both emerge at the head of separate and often competing groups. Ideology is a tremendously important issue in this matchup. It is usually ideas that unite or divide these two even more than personal likes or dislikes. Their relationship stresses philosophical orientation, facts and the given word. Relationships between these two can range from the relaxed to the stormy but are usually dynamic. They tend to be all or nothing—the partners are either absolutely united or bitterly opposed to each other. Even when they fight, though, there is often a common bond behind their struggle that ultimately makes them less enemies and more rivals, often over control of a common cause.

In love and sibling matchups, Leo III's and Libra III's may compete for the affections of a third party who might be enchanted by their attention but appalled at the level of combat involved. Their love affairs can be sexually satisfying and show real affection but are often marred by serious power struggles. Ideology is usually less important in marriages, but the spouses often have very different ideas about how to run the family. In the domestic and financial spheres particularly, tensions and friction will be the rule until binding agreements are reached.

Friendships here can be extremely close, with considerable mutual respect. They often grow out of professional associations, although they can also arise from them. Working together will bring out all of competition and strife of which the combination is capable, but if the partners hang in there and are willing to negotiate differences over and over again, the result could be an enormous success.

ADVICE: Keep the good of the group in mind. Don't let struggles run out of hand. Keep an eye on other people who are not involved. Beware of ego drives.

THE CUSP OF DRAMA & CRITICISM
LIBRA-SCORPIO CUSP

Closing the Circle

Although this relationship can feature a lot of conflicts and differences of opinion, it is often beneficial to both partners, and usually deals with carrying on the traditions and realizing the aspirations of the group to which they belong. Libra-Scorpios often have a greater feeling for tradition than Leo III's, who can, however, motivate them and encourage them in their worldly efforts. It is extremely important that a diplomatic balance be maintained here, for if the relationship fails in diplomacy it could be disastrously split by fierce confrontations and arguments from within.

In love affairs and friendships, compromise is very important. The partners must come to realize that it is in their own best interest to give their relationship their wholehearted support. Too often, Libra-Scorpios will go too far in their lacerating criticisms of Leo III's, assuming that these faithful Lions will stick around to take whatever they can dish out. Leo III's, for their part, may be overconfident, and may assume that their willpower can keep Libra-Scorpios in line. Keeping a realistic view and being more diplomatic will help in most areas.

In marital and business partnerships, the relationship will usually devote itself to practices that promote growth and development but will mainly use conventional methods that have worked in the past. In this way it winds up supporting and perpetuating the traditional systems on which those methods are based. A great challenge to the relationship will be thinking creatively without getting carried away by the kinds of urges to which both partners can be prone as individuals. True innovation will be difficult for this couple, but will also be necessary for their continued success.

In the family, parent-child relationships in this combination can be inspiring but also disillusioning. Mutually adoring but extremely possessive attitudes are common here. Again, a more realistic view is essential if disappointments and letdowns are to be avoided later on.

ADVICE: Learn the value of compromise. Work for the common good. Give up possessive attitudes. Be as realistic as possible. Maintain stability.

SCORPIO I

An Underground Labyrinth

This extremely complex relationship is united by a common aesthetic—a love of beauty and harmony, and a shared creative vision—but may have a dark and labyrinthine emotional underground that few who view its shining exterior would suspect. Outwardly sunny, Scorpio I's deal with demonic intensities in their private lives, and Leo III's can trigger these in many hidden ways. Because neither partner rates especially high in self-understanding, the relationship risks being at the mercy of its own destructive forces.

Love affairs and marriages in this combination are often taken up with creating a happy home environment filled with design and art objects, color and light. In some ways this is an attempt to block out emotional disturbances that may be raging beneath the surface and threatening to break out. Scorpio I's may be conscious of a certain mastery over their Leo III lovers or mates, yet may simultaneously suffer from intense feelings of inferiority and despair. Leo III's are often unaware of their superior attitudes and uncaring of the suffering that Scorpio I's are going through. In arguments, when Leo III's go on a blazing attack, Scorpio I's usually retreat into their shell and then retaliate by lashing out defensively later on.

Friendships between Leo III's and Scorpio I's can be fruitful as long as they avoid deeper emotions. Patiently building trust and understanding can result in a relationship that is rock solid, reliable and trustworthy. At work, Leo III's and Scorpio I's can do well in creating attractive products and services that bring joy into the lives of others.

Parent-child relationships here are tricky and problematical. Leo III parents can dominate Scorpio I children, suppressing their more expressive side. Yet these children may come close to worshipping their Leo III parents, which will limit their personal development in ways that could prove highly debilitating in adult life. When Scorpio I's are the parents, Leo III children will probably rebel against overly controlling or claiming attitudes, in a desperate attempt to free themselves.

ADVICE: Bring the light into your personal life. Beware of building such beautiful defenses. Put your intensity to work for you. Balance inner and outer.

Pretty Tough Customers

This combination can generate a great deal of fresh new energy. Direct in orientation and explosive in power, the Leo III–Scorpio II relationship can be unstoppable, or at the very least irrepressible. These two individuals are known to others as pretty tough customers, a quality that their matchup can magnify, but within the relationship they often show each other a sweeter side. Affection and sympathy are one thing, however, vulnerability is another, and neither partner is likely to show weaknesses or leave him- or herself exposed for long.

Love affairs between these two can be torrid but at the same time highly playful. A curious mix of child-like innocence and full-bodied maturity often characterizes the matchup. Direct confrontations here are not a pretty sight—Leo III's who are used to steamrolling their opponents may be in for a nasty surprise should they try this with a Scorpio II. Marriages are not recommended here unless the two are prepared to share domestic burdens and responsibilities. Should the relationship sour, Scorpio II's will tend to hang in there, but Leo III spouses who find the marriage oppressive are quite likely to seek solace or pleasure elsewhere, or, if the going gets rough, simply to quit.

A Leo III–Scorpio II working relationship is most effective when its prodigious energies can be put to work getting new projects on the rails, often ones that have never been attempted before. Work methods tend toward the unconventional here; the relationship rarely follows the textbook. Power-oriented, this team will not hesitate to crush any opposition. They should be aware, however, that this behavior could arouse powerful animosities, and if they really have the best interests of their organization at heart they will have to learn to temper their aggression. Leo III–Scorpio II friendships and sibling relationships are powerful but often unforgiving.

ADVICE: Treat your enemies with a bit more respect. Direct your energies well. Victory is not the most important thing. Take time to relax.

SCORPIO III

Dynamo-Gyroscope

This combination can be a very fruitful one. It often functions at a high level, with the partners spurring each other on to their best efforts. Should it appear at the center of a business, school or other organization, it can act as a dynamo in generating energy but also like a gyroscope, having a built-in capacity for stability. When it is a more personal kind of relationship, Leo III's will usually be fascinated with their charming Scorpio III partners and will not hesitate to enjoy fully what they have to offer. Scorpio III's will tend to lean on the powerful shoulders of Leo III's, particularly when they are friends or family, and will gain great comfort knowing that this partner's strength is available to them in time of need. Leo III and Scorpio III form a fixed square aspect in the zodiac (they are 90° apart, and Leo and Scorpio are fixed signs), which astrologically betokens unavoidable stress. In this case, however, there is also mutual stimulation, usually toward excellence in achievement. The pair has a perfectionist bent.

For love and marriage to be successful here, Leo III's and Scorpio III's must have a good mental and social connection as well as a physical or spiritual one. This is underlined by the fact that their relationship (a fire-water combination) is ruled by the element of air, here suggesting an aspiring and communicative nature. Leo III energies can unlock deep wells of Scorpio III desire, which will draw the Leo III like a magnet. Sensual feelings are likely to continue over the years, which augurs well for a permanent connection. Having children may be a great joy in this relationship.

Professional matchups between these two are often sophisticated in the extreme. They will not allow much personal involvement—objectivity plays a large role in their commercial success. These partners will not hesitate to put themselves under tremendous pressure in order to produce the highest quality work possible. Gaining each other's respect will help these two to work effectively together.

ADVICE: Avoid overdependence. You can handle responsibility, but there is a limit. The end does not always justify the means. Respect other people.

THE CUSP OF REVOLUTION
SCORPIO-SAGITTARIUS CUSP

Making a Splash

This combination is bound to be highly competitive. Even though these two understand each other on a deep level and have the potential to get along quite well, the nature of their relationship is such that this only raises the stakes—and the machinations. As individuals, Leo III's are usually more needy of attention than Scorpio-Sagittarians, but in this relationship both partners vie equally for the spotlight. Should Leo III's win their natural place as the star of the duo, or actually defeat their partner in business, love or sports, the humiliated Scorpio-Sagittarius will chafe and plot revenge. Fortunately, serious hatred is unlikely to emerge in the relationship, since both partners see their competition as ultimately an exhilarating game—in fact, they may grow to be close friends.

In love affairs and marriages, Leo III's tend to make the bigger splash in front of friends and family, but Scorpio-Sagittarians will usually hang back and wait for their opportunity to arise. It often takes just one well-aimed dart to burst the Leo III bubble. Leo III's who try to eclipse Scorpio-Sagittarians, or talk down to them, in their domestic life together may find themselves facing full rebellion and then all-out war. More sensitive Leo III's will generally avoid such confrontations—at least after the first one. Friendships between these two are competitive, seriously enough that both partners will give their all to win. Nothing could be more humiliating in these relationships than a victory that turns out to have been a gift from the opponent. The overall tone, however, is amicable. Sibling rivalries, on the other hand, may reach alarming proportions. An older child who is surpassed by a younger one in almost any area is apt to consider this indignity a wrong that must immediately be redressed. Nothing could be more embarrassing than competition between parents and children for the spotlight, but most Leo III–Scorpio-Sagittarius relationships of this kind are giving and supportive. In career matchups, co-worker pairs in this combination must be careful to avoid ego struggles that are counterproductive to the job at hand.

ADVICE: Give up childish struggles. Show some maturity. Have fun, but not at someone else's expense. Put your energy to a more positive use.

Cultivating Patience

The focus of this relationship, and its greatest challenge, is coming into more meaningful contact with society. Both of these personalities have a rebellious or antisocial side that comes out in response to being told what to do by those in authority. Both Leo III's and Sagittarius I's have an innate sense of fairness and honesty that also often lands them in hot water. One of the important tasks for this relationship, then, is learning to be less outspoken and more diplomatic, not only toward other people but between the partners. This task will certainly include the cultivation of patience, for together these two tend to overreact.

In love affairs and marriages, each partner must quickly learn not to let the other push his or her buttons so easily. Learning to be more detached may be part of the solution; another part will be for both partners to be understanding enough to imagine themselves in the other's place. Passions often run high in this relationship, but natural affection and love will usually overcome other difficulties in the long run. Acquiring social skills as a couple interacting with others will often help maintain harmony, since it will include the attainment of politeness, diplomacy and tact.

Friendships in this combination have a chance of succeeding, but problems may arise over the strong Sagittarius I sense of right and wrong. Certain attitudes and activities of Leo III's, including their tendency to talk down to people they consider beneath them, may appear quite questionable to Sagittarius I's, who will also frown on their ability to overlook small daily tasks that they feel are just not worth their effort. Both career and family relationships will benefit from increased social contact. Sagittarius I's like to work without a lot of fuss or human interaction, and Leo III's can teach them something about the need to establish strong bonds with the people they deal with commercially. Parent-child relationships will similarly benefit from working together, and from bringing relatives together for celebrations and annual events.

ADVICE: Cultivate social skills. Learn diplomacy and tact. Keep control of your emotions. Work on lessening your irritability. Be more open with others.

Easy Outrageousness

This extremely enterprising matchup is full of life and energy. Whether these two are associates or opponents, their relationship fills the air with sparks and the night with shooting stars. This duo is not one to hang back when an especially demanding job needs getting done—they will generally be in the vanguard of any effort. So much enthusiasm and get-up-and-go can be a problem occasionally, causing the partners to overshoot the mark. Indeed, their excessive behavior can arouse the resentment and hostility of others, who may in fact be envious of their easy outrageousness.

Largesse is typical of social, professional and leisure-time activities here. These two will not hesitate to give of their time and money to assure that those they care about have what they need. Leo III's and Sagittarius II's are particularly tuned in to the socially disadvantaged, whose admiration they may awaken and whom they may inspire to better their condition. The more selfish aspects of the matchup often pop up in love affairs; especially in bed, both partners may be out for what they can get and may simply take their pleasure and run. Marriages are not recommended here without a radical reorientation of values.

Friendships between Leo III's and Sagittarius II's are often outstanding. Competitive sports and fitness activities are particularly recommended for them, helping them to engage their competitive drives and work off their frustrations. They will almost certainly have a tendency to argue, but their love of banter and light ridicule will often clear the air, allowing aggression to be expressed harmlessly. In the family, relationships between siblings of the opposite sex can be close and supportive; between siblings of the same sex, however, direct competition, of the kind that can end only in clear-cut victory or defeat, is usually the rule. Parent-child relationships may show a noticeable lack of understanding, sympathy and patience, whichever personality is cast in whichever part.

ADVICE: Temper your stance a bit. Beware of excessive behavior, which can arouse hostility. Drives to overcome should be properly channeled.

The World Stage

This relationship is usually directed outward toward the world, the stage on which these partners enjoy playing their roles to the full. Whether in the fields of communication, politics, high finance or entertainment, they can work together effectively on big projects. Confrontation would seem inevitable between these two superstrong personalities, and it is true that neither of them likes to back down or give ground—but they can have tremendous respect for each other's abilities. Although clashes are inevitable in friendships in this combination, in marriages and love affairs these two can make a great combination, especially if they are dedicated to a common cause.

Marriages are usually a better bet than friendships or family matchup which are too often torn apart by struggles to see who will come out on top. Bringing their marriage to a high social, financial, cultural or intellectual level can often unite Leo III's and Sagittarius III's and overcome personal differences or combativeness.

When taking on opponents or putting together their own team, these two are tremendously aware of their image. As partners in business enterprises or professional productions, they instinctively know that their success depends on the message they convey to others, especially as concerns their own self-confidence and credibility. Allowing for human error on the part of their employees may be a problem for the pair, who can be severe and unforgiving—to their victims, their explosions of anger may feel like getting hit by a lightning bolt. Although able to inspire great confidence in their staff, Leo III's and Sagittarius III's should realize the importance of admitting failure and giving adequate and honest praise or acknowledgment to others, including opponents. Underestimating the enemy is one of this matchup's most glaring weaknesses and can lead to its downfall.

ADVICE: Give credit to your opponents. Don't think yourself infallible or unbeatable. Assess your strengths realistically. Be more kind.

THE CUSP OF PROPHECY
SAGITTARIUS-CAPRICORN CUSP

Activating the Core

This matchup certainly has a core of power—the principal questions are how that power will be handled, and to what purposes it will be put. Radiant Leo III energies can penetrate to the darkest core of the Sagittarius-Capricorn personality, activating deep emotions, both positive and negative. Sagittarius-Capricorn emotional magnetism can likewise touch off smoldering Leo III energies, making them erupt volcanically. This combination of powerful forces in the relationship makes it a dangerous one, to be approached with great care. Fortunately, these partners rarely rush into involvements with each other; they characteristically hang back a little warily, assessing the territory with an experienced eye.

Love affairs between these two are often kept hidden from the prying eyes of the world. Neither partner is interested in exhibiting the relationship publicly—their energies are usually turned inward. They may find great sexual satisfaction here, but also emotional suffering and perhaps, on a regular basis, depression. Leo III's will be frustrated when Sagittarius-Capricorns clam up, and Sagittarius-Capricorns will find Leo III's bossy and restrictive, yet both may also experience all-time highs of passion with each other. They should try to understand their psychological states more fully and to even out their moods if they are to achieve lasting happiness in love or marriage.

At work and in friendships and sibling ties, Leo III's and Sagittarius-Capricorns can move between being on-again, off-again allies and being enemies at various stages of their lives together. It is not that their relationship is an on-again-off-again scenario, but rather that it is a real love-hate situation, in which extreme feelings are almost always present. If the power that the relationship generates can be turned outward to mutually rewarding projects, the pair will get along tolerably well. If it is turned inward on the partners, however, the results can be highly destructive. While the choice would seem to rest with the partners themselves, in reality it often lies with external circumstances and the subtle workings of fate.

ADVICE: Lighten up. Try having fun with others in a social setting. Avoid extremes of feeling. Direct your energy toward a constructive goal.

December 26–January 2

THE WEEK OF THE RULER
CAPRICORN I

Few Excuses

This pair's domination of any situation will be so complete that anyone in their vicinity will prefer getting out of their way to grappling with their monolithic relationship on any level. Their attitudes are highly critical, but they are as demanding of themselves as they are of others, accepting few excuses for shoddy or substandard work or results. When these two team up, their co-workers, employees or children may have a really tough time.

Love affairs between Leo III's and Capricorn I's can initially be quite dramatic, but over the years will become more conservative, even grave or humorless. Serious efforts should be made either to breathe new life into such relationships or else to let go of them and move on. Marriages may bleed over into career areas, with both spouses playing effective roles in business and professional endeavors. Capricorn I's want to rule, and may do well managing, organizing and administering affairs in the office or home, while Leo III's like to lead, and will take the initiative in the world, or inspirationally direct personnel in their endeavors. At home these two get along well enough as long as the division of labor is equitable and they both have their own unquestioned domain. Children should be given choices whenever they approach these parents for something, however, and their individuality should be encouraged.

Friendships in this combination can feature ironic and sarcastic attitudes that are also extremely funny. These two love a good joke and don't mind laughing at their own foibles, or at those of their relationship. Incongruities of all sorts attract their attention, and they are telling in their comments and cutting in their criticism.

In parent-child relationships of either possible combination, parents can be terribly demanding of their children, who tend to be obedient and respectful but also fearful. Unless avenues of communication are opened and empathy is deepened, the relationship can become increasingly silent and forbidding as the years go by.

ADVICE: Maintain your individuality. Allow room for choice. Beware of repressive tendencies. Lessen inhibitions.

Practical Dreams

This relationship is most fulfilled when ideas are brought down from loftier realms and grounded as realities. These two are specialists at achieving their dreams, and their highly practical intelligence prejudices results in their favor and guarantees success. They are capable of giving up a lot in order to get where they want to go. By learning to do without and subjecting themselves to strict discipline, they slowly build willpower and self-confidence. The road to success for this relationship is made up of many tiny steps, but the march toward the goal is unrelenting.

Love affairs between Leo III's and Capricorn II's take time to develop. Their passion is not immediately overwhelming, but grows as the relationship deepens and bonds of trust are formed. It is important to this couple that their love be recognized and taken seriously by family and friends. Whether or not they are married is less important than their mutual commitment—in fact, marriage is unlikely to change their relationship much. Taking absolute responsibility for one's actions is a given in this matchup.

It is usually best for lovers, mates and friends in this combination to have separate careers. They can help each other out from time to time, but they should have their own primary professional interest. If they do become co-workers or business partners, Leo III's and Capricorn II's do best when they avoid the personal realm, so that they can give all their energy to the job at hand.

Leo III's are usually attentive and caring parents to Capricorn II children but tend to dominate their lives. Adolescence generally brings the usual separation between parent and child, but this may take the form of Capricorn II kids firmly bidding their Leo III parents farewell and going off on their own, rather than growing rebellious.

ADVICE: Be silly together occasionally. Be a bit more forgiving. Spoil yourself from time to time. Spartan attitudes are not necessarily fulfilling.

THE WEEK OF DOMINANCE
CAPRICORN III

Guarded Respect

This relationship is likely to be extremely intense. Leo III and Capricorn III lie quincunx to each other in the zodiac (150° apart), so astrology predicts some instability between them. In addition, they are both very stubborn and are unlikely to back down in any confrontation, so that their tempers can quickly flare and get out of hand. Anger, aggression and violence can emerge in this relationship, and special care will have to be devoted to handling them. It would be a mistake to suppress them, or to see them as unacceptable; a healthier approach would be to sublimate them into healthy competition, perhaps in sports but also in challenging card and board games like bridge and chess.

Love affairs between these two may not develop at all, since each has a certain wariness of the other's power to hurt them. But should they become fascinated with each other, they are likely to struggle to occupy the dominant role. Marriages are only recommended for highly evolved Leo III's and Capricorn III's who have fully thought out the implications of their heavy confrontations in a daily living situation. Should these spouses have children, they must be aware of being overprotective of them, smothering their independence and individuality.

Friendships are less likely in this combination than rivalries and outright hostilities. Where Leo III's tend to be lightning swift in their movements, Capricorn III's hang in there, providing effective resistance. Both partners are liable to cast themselves in heroic roles, depending on others to respond to their often charismatic leadership qualities.

Leo III–Capricorn III sibling relationships can be remarkable, particularly when of the same sex. Although the pair will inevitably argue and act unpredictably in childhood, later on they are likely to become an effective team in some field or another, possibly in the financial, political or physical realm. Business relationships and partnerships are not recommended in this combination.

ADVICE: Get your differences out in the open. Confrontation may be necessary. Limit emotional involvement. Channel energies constructively.

Learning Endeavors

This combination suggests a teacher-student relationship. Even in the absence of a formal school situation, these two are likely to be united in a learning endeavor, often more practical than theoretical in nature. Should Capricorn-Aquarians be cast in the role of teacher, they will guide the abundant energies of Leo III's with unerring instinct. Leo III's may prove a bit dictatorial in their treatment of Capricorn-Aquarians, initially arousing their rebellion, but will ultimately earn their respect.

In love affairs and friendships the relationship's energy tends to go into deepening its ties of intimacy and sensuousness. There is often a secretive quality here. Although these two are emotionally flammable, their combination can be remarkably well grounded. They often prefer spending time alone together to social contacts, and should beware of becoming too isolated or mutually dependent.

Marital and family relationships between Leo III's and Capricorn-Aquarians can provide just the right balance between personal and social interaction. Parent-child relationships are often outstanding and especially educational, so long as the child is given room for self-expression and experiment. Whether as spouses or as other combinations of relatives, Leo III's and Capricorn-Aquarians are best together when they avoid a strictly didactic approach: the partner in the student role should be taught to teach him- or herself, gradually permitting the teacher to disengage from the whole learning process.

Career connections between these two can be terrific. Usually one partner has more experience and shows the other the ropes. Competitive urges seldom surface, for Leo III's and Capricorn-Aquarians generally concentrate on what they can learn from each other rather than getting involved in power struggles. The relationship emphasizes creative endeavors of all sorts, with connections relating to the arts being particularly favored.

ADVICE: Take time out from your studies to have fun. Don't get too tied up in each other's thoughts. Maintain individuality. Personalize expression.

Heavy Karma

This relationship can be deeply symbiotic. While not always mutually beneficial, the Leo III-Aquarius I matchup is extremely close, and in some cases the pair are inseparable. These two are especially conjoined in the realm of feelings, but this doesn't mean their connection will necessarily be loving or even sympathetic. One gets the impression, however, that the relationship has a heavy karma—that it was fated or meant to be.

Like other relationships in this combination, romantic ties here will have an air of inevitability. The way Leo III and Aquarius I lovers meet will almost always have a hint of the serendipitous. Nor do chance happenings end with early meetings: the unexpected is usually a part of the relationship's very fabric. Making schedules, dates or checklists is often considered undesirable here, for the spontaneous expression of feelings is a high priority.

In marriage, Leo III dominance usually emerges and, in fact, may be needed to get more flaky Aquarius I mates on track. Aquarius I's will benefit from this kind of pressure, usually becoming stronger and more responsible through the relationship's influence. And if things are going well with their Aquarius I partners, Leo III's may be able to give up their need to control and direct.

At work, Aquarius I mental creativity may arouse the envy and resentment of Leo III's, making them look as if they were moving in slow motion—even though they themselves are no slouches in creative agility. Yet the combination of these two make together can be even more inventive and productive than either of them alone, assuming, of course, that they permit their respective strengths to coalesce. As in certain chemical reactions, a catalyst may have to be present to start the whole process off: perhaps a person, a place, even a certain kind of day. Sibling relationships and friendships can also be inseparable, but care must be taken not to arouse the jealousy of other friends and relatives.

ADVICE: A little structure doesn't hurt. Don't overdo your reliance on spontaneity and chance. Be aware of the needs of others.

THE WEEK OF YOUTH & EASE
 AQUARIUS II

The Path of Least Resistance

These two will invariably take the path of least resistance in whatever ventures and directions on which they embark. Their ability to identify and teach themselves the simpler and more direct route to any problem's solution will make them seem quite brilliant. Their relationship makes them nonconformists, unafraid to choose the road less traveled. It is usually the Aquarius II who shows the Leo III how to do things the easier way. Leo III Leaders tend to barge through any obstacles they face, whereas Aquarius II's usually find another way around any difficulties without confronting them directly.

In love affairs, Leo III intensity is tempered by the more relaxed attitudes of Aquarius II's, producing a matchup at once exciting and enjoyable. Both partners often grow to love their relationship as much as or more than they like each other. Thus the affair treads the middle ground, partaking of the best each partner has to offer. Its sensuous tendency is underlined by the fact that Leo III and Aquarius II, ruled by fire and air, respectively, form a relationship governed by the element of earth, here emphasizing carnal delights. Marriages between these two may not be taken completely seriously by other people but can work out well as long as Leo III's don't get too bossy and Aquarius II's too irresponsible.

Sibling matchups and friendships in this combination are not always harmonious, since each partner is all too aware when he or she is being coerced or manipulated by the other. The fist-in-the-velvet-glove routine works well on other people but is all too transparent when employed within the relationship itself. Career matchups, on the other hand, can go extremely well, usually with Leo III's taking the lead and Aquarius II's acting as their right hand, advisor and confessor. Hanging loose in the saddle is not a Leo III specialty, but this relationship's natural quality eases tensions all around. Leo III's lend dynamism to Aquarius II's, who, in turn, can make their partner's directives more palatable to other people.

ADVICE: You can't have things your own way all the time—sometimes you have to conform. Take but also give. Be both more and less serious.

Bringing Ideals to Others

A study in polarity, and standing 180° apart in the zodiac, these two exert a tremendous pull on each other. Their relationship often has a magnetic attraction, irresistible in its charm. Working through synergy, it can reconcile and integrate its partners' extreme differences in attitude and lifestyle. Aquarius III's can be every bit as strong as Leo III's, but in a different way: they have a visionary power, which is often pitted against Leo III physical power but in the best-case scenario coalesces with it, so that the pair work together to bring higher ideals and beliefs to their immediate circle, or to the public at large.

The human condition is an important concern for these two, who will want to live life on a higher plane. The love they express for each other tends to be of the platonic variety, and abjures selfish advantage or pleasure. Leo III's discover a whole new side of themselves in this relationship, but must be careful of succumbing to the lure of exerting psychological power or attempting manipulation once they let go of their preoccupation with physical power. These two often view their marriages with a reverent and even religious awe. Disillusionment and rejection are often the fruits of such unrealistic visions and expectations.

At work and in the family, Leo III's and Aquarius III's must be careful not to get carried away by their ideas, particularly should they be tempted to try to convert their co-workers or relatives to their belief system. Proselytizing or better-than-thou attitudes on this pair's part may lead to their being shunned by others in their group. When they are friends, their shared idealistic impulses may involve them in each other's beliefs and goals, but should not so divest them of their egos that they no longer fully acknowledge their own individuality. Following a path of service, perhaps by taking on quite menial responsibilities and grounding itself in the here and now, will help this relationship keep its feet on the ground.

ADVICE: Don't elevate yourself above others. Speak in simple language. Don't convince others against their will. Remember who you really are.

AQUARIUS-PISCES CUSP

Battering Down the Gates

The focus of this combination is an interesting blend of conservative and radical viewpoints. It is a relationship that simultaneously values traditions of all kinds and espouses modern, forward-looking ideas. Some might term it new age or consider it esoteric. Aquarius-Pisces are tough on the outside but hypersensitive on the inside, whereas Leo III's can be tough all the way through. While these two are very similar in their drive toward worldly success, then, they are quite different when it comes to their inner lives and their approach to their relationship.

In love affairs and friendships, Aquarius-Pisces have much to teach Leo III's about emotion, but first they usually have to unlock their own repressed feelings. The unique chemistry of their relationship with Leo III's can often accomplish exactly this, since they will have encountered a partner who will not take no for an answer if a deeper involvement with an Aquarius-Pisces is the goal. By hammering down their defenses, Leo III's often succeed in reaching that deep and invaluable emotional stratum in which Aquarius-Pisces have so much to offer.

Marriages and family relationships may suffer when Aquarius-Pisces end up having to shoulder crushing domestic burdens. True, their need to nurture must be met, but an unsympathetic Leo III should not be allowed to take advantage in this area. It is extremely important in these matchups for Leo III's to work side by side with Aquarius-Pisces in sharing mundane daily tasks, not only for their own personal development but to strengthen the relationship and show they really care.

At work, these two could well go to the top, whether as business partners or freelancers. The product they sell or the service they offer often has a claim to better existing alternatives through its mix of the traditional and the radical. Fiercely competitive against rivals, the relationship is usually united internally. Should its energy wane or its vision blur, however, squabbles and rifts will inevitably surface.

ADVICE: Don't just steamroll your opponents. Show sympathy and understanding toward each other. Dig deep for emotional treasure.

THE WEEK OF SPIRIT
PISCES I

Overly Open

This relationship is all about communication and versatility, encouraging its partners to be more open and to branch out in their interests. Its energies will have to be controlled and directed, however, for they can easily get out of control. And although researching new areas is characteristic of the relationship, these two should be careful not to waver in their attention to the job at hand or to spread themselves too thin. Self-defeating in certain respects, the Leo III-Pisces I relationship needs to keep its feet on the ground and its eye on the prize.

Love affairs may suffer through an overly open outlook, with commitment seldom considered, let alone discussed. These partners often don't oppose each other's attractions to other people, and even encourage them, a trait that may undermine the relationship. And when they really need to spend a good deal of time together, slowly building their intimacy, they tend to be busily flying off in all sorts of other directions. The couple should not attempt marriage unless these tendencies can be kept under control and commitment can be worked solidly into the equation.

Professional relationships between these two can be excellent. Social and financial partnerships often succeed through their mix of Pisces I technical expertise, sensitivity and experience with Leo III aggression, leadership and drive. The relationship will be effective in a wide variety of endeavors, but will generally attain its greatest success in one area in which it should invest the bulk of its energy. Friends and family members are not advised to work together in business.

Parent-child relationships between Leo III's and Pisces I's are likely to be somewhat stormy. Leo III parents may dominate their younger Pisces I children, then face extreme discontent and rebellion when those children reach adolescence. Pisces I parents are unlikely to understand their Leo III children or to provide the kind of strong guidance they require.

ADVICE: Try doing one thing at a time. Don't get sidetracked so easily. Keep your energies well directed. Be realistic about what commitment means to you.

Breathing Space

This relationship does best when its partners have a great deal of independence from each other in daily life. It's not that they aren't close—on the contrary; it's just that the Leo III–Pisces II relationship is usually at its most healthy when both partners have enough breathing space and don't feel crowded. Although Pisces II's are generally the more introverted of these two, they have an extroverted side that the relationship can activate. They will also be sensitive to the needs of their partner in this combination, which Leo III's will appreciate, although this does not mean that Pisces II's will ultimately be able to satisfy them—or even be interested in doing so.

In the bedroom, Leo III's may prove too demanding for Pisces II's, who often prefer to keep it light. Should Pisces II's get deeply involved emotionally, on the other hand—a very big “if”—they may have trouble letting go of their powerful leonine mates, and in extreme cases may manifest a sex-and-love addiction. The problem for Pisces II's is that Leo III's can give a great deal of intensity to a love affair without being really involved at a deep emotional level. The extreme independence of thought and action that is the byproduct of this matchup may make marriage difficult or impossible.

Friends and siblings in this combination are likely to relate very well, especially if they don't have to see each other that often. They may depend on each other quite heavily for advice in times of stress. Here the relationship stresses mutual support and represents a font of understanding for its partners.

Working relationships between Leo III's and Pisces II's are best formed in situations where they are not closely cooperating co-workers but are independent of each other and able to make their own decisions, perhaps consulting with each other from time to time. As business partners they must be sure to have a good bookkeeper, accountant and financial adviser, for their skills in this area are not always the best.

ADVICE: Get your emotions sorted out. Decide how deeply you want to get involved. Walk your own path. Give unconditionally and fully.

Speaking with a Glance

The level of communication in this relationship is extremely high—thought ranges freely. Both of these individuals are interested in ideas, and their matchup is particularly characterized by intellectual concentration and attention to detail. Little escapes the relationship's attention. This means that it can be mercilessly critical, of both itself and other people; and all that mental energy can create nervousness and worry. To avoid headaches and other symptoms of stress, Leo III's and Pisces III's will have to learn to indulge their more playful, nonserious side, even trying consciously to emphasize the physical realm more.

In love affairs, these two feel free enough to express themselves without fear of rejection. Yet their relationship can be extremely unstable emotionally. Leo III and Pisces III lie quincunx to each other in the zodiac (150° apart), a situation of instability that tends to raise the level of sexual desire and excitement but does not do much for the relationship's longevity. Marriage should only be attempted after a long-standing love affair has developed deep bonds of understanding and trust.

The advantages of open lines of communication can be observed clearly in this pair's working relationships and friendships. Leo III's tend to be more direct, Pisces III's more subtle, but this is a combination in which everything can be said with only a quick glance or gesture, particularly in crisis situations. The partners certainly know how to meet deadlines and produce under pressure, an ability that is often their trademark.

Siblings, especially of the same sex, may suffer together under parental restriction and long to break free. The relationship will usually let them cover for each other, providing an umbrella of protection against punishment meted out from above. It is not uncommon for these siblings to break out of the home situation together, and even to share living space in their early adult life.

ADVICE: Don't play as bard as you work—learn to relax. Empty so you can recharge. Deadlines can be postponed. Turn off your mental motor.

August 19–25

THE CUSP OF EXPOSURE
LEO-VIRGO CUSP

Playing Peekaboo

Is there room in there for both of you? These two are capable of stuffing their secrets in a cupboard, then crawling inside themselves. Hide-and-seek is a favorite Leo-Virgo pastime, and secrecy can be twice as much fun for two Leo-Virgos as it is for one. This combination may focus on the game of hiding the truth, then suddenly revealing it—an amusing and involving pastime but not necessarily a productive one. The relationship's emotional quality can be lighthearted or serious, helpful or obstructive, friendly or vicious, but in all cases it tends to be unpredictable.

Love affairs here are complex, confusing and seldom emotionally or physically satisfying. They seem to augment this personality's need to play emotional games, so that the lovers in this on-again, off-again relationship will rarely know where they stand with each other. Marriages, too, tend to lack stability, and are not particularly recommended.

Friendships between Leo-Virgos can be a lot of fun but also somewhat frustrating. The partners are somewhat unwilling to show their hands and have trouble being fully open with each other. Their pleasure in alternate concealment and revelation may prevent them from establishing trust. It's not that they outright lie to each other, but stretching or hiding the truth is commonplace here.

Some Leo-Virgo parent-child and sibling pairs compete directly with each other, others support and benefit from each other. In either case, they usually take notice of each other, although not necessarily openly: in fact, it may be hard for them to get each other's full attention, since Leo-Virgos are often wrapped up in their own world. In family matters they should recognize their shared interests and put their preoccupation with their private games on hold. At work, Leo-Virgos make good partners only if they make an effort to be objective and to keep two sets of eyes on the store. Unfortunately, mistrust may make them so vigilant about watching each other that they don't realize the cash register is being rifled by someone else.

ADVICE: Straighten out the confusion or nothing will get done. Be more honest. Spend less time playing games. Try to be more consistent and reliable.

The Chance for Metamorphosis

Emotional instability is the bugaboo of both Leo-Virgos and Virgo I's. The synergy of their relationship magnifies this weakness, which means that it magnifies nervousness, sensitivity and insecurity. Because these personalities can have an unsettling effect on each other, they must work hard to maintain a modicum of stability between them. On the other hand, the sensitivity and the feelings of many sorts that are likely to emerge in any type of relationship in this combination are, in an odd way, an achievement for these two, who, as individuals, tend to repress and hide their problems. Their combination encourages their interest in any and all spiritual or psychological disciplines that may help in the journey.

The challenges of love and marriage are multiple for this pair. Faced with unfamiliar emotions that they may be feeling deeply for the first time, their relationship at first tends to have to struggle to find itself. Once the partners become more comfortable with each other's feelings, they will begin to build bonds of understanding and trust. If they can hang in there through what are likely to be many setbacks, changes of direction and minor successes, the relationship will come into its own, often becoming increasingly spiritual. Over years of personal development, then, a basically practical couple may undergo a complete metamorphosis.

Friendships do best when grounded in physical activity. Competition is good for these two, since it brings out their forceful side and encourages them to develop willpower and concentration. In business pursuits and other professional enterprises, the establishment of concrete goals will bring out Leo-Virgo-Virgo I aspiration and fighting spirit. The building of self-confidence can be tremendously furthered by the prior achievement of a string of small successes. In the family, parent-child pairs in this combination may be somewhat dull, failing to inspire each other.

ADVICE: Discover feelings but keep stable. Stay practical but aim for the stars. Don't be discouraged. Develop self-confidence. Believe.

 VIRGO II

Shifting Toward the Attainable

This relationship can get caught up in analyzing and creating all kinds of theoretical constructs. Becoming too reliant on a system of thought can be a problem here; a shift of emphasis toward the practical and objective is often desirable for these two. Their relationship has an inherent need for philosophical systems or structures, even a dependence on them, but it is important that these structures be periodically reevaluated or simply redirected. Leo-Virgos and Virgo II's may enjoy attempting the impossible together, but they are actually better off reaching for whatever is within their grasp. The problem is that backing a sure thing may prove a bit dull for them, taking the edge off the relationship's initiative and impulse.

Love and marriage between these two often don't gel. The more puzzling and inaccessible elements of their character somehow predominate here, preventing close contact. Sexual interactions can be exciting but without deep feeling.

Family relationships, especially between siblings, are sometimes extremely secretive. Keeping quiet about their shared activities is the categorical imperative for these two, with any infringements being severely punished. Parents of siblings in this combination may find it a tough nut to crack. As friends, Leo-Virgos and Virgo II's are similarly tight and often intensely physical, reveling in competitive sports and exercise. They also love games of strategy and humor, not excluding sarcasm, irony and even ridicule, and their own relationship has the ability not to take itself too seriously, pointing the finger as often at itself as at other people. This sign of health bodes well for these friendships, which have a mental power and an ability to interrelate that may help them to outlive many more "serious" matchups.

Working relationships here can be effective and efficient. These two are good at sniffing out wastefulness and inefficiency in other people's work, so that they can function well as managers, analysts and consultants. One drawback is that as a team they may overemphasize reason at the expense of intuition.

ADVICE: Don't give up your spontaneity. Too much planning deadens creativity. Trust your heart more, your head less. Loosen up.

THE WEEK OF THE LITERALIST
 VIRGO III

Freedom from Words

The partners in this highly personal relationship appreciate not only each other's abilities and talents but also their mutual chemistry. As individuals they are both cool customers, tending to be quite detached and objective, yet despite their strong mental connection the underlying foundation of their relationship is likely to be emotional. Leo-Virgos often see Virgo III's as role models or judges of their work, so that some kind of teacher-student relationship is common here, transmuting into the roles of guide or source of inspiration and follower or even worshiper. The relationship frequently appears in situations where the Virgo III is recognized as the established authority and the Leo-Virgo is cast as the young upstart on the scene.

Love affairs, friendships and marriages here can become isolated and exclusive, with neither partner having much time for anyone else but each other. Spiritual bonds may be as strong as physical ones here, but the heart of the relationship will be emotional. Both Leo-Virgos and Virgo III's sometimes have a strongly language-oriented, verbal side, which they enjoy sharing with each other. At the same time, they are both happy to establish a strong connection through unspoken feelings, taking pleasure in freeing themselves from the responsibility of expressing themselves with words. Indeed, their emotional interactions are often unspoken, which opens up whole new personal areas for mutual exploration.

Virgo III parents and bosses will fill a natural role with respect to Leo-Virgo children and employees, and will demonstrate great empathy and understanding. They will also have critical and judgmental opinions and attitudes to express, however, which should prove rewarding for Leo-Virgos, but if delivered too harshly could wound them deeply. Should Leo-Virgos idolize Virgo III's unduly, they may put these literal-minded realists in a very difficult position. They will have to shrug off these projections if they are to be themselves.

ADVICE: Don't get so caught up with each other. Establish individual values. Open up to others. Beware of isolation. Balance the mental and the emotional.

THE CUSP OF BEAUTY
VIRGO-LIBRA CUSP

Form Over Substance

This relationship skims along life's surface, preferring not to venture too deeply into motivations and feelings. Its emphasis is on outward beauty of form: although these two would certainly never accept something that was beautiful on the outside but rotten underneath, they probably wouldn't question its inner workings as long as it was functioning properly. This detached sort of objectivity does not bode well for deeper relationships. Leo-Virgos are drawn toward the worldliness and charm of Virgo-Libras, but are a bit appalled by their lack of interest in the deeper and more troubled elements in their own characters. Virgo-Libras may be highly attracted by the outward appearance of Leo-Virgos, but will have trouble understanding their preoccupation with the personal side of life. The pair may try to escape into an inviting pleasure labyrinth together, or may pursue the more exciting elements of social life and entertainment.

Love affairs in this combination are unlikely to be stable or deep. Sexual and sensuous fulfillment can soar, but the relationship does not foster deep understanding or trust. Despite their initial fascination, these two are basically uninterested in getting to know each other better. Nor are marriages much recommended: they can be a practical and sociable solution to problems the partners may have individually—loneliness, for example—but tend to be emotionally immature. Spouses in this combination will not want to rush into having children.

As family members, Leo-Virgos and Virgo-Libras may have trouble understanding each other. Breakdowns of communication will be common. As friends, however, they will have a lot of interests to share, perhaps as collectors or entertainment or sports fans. Games, too, can be absorbing and even obsessive for them. Working relationships may be more favorable still, with ambitious Leo-Virgos benefiting from the taste and the managerial and social expertise of Virgo-Libras, and more content Virgo-Libras getting the push they need from Leo-Virgo drive and willpower. Here the relationship shows great cleverness and adaptability, especially in finance. Leo-Virgos and Virgo-Libras are likely to be successful partners in freelance and business enterprises.

ADVICE: Get to know yourself and each other better. Try to look deeper. Grow up emotionally. Puzzles can be solved, even human ones.

LIBRA I

Disinterest in Reality

This matchup shows a marked lack of interest in dealing with reality. Although both partners are more than capable of technical and practical accomplishment (in fact, as individuals they often place too much emphasis there), as a pair they are likely to give themselves over to the enjoyable pursuit of fantasy and imagination. By loosening the grip of their perfectionism, their relationship frees its partners and gives them a greater awareness of the sacred. Leo-Virgos consider themselves tougher and stronger than Libra I's, but here they will be more than willing to explore spiritual matters.

Love affairs in this combination can be an engaging blend of sensual and intellectual stimulation. It is not in the least unusual for the couple to discuss their sexual interaction even while in the midst of it. Both partners are open to experiment, and to giving their imaginations free rein. Seldom boring, Leo-Virgo-Libra I interactions may lack something in mystery, but they more than make up for it in excitement. Marriages may dull the intensity of love affairs, and the more intuitive Leo-Virgo and Libra I lovers may never seriously consider it.

Friendships and sibling relationships between these two are competitive but also mutually supportive and defensive. It may be unrealistic for the pair to take on heavy responsibilities—if they do, this could ultimately split them apart—but at the same time, meeting reasonable daily demands and deadlines will make them more responsible. Learning to share and abandoning selfish impulses will probably be the greatest challenge for this matchup. Animosity and rivalries often emerge between Leo-Virgo and Libra I business colleagues and co-workers. Secret envy may also play an important but undeclared role in their relationship. Outright competition and combat are quite possible between these two, especially when they serve rival organizations, and the insecurities that often come to the fore in such confrontations can bring out some of their very worst personal traits, particularly in terms of nastiness and aggression. It is also possible, however, for these situations to bring out their very best performances.

ADVICE: Stop your worst side from coming out in argument. Take care of practical matters. Don't let responsibilities slide. Beware of taking on too much.

THE WEEK OF SOCIETY
LIBRA II

Insatiable Interest

This combination manifests a considerable concern with its own needs, and with arranging life so that those needs are met and satisfied. It always handles these issues very practically, first analyzing a problem, then crafting a solution. If the partners are a tight-knit pair, this approach can go far in prolonging the relationship, but it can also happen that they are more concerned with their own needs than with their needs as a couple. An interesting dynamic can operate here when socially skilled Libra II's try to help the more personal side of Leo-Virgos—their inner life, ideas and thoughts—come to public light. As Libra II's discover this partner, they may want to get more involved. Leo-Virgos usually value their privacy, and will repel sheer inquisitiveness, but if they are interested in a Libra II's advances they could be surprisingly open to this partner's overtures.

Love affairs, marriages and friendships can all be sparked by the interest a Libra II takes in a Leo-Virgo. The more mysterious and inscrutable the Leo-Virgo is, the more interested the Libra II will often be. Should these two fall in love, the Leo-Virgo will often become even more completely the object of the Libra II's interest, but the relationship may grow more balanced over time. Together these partners will manifest an interest in all sorts of subjects, from science to film to psychology, and will seek to increase their knowledge through both study and experience. In marriages and friendships these pursuits may near the obsessive, and could eventually lead to a career path.

When these two work together the Leo-Virgo does best as the creative force, the Libra II as the producer, manager or promoter of the Leo-Virgo's work. A kind of hard practicality that sometimes emerges here goes a long way toward bringing success. The partners must be careful to prevent power drives from getting out of control—this combination can have a ruthless cast, through its driven desire to succeed. Libra II parents are unfortunately capable of exploiting a Leo-Virgo child.

ADVICE: Try to be more moderate in your desires and interests. Monomania reduces peripheral vision. Value the privacy of those who interest you.

THE WEEK OF THEATER
LIBRA III

A Relaxed Collaboration

These two are likely to collaborate on projects that bring something new and exciting into the lives of other people. Whether their relationship emerges in the professional or the private side of their lives, it gives them an opportunity to kick ideas around in an environment of easy camaraderie. Libra III's can be powerfully dominant personalities, but their aggression is generally less apparent in this relationship. Leo-Virgos for their part may feel free enough with Libra III's to express their creativity, knowing they are appreciated and understood. The relationship may mark a high point in the lives of both partners, working to renew their good feelings about themselves and to reaffirm their self-confidence.

The condition these two could be in when coming out of a failed relationship or marriage might help a love affair between them take root. Their self-esteem will usually be low at this point. Such relationships generally start slowly, but move with a knowing purposefulness. Building trust is not always easy, but each small step increases confidence, establishing the idea that love might once more be a possibility. Leo-Virgos will appreciate not being hurried or pushed, and Libra III's will value simply being given a second chance to get it right.

Friendships in this combination may fall victim to temperamental differences, unless the pair are involved together in a hobby or social activity. Libra III parents tend to be bossy and a bit insensitive to the special needs of their Leo-Virgo children; Leo-Virgo parents can adore their Libra III children, but may feel inadequate to handle their often tumultuous energies.

In the professional sphere, this can be a truly special meeting of the minds, and its success can be tremendous. But as working teams Leo-Virgos and Libra III's often come together only for a single project; they rarely form lifelong partnerships. Even if their collaboration fades after the first endeavor, however, it may well mark a milestone in both partners' careers, and could launch them confidently in a whole new direction.

ADVICE: Enjoy it while it lasts. Try to be more sensitive to each other's wishes. Build your self-confidence. Don't be unduly influenced by your past.

THE CUSP OF DRAMA & CRITICISM
LIBRA-SCORPIO CUSP

An Imposing Front

This relationship puts a strong emphasis on outward appearance. Both partners here will be critical of each other's speech, looks, dress and manner, since they will assume that they will be hampered in their social aspirations if either of them appears looking dowdy or uncouth. Too much preparation before going out in public, however, may destroy the natural and unpremeditated air that can help put others at ease, so that a rigid insistence on turning an imposing face to the world may work against itself. Similarly, if this pair judges other people on how they look or act, it may miss out on the real person behind the mask. Bringing the inner and outer self into balance will be an important challenge for this relationship.

Love affairs here can be highly passionate, but the emphasis on superficial things bodes ill for deeper commitments. For these two, sexual enjoyment may actually depend on the other partner passing the objective tests of good looks and keeping fit. Since increasing age can obviously erode this ideal, relatively short-lived love affairs are more common than marriage between Leo-Virgos and Libra-Scorpios. Digging deep enough to appreciate the inner qualities of one's lover or mate is sorely needed in this combination.

Friendships and sibling relationships, too, may be powerfully affected by aesthetic likes and dislikes. Style and fashion often figure prominently, and not being "cool" enough in one's appearance or mien can be considered a grave sin indeed. Distressing situations can arise when one sibling or friend feels forced to reject the other for failing to meet the stern criteria of a social clique or individual. Looking back on such actions later in life, the partners may see their younger selves as immature, disloyal and unfeeling.

Leo-Virgos in the workplace are sometimes wary of Libra-Scorpio disapproval and a little distrustful of them. Libra-Scorpios meanwhile may be bothered by Leo-Virgo secretiveness. Forming a business or being executives in a company will be difficult for this pair, but they can be co-workers if their job is simple and well defined.

ADVICE: Relax a bit about your appearance. Take the time to know the inner person. Ease up in judgments and criticism.

THE WEEK OF INTENSITY
SCORPIO I

Well Camouflaged

These two often convey a youthful impression and present an innocent and childlike exterior. The appearance of innocence has little to do with either the Leo-Virgo or the Scorpio I character; it is a product of their relationship. Both of these partners are actually objective, discerning people by nature, yet their relationship disguises their realism, presenting a facade that in many ways serves as a defense or smoke screen. Both of them are also highly secretive, and they make their convincingly sunny image a camouflage for whatever they are hiding. As Freud discovered, behind the open and trusting exterior that a child presents to the world lurks a dark side that can be chillingly selfish, ruthless and aggressive.

In love affairs and friendships the true nature of both partners can be revealed quite starkly, at least in private, where the childlike mask will be dropped whenever these two strong wills clash in combat. But few will see this side of the couple, who in public will be much less candid about their disagreements. And the relationship will still have a youthful quality—meaning that the partners' repartee will range from the playful, comic and good-natured to the immature, self-centered and petulant. When struggling with each other for dominance, these two often look like two children fighting over a toy.

Most marriages are necessarily more social in nature, and here the spouses don the child mask in confronting the world. This can pose problems for their children, who are sometimes robbed of their childhood by parents who don't yet seem to have become adults. Role reversals are common here, with the children having to act as the parents in some situations—as mediators in their parents' stormy relationship, for example.

Boss-employee and parent-child relationships between Leo-Virgos and Scorpio I's, of whichever combination, can have an objective and realistic outlook that doesn't kid itself about niceties and accepts a Machiavellian view of the world. Here the childlike may be openly eschewed in favor of a somewhat forced maturity and an attempt at the appearance of omniscience.

ADVICE: Why hide? Let other people see what you are really like. Cultivate honesty and transparency. Give up power struggles. Your energy can be better spent.

Pride in Achievement

This relationship demands the highest level of performance its partners are capable of. Giving less than one's best is considered an egregious sin in this matchup. Even the relationship itself, be it personal or professional, has to be near perfect—not that mistakes are completely unacceptable, but it must be obvious that they have arisen out of unavoidable or unforeseen circumstances rather than from human error. Great pride is taken in achievement here, but affection, sympathy and kindness are too often trampled in the rush toward the stunning victory or conquest. Recognition is important to these partners, but not really necessary; they are usually well aware of their own excellence, and don't need much in the way of kudos.

Love affairs here are curiously unconcerned with the outside world but no less devoted to excellence. Checklists and evaluations can pop up in the strangest places in these relationships, not least in more intimate areas such as the bedroom. Not only can the demand for an objectively high degree of performance put the partners under some strain, it can result in a loss of feeling. Unfortunately, the Leo-Virgo-Scorpio II couple often mistakes sympathy or forgiveness for a sign of weakness or sloppiness. Marriages may be overly concerned with status, money, possessions and other trappings of power. When these two get romantic, they have sometimes fallen in love with matter rather than spirit.

Co-workers in this combination can form an outstanding team, capable of predictably high achievement. This attribute is less useful in friendships, which are often dominated by the values of achievement and success rather than trust and intimacy. As friends these partners may never reach deep levels of understanding. Parent and child in this combination demand the best from and for each other, but although each partner may well be able to produce the results that the other requires, children may feel more exploited than loved. Reevaluations and reversals are possible here, however, and these two can reach a healthy compromise in which the pursuit of excellence is balanced by empathy and kindness.

ADVICE: Don't forsake human values. Excellence isn't everything. Allow for mistakes—they are part of life. Learn from your errors. Be forgiving.

THE WEEK OF CHARM
SCORPIO III

Forces Beyond Its Control

This relationship can bring out the more flamboyant side of its partners. The chemistry here is intense, and may arouse feelings of all kinds, both positive and negative. These two hold back little in their confrontations, whether in the boardroom or the bedroom. The relationship often focuses on one of the partner's careers, or on the pair's popularity, no matter how humble its scope. Both partners can be cautious and mistrustful about exposing their deeper feelings, so that they may not really share their inner lives, no matter how passionate their interaction appears. The relationship is often driven by forces beyond its control, whether karmic, personal or social.

Love affairs can be sudden and torrid, but can also burn out just as quickly. Sympathy, kindness and consideration rarely play important roles here; in fact, both partners may be feeding off jealousy or anger toward a third person who completes their love triangle, often an individual who has ignored or badly treated one of them in the past. It does not usually occur to this couple to make a conscious decision about marriage one way or the other, and if it does occur to them, this may come about through either the pressure of circumstances or a lack of real concern.

Family matchups, especially between fathers and daughters or mothers and sons, are characterized by competition for attention. The partners may adore each other, but each of them often tries to highlight their own difficulties and struggles. Friendships are more equally balanced but can still be emotionally volatile. Either the Leo-Virgo or the Scorpio III may initially have begun the friendship out of a need to be associated with a better-known personality.

As co-workers, Leo-Virgos and Scorpio III's will often be sensitive about who gets the main credit for a job well done. Some time, even years, may have to pass before they are able to view their relationship itself as the entity to be acclaimed or blamed. Only then can they give themselves really selflessly to it.

ADVICE: Be more aware of yourself. Realize your common interest. Be more kind and sympathetic. Don't monopolize other people's attention.

THE CUSP OF REVOLUTION
SCORPIO-SAGITTARIUS CUSP

Rolling Up Sleeves

This relationship is primarily social. The partners do well together in projects that involve other people, particularly when they themselves form an important part of the team. Their interest is not just managerial or theoretical but intensely practical, for they don't mind rolling up their sleeves, getting in there and getting their hands dirty. Both Leo-Virgos and Scorpio-Sagittarians have a strong work ethic to draw on here.

Romantic involvements between these two are rarely in the cards, for their relationships as friends, associates or social partners are easily upset by physical intimacy. For these two, friendships and even marriages are better-functioning relationships than love affairs: as friends or spouses they will love entertaining, giving dinners or parties, decorating and planning celebrations. Leo-Virgo flair and Scorpio-Sagittarius charm complement each other, producing results that are pleasing and fun.

At work and in family life, colleagues and relatives in this combination are often found at the forefront in representing their group, or putting on productions and presentations. Here they have a tendency toward conflict, especially when it comes to determining what direction future endeavors should take. Leo-Virgo and Scorpio-Sagittarius are square to each other in the zodiac (they lie 90° apart), which makes traditional astrology predict friction and all kinds of emotional manifesting between them. These qualities may appear, however, as push, drive and the impetus to get things done. More often than not, the partners will work together on one or two big projects, or hook up occasionally from time to time, rather than working together steadily and without interruption. Particularly good at collaborating under pressure, they can be called on in times of emergency or stress to meet deadlines and accomplish what others might find difficult or impossible.

ADVICE: Try for more consistency of action. Stress should not be the primary motivation. Ask others to help out, too. Don't be afraid to admit your weaknesses.

A Need for Attention

Temperamental to the point of occasional explosiveness, this relationship brings out Leo-Virgos' fiery side. Anger constantly gets in the way of this pair, who would objectively be capable of blazing new trails, especially professionally, were it not for their emotional differences. Part of their difficulty is the competitive nature of both the individuals and the matchup. These two fight for the attention of their group, or of a third party near and dear to both. Should they be able to put their need for attention behind them, they are capable of great things, but until then they are likely to fritter away their time hurling barbs at each other.

In love affairs, aggression can be sublimated into sex, with quite satisfying results. But it is in marriage that the combination's greatest successes often occur, particularly when important domestic, financial or career projects occupy the partners and make them work shoulder to shoulder. Lasting respect can be built over time here, but unavoidable conflicts can equally well emerge, eventually leading to a breakup. In either case, honesty will usually prevail. These relationships rarely drift without direction.

Friendships and sibling matchups do better when the partners don't spend a lot of time together with little to do. Unfortunately, Leo-Virgos and Sagittarius I's have a way of getting severely on each other's nerves. They sometimes annoy each other purposely, as if for kicks. Yet when, as friends, they let loose with their mutual appreciation of culture, sports or technical matters, or when they work on a pet hobby, their problems seem to disappear like magic.

Parent-child pairs in this combination are prone to compete for the other parent's affection. Although all-out war threatens to break out periodically, most of the time emotions are kept on a slow boil. In very subtle ways, the partners engage in countless games and intrigues, which have the effect, for better or worse, of binding the relationship closer rather than breaking it apart.

ADVICE: Put your differences behind you. Compromise. Personal disagreements are holding you back. Put arguments to rest. Concentrate on your work.

Craving Entertainment

Outgoing tendencies prevail here. This matchup is characterized by a love of vibrant experience, which can take the form both of a craving for all sorts of entertainment (but principally dance, music, film and design) and of generating such work itself. These two have a knack for putting new twists to old themes, and can inspire each other to new heights of creativity. The life of any party, they are often socially popular. Unfortunately their extroversion sometimes serves as an escape from problems within the relationship that need attention. Leo-Virgos are usually more likely to be aware of these problems, but may be diverted from them by strong pressure from their partners; In quiet moments of reflection, however, they are capable of bringing Sagittarius II's face to face with a problem and encouraging them to talk about it rather than ignoring it. Such moments may mark the start of a sorely needed process of self-examination and personal growth.

Love affairs can open lines of communication and trust between these partners. If Sagittarius II's feel truly accepted by Leo-Virgos, they are likely to begin to trust them, and will not run so fast from any sign of psychological or emotional difficulty. Leo-Virgos must beware of a tendency on the part of their Sagittarius II partners to become unduly attached, apply undue pressure or become demanding. Sagittarius II's will often be heard saying, "You're the only one who understands." Marriages are a bit more subdued, especially with the arrival of children, whose presence can induce more self-awareness and feelings of responsibility in both parents.

Friendships and sibling matchups in this combination usually see the more theatrical side of the relationship emerging, and a seemingly inexhaustible desire to have fun with other people, punctuated by comedy, impersonations, virtuoso displays of feeling and a wide variety of dramatic devices. Since these tendencies also appear in work relationships, more traditional or corporate environments may not be particularly favored for this pair; creative fields of endeavor are more likely to be profitable.

ADVICE: Enjoy being theatrical, but take a break sometimes. Learn more about yourself. Strengthen your identity. Learn to trust yourself more.

Passing the Baton

This relationship is often concerned with the themes of succession and power—with whether the baton of authority, when it is passed from a Leo-Virgo to a Sagittarius III or vice versa, is handed on or taken by force. Such processes usually take place within the structure of a family, professional or social unit, although they may also involve a more personal passing of the mantle outside this kind of group context. Most often it is the Sagittarius III who is in the position of power and the Leo-Virgo who is given or takes control. The circumstances and feelings involved can be quite ambiguous, and are never as simple as they seem. Perhaps both partners appear to be on the same side when in fact they are rivals or even enemies; perhaps they seem to be combatants when in fact their lineages and even their very existences are interdependent. In the same way, the act of succession itself may seem voluntary to some observers, an act of coercion to others.

The theme of succession is not usually apparent per se in love affairs and marriages, but it is echoed in the issue of power. No matter how sensually rewarding the relationship is, Leo-Virgos will often feel misunderstood and unappreciated by their dominant Sagittarius III mates. Their self-esteem is likely to sink, to the point where the Sagittarius III's may have to deal with their depressions.

Succession is a more obvious issue between parents and children, or in an organization with a boss and a partner or subordinate. In more subtle forms, it can also appear in friendships. A family business often faces the seemingly inevitable process of succession as parents age and children grow into maturity: problems can arise when the children have doubts, or are not really interested in heading in a direction predetermined by the parent, forcing the business to be sold or passed out of the family altogether. Sagittarius III's are likely to be stubborn and unyielding in these situations. Leo-Virgos are more adaptable, but often because they are insecure and hungry.

ADVICE: Be sensitive to needs and wants. Show more interest. Don't assume that group priorities are more important than individual ones.

The Third Person

This combination has a powerful social awareness that is at once penetrating and detached. The partners are able to step back and evaluate the machinations at work in any situation—even their own, as if they were a third invisible person in their own relationship. These two have a lot in common. They both tend to be private individuals hiding a secret or two, and they don't readily trust people. They also have the same elemental makeup (both are fire-earth combinations), and their signs lie in a pleasing trine aspect (at 120° to each other) in the zodiac. In other words they interact well. Together they love observing other people, and they share a curiosity about riddles and mysteries, including their own, which they solve by applying both reason and intuition, like private detectives.

Love affairs and marriages between these two are not as common as one would think; they both have a need to hide themselves away somewhat, so that it will take someone really magnetic to draw them out. If they are brought together by a third person, however, they may opt for the safety of their similarity, rather than risking the possibility of further hurt or misunderstanding in a new relationship.

Friendships are usually the most fruitful relationships in this combination. They often include a shared interest—perhaps an area of study, an appreciation of the arts or some form of physical exercise. If Leo-Virgos and Sagittarius-Capricorns meet in their student days, they usually keep track of each other over the years, although their relationship may not continue to be close. They may share an involvement with a third person, whether romantically or as a friend, and this can give them overlapping knowledge and experience. Professional and business relationships can work well if the partners have a common interest, perhaps best applied in the area of research and development rather than in the executive sphere. In the family, Leo-Virgo and Sagittarius-Capricorn cousins may offer each other the affection and understanding that parents or other relatives are unable to provide.

ADVICE: Take a firmer stand. Strengthen your will to succeed. Raise your self-esteem. Avoid self-pity like poison. Be more open with other people.

THE WEEK OF THE RULER
CAPRICORN I

Hard Pragmatism

This matchup is stubborn and recalcitrant in the face of authority and all forms of domination, whether these stem from the other partner or whether the partners bond together against the outside world. The relationship often puts time and money into establishing an enterprise, which may well prove financially profitable; together these two have a hard kind of pragmatism, so that if success fails to arrive within a reasonable period, they will waste no more energy on the project. Capricorn I's are generally responsible enough to be trusted, but this is no guarantee that Leo-Virgos will let them into their lives.

Love affairs are not particularly recommended here: personal conflicts, and the partners' inability to open up to each other at even a reasonable level, will undercut the value of their physical involvement. Should they marry, buying a house and setting up their domestic infrastructure will be a primary concern for them. Leo-Virgos will appreciate the security this marriage will afford them, but overdominant Capricorn I's will seize the chance to exercise their talent for ruling the roost, and this will almost certainly lead to a head-on clash of energies. Leo-Virgos may serve in a secondary role for a while, even for years, but they will eventually have enough, rebel, try to express themselves more fully and demand more from the relationship. Parent-child matchups with Capricorn I's in the parental role may follow a similar pattern as Leo-Virgo children grow more assertive.

Work relationships benefit from Leo-Virgo analytic and observational skills and Capricorn I financial talent. Personal interaction is usually kept to a minimum here, at least if harmony is the goal. Friendships do best when they do not include business dealings, although volunteer work or community service can work out well as long as both friends have an equal say in the direction their association takes.

ADVICE: Give each other a break. Drop judgmental attitudes. Be more sympathetic and sharing. Play and have fun together.

A Controlled Emotional Response

Strong feelings are one hallmark of this relationship; a controlled emotional response to them is another. Privacy and secrecy often have a priority here, alongside a demand for a solid front against the intrusions of the world. Neither partner is especially interested in letting other people in on their thoughts and feelings, a tendency their relationship magnifies. Conflicts are inevitable between these two, and they are private enough people that deep rifts may form in the structure of the relationship without either of them being the wiser.

The power struggles in play here may revolve around ideology. In marriages and love affairs, these two seldom fully see eye to eye in their beliefs, which causes friction on an almost daily basis. Unless compromises are reached or truces agreed upon, these conflicts can wear the relationship down until they impair its ability to heal itself. The partners may have to learn to be diplomatic and to put their irritation with each other to rest. Emotional control is often used as a weapon here, with both partners maintaining silence for long periods, concealing their true feelings and withholding their approval.

The key to successful family matchups is mutual respect. Until this is accomplished, the relationship may be stormy, filled with recrimination and blame. Friendships are often able to channel the intensity here more constructively, particularly in pursuits that allow for a full expenditure of energy, whether physical or mental.

Work relationships can be outstanding, for both of these partners are capable of being absolutely determined that their projects will be successful, and their ambitions generally complement each other. Leo-Virgos and Capricorn II's know instinctively that giving up their individual ego prerogatives and putting their energies to the service of their common good can bring them both far.

ADVICE: Learn to compromise. Put conflicts to rest. Building mutual respect is key. Don't be afraid to admit you were wrong; don't be afraid to show weakness.

A Sacred Trust

The transmission of ideas is of paramount importance in this relationship; these two have a great deal to talk about and share. A one-on-one learning situation often works well here. The partners may be involved with a body of theoretical knowledge, possibly religious, technical, scientific or philosophical, which provides a common ground of study. This learning project can be serious, but doesn't have to be—it is often tremendously challenging, but it can also be fun. Nor does the emphasis on study mean that the physical side of life is absent, for the pair may well be involved in competitive sports and exercise. Whatever the area of study, Leo-Virgo–Capricorn III relationships usually settle on one topic and concentrate on it, rather than seeking diversity.

In matters of the heart, Leo-Virgos and Capricorn III's tend to give their all, and their love may reach for the stars in its soaring bliss. It will rarely fail to be grounded in the here and now, however. Although both partners can be stubborn and unyielding in arguments, they will usually make up their differences when locked in each other's embrace. Marriages may tend toward the prosaic, but the partners will rarely feel let down, for they will feel instinctively that these relationships involve a whole different set of parameters from a love affair, and that they constitute a sacred trust.

Friendships and family matchups usually include a central activity of study. Formal schooling, private lessons and workshops are all possible activities to be shared by Leo-Virgo and Capricorn III siblings or friends. Especially at the college or university level, where the mentor-protégé variety of relationship is quite likely, it also often happens that teacher-student relationships evolve into friendships and in rare cases into love affairs and even marriages. Should involvement in a particular area of interest become deep enough, Leo-Virgos and Capricorn III's might form a business partnership built around a school or other learning center. Devoting themselves to the development of young people can become a specialty for these two.

ADVICE: Don't take advantage of your power. Respect the space and opinions of others. Study is only one way. Don't ignore the value of life experience.

THE CUSP OF MYSTERY & IMAGINATION
CAPRICORN-AQUARIUS CUSP

A Personal Brand of Expression

This relationship generally cares little about what other people think, and will rarely let society's expectations get in the way of its own highly personal brand of expression. Leo-Virgos are stimulated by Capricorn-Aquarius verve, and Capricorn-Aquarians are fascinated by half-hidden Leo-Virgo energies. The synergy of their relationship often magnifies the more flamboyant side of both partners, creating quite an outrageous mutual stance. Deeply rewarding for both partners, this combination allows them a depth of feeling and a sense of freedom that are hard for them to come by elsewhere.

Leo-Virgo-Capricorn-Aquarius love affairs can be wild and wacky. Their tendency to let it all hang out often hides a more private, serious side to their relationship, which is actually quite deeply committed and loyal. Both partners may have a roving eye, but they can be surprisingly faithful to one another. Sexual currents run deep here, but are predicated on Leo-Virgos' complete trust, which Capricorn-Aquarians should never betray. Marriage can also work out well, with both partners giving generously of their energies to make the matchup a success.

Instabilities may arise in friendships through envy, covetousness or pride. Leo-Virgos and Capricorn-Aquarians must beware of undermining these relationships through excessive selfishness and holding back from true sharing. Learning to give unconditionally will be an important lesson for them both to learn. In boss-employee and parent-child relationships in this combination, the partners may be mutually fascinated with each other's world. The empathy of Capricorn-Aquarius bosses or parents for Leo-Virgos is often so profound that they can form a very clear picture of their employees' or children's minds, penetrating to deep, hidden worlds where the secrets of the heart can be read.

ADVICE: Don't be so eager to shock. Be more confident of yourself. Beware of selfishness. Have more respect for privacy. Tend to yourself.

Easy Interchanges

A completely natural expression of feelings appears in this relationship, which does well with easy exchanges and less well when bogged down in heavy emotions. The relationship has a sensuous air—a love of food, say, and of physical pleasure in general. Both partners will enjoy good conversation, and will pick each other's brains over the minutiae of interesting topics. Quick-witted Aquarius I's will find Leo-Virgos a good match when it comes to following the latest scientific discoveries or appreciating current trends in the arts and entertainment. Should their conversations involve conflict, however, or grow heated, these two will begin to feel completely out of synch.

Leo-Virgos in love with Aquarius I's will have a difficult time if they expect this partner to be faithful. Aquarius I's have to be free, and do best with lovers, mates and friends who understand this. Because the relationship is natural in its focus, favoring honesty, openness and being oneself, the spectacle of infidelity might be openly paraded before the eyes of Leo-Virgos, making them feel let down or even betrayed. In some ways it would be better for Aquarius I's to be a bit more secretive or at least discreet about what they're doing when they're away. Part of the problem is that Leo-Virgos are unlikely to supply Aquarius I's with the emotional stability they crave in a partner, so that the relationship may exhibit great volatility.

Work relationships between these partners can work out in the short term, but will rarely succeed in establishing a lasting financial or ideological basis. Enterprises involving media, public relations, publishing and the arts are particularly favored here. In the long run, Aquarius I business partners may demand too much attention for Leo-Virgo taste, and may have too little psychological understanding of their colleague to keep him or her happy. Siblings in this combination often have great times together, enjoying the outdoors and seeking excitement, risk and adventure.

ADVICE: Try to show more discretion. Keep it light. Demand less attention. Work on being more practical and responsible.

Keeping Up Appearances

A combination symbolically governed by the element of water, this relationship is likely to involve a free flow of feelings. In fact these two may be magnetically drawn to each other, not only respecting each other at the most basic level but conceiving a deep mutual passion. Other people may see them as something of an odd couple, and they are indeed usually quite different as individuals, but their relationship itself has a unique charm for them—they are more attracted by their combination than they are by each other. We may find this pair trying to keep up an appearance of normalcy when in fact their relationship is quite unusual.

Love affairs can be sexually rewarding and can reach deep levels emotionally. Aquarius II's may occasionally find themselves out of their depth here, but they will be fascinated by the complexity of the Leo-Virgo personality and gratified to be involved with it. Leo-Virgos will enjoy the relative simplicity of their interactions with Aquarius II partners. These love affairs may well evolve toward marriage, which can work surprisingly well: Leo-Virgos can exercise a subtle hold on Aquarius II spouses that will keep them from looking elsewhere for gratification.

Complex dependency issues can arise between Leo-Virgo parents and Aquarius II children. Their efforts to please each other often go awry, signaling a basic problem of communication. Aquarius II parents, meanwhile, cannot always fathom the complexity of their Leo-Virgo children. Yet there is generally enough love and concern in these relationships to guarantee some reward in both combinations. Leo-Virgo-Aquarius II friendships have their ups and downs, but are unusually devoted and committed. In the career realm, Leo-Virgo's and Aquarius II's both have abundant mental abilities that are quite capable of coalescing. Their relationships can bring solid successes. Planning new projects and analyzing the drawbacks and defects of earlier ones are especially noteworthy skills here. But Leo-Virgos should make conscious efforts to keep their personal problems out of the workplace, for Aquarius II's will not allow such issues to intrude on their work.

ADVICE: Don't take too much for granted. Hard work will be required. Be more accepting and less demanding. Time is the great healer.

Greater Than the Sum of Its Parts

These two can give as good as they get. The energy of their relationship is often extremely high—far greater than the sum of their energies as individuals. This synergistic chemistry is also effective when they are competitors battling it out in the financial, social, political or sporting arenas. One is impressed by the balance here, although Leo-Virgos often seem more inspirational to Aquarius II's than the other way around.

Love affairs here are spurred not so much by passion as by mutual interests and affection. It is more a matter of liking than of loving, which can augur well for the relationship's longevity. Empathy allows for understanding and understanding for trust. These love affairs often prove ideal candidates for marriages. Such is the closeness here that should one of the partners fall in love with a third person who is also a mutual friend, the relationship may continue along relatively successfully as a ménage à trois, formally or informally.

In the professional world it makes little difference whether Leo-Virgos and Aquarius II's are colleagues or rivals, since sooner or later they may wind up working for the same organization anyway. Their tremendous respect for each other takes them far beyond any shallow desire for conquest or victory. The equality of sibling matchups between these two, particularly when they are of the opposite sex, is reflected in similarly respectful and supportive attitudes. These relationships may continue to be active well into young adulthood and beyond.

In friendships, on the other hand, Leo-Virgos and Aquarius II's must be careful to keep their competitive drives from getting out of hand. Their overconfidence about their unbeatability as a team can eventually lead to disillusionment, internal strife and breakup. Scaling back their ambitions and saving their prodigious energies for other areas will allow them to relax and enjoy what could be a fun-filled association.

ADVICE: Don't let competitive drives get out of hand. You might also work on enjoying yourself. Beware of expectations. Take things as they come.

Resistance to Incursions

These two have a lot in common in their similar desire to hide their real selves from the world and to defend their cherished self-protective position. Reinforced when they come together, this attitude becomes an almost revolutionary zeal for being left in peace. But whereas Leo-Virgos sometimes tend to conceal, sometimes to reveal themselves in relation to the world, Aquarius-Pisces tend to build a wall around themselves so that no one can get in, ever. Lying opposite each other in the zodiac, these two form a polar relationship that can be very resistant to incursions into its private space. They can be aggressive with people who don't understand them, especially with authority figures such as parents or bosses—it's like them or leave them alone. But rebellious as they are when younger, they risk being overly dogmatic themselves once they rise to their own positions of power or authority. At this point, too, cracks can appear within the relationship itself, with major power struggles occurring between two previously oppressed individuals.

Lovers and spouses in this combination will simply turn their back on those who don't understand them, quickly tiring of family members who don't accept them and lashing out in anger, sarcasm or scorn. These periodic outbursts are extremely important, not only for dealing with pent-up aggressions but also for making the statement that the couple will no longer be treated like a doormat. The Leo-Virgo-Aquarius-Pisces relationship is highly protective; these partners will spring to each other's defense.

On the job, Leo-Virgo and Aquarius-Pisces co-workers form a solid bond against unfair treatment from superiors, never hesitating to stick up for and if necessary to represent other members of their group. A distaste for unfairness may lead them to get involved in union activities or less formal work groups. Friendships are similarly united, and sibling pairs in this combination form a solid bulwark against parental mistreatment or abuse. Indeed, they must be careful not to be too rebellious, causing major family rifts and possibly inviting severe countermeasures.

ADVICE: Be more patient sometimes. Stand up for yourself but don't overreact. Beware of becoming intolerant. Keep your anger under control.

THE WEEK OF SPIRIT
PISCES I

Independence of Action

These two can be extremely close, but they have to be able to maintain their independence from one another at all costs. Pisces I's can play inspirational roles in the lives of Leo-Virgos, coming to represent a certain ideal of integrity and faithful commitment. Leo-Virgos, for their part, often bring an admirably critical outlook and a spark of excitement to the daily lives of Pisces I's. The pair can complement each other beautifully, particularly since their relationship functions well in both social and personal settings. The intimacy here is more soulful than physical—these partners treat one another with understanding and respect.

The challenge of friendships and love affairs is to bring the partners' moods into synch, so that the partners feel comfortable with and accepted by each other. Leo-Virgos can sometimes intrude on the more reflective side of Pisces I's when in the grip of a sudden impulse. But they will admire the altruistic Pisces I need to share and to serve, even though it will make them feel guilty or unworthy at times. The signal that things are going well in this relationship is an easy give-and-take on the part of both partners. Marriage may be impossible for these two, who tend to have a strong fear of losing their autonomy. Although both of them can handle giving up a certain amount of freedom by working in an organization, they will stubbornly resist losing independence in their private lives.

Careerwise these two are best off working as freelancers or as entrepreneurs, maintaining as much independence from each other as possible. The communication between them is often so good that they only occasionally need to touch base, being generally confident and aware of each other's thoughts and actions. Parent-child relationships of either combination must beware of arousing rebellion due to overly strict or judgmental attitudes, and of becoming too involved in each other's lives.

ADVICE: Fear of losing independence may actually be fear of getting close. Be as honest as possible. Don't take too much for granted. Try harder not to hang on too tight.

THE WEEK OF THE LONER
PISCES II

Taking a Stand

This relationship seeks to free itself from restrictions. The emphasis here is on the relationship as a unit and on its liberty to act on its own, without restraint, and to exercise its own good judgment about what it thinks best. Especially resistant to the blandishments of society and to the limitations imposed by tradition, these two can be trailblazers in opening up new forms of expression. Leo-Virgos tend to be the more intuitive and original of the pair, Pisces II's the more sensitive and perfectionist, but their creative energies coalesce synergistically to produce results that may not be everyone's cup of tea but can exert a long-range effect.

Part of the challenge here will be to keep the momentum going, since these two can be extremely sensitive to criticism and at times will feel like giving up, particularly when they are married or work together. Their need to be free implies a certain willpower to resist, and if necessary to carry on a protracted struggle, but this kind of stamina can actually be lacking here. Still, although they may tend to give up when the going gets really rough, without real opposition the relationship can be long-lived, since these spouses and co-workers are usually well suited.

Although Leo-Virgo is a fire-earth combination and Pisces is ruled by water, the Leo-Virgo-Pisces-II relationship is governed by air, an element here inducing a refusal to be tied down. Yet in matters of love and friendship these two are sometimes unable to see things realistically or to act decisively—rather than taking a stand in emotional matters, they have a tendency to drift and avoid confrontation, hoping or assuming that problems will go away. In short, they don't always show the best sense. Parent-child relationships here are too likely to assume unconventional attitudes that set other relatives' teeth on edge. The animosities engendered this way can ultimately prove detrimental to the family as a whole.

ADVICE: Strengthen your will to resist and to go the distance. Don't just give lip service to freedom—live it. Taking a stand now will save you problems later on.

THE WEEK OF DANCERS & DREAMERS
PISCES III

Finding Common Ground

The driving force behind this combination is usually the partners' need to feel unique or special, or to be doing something unusual or thrilling. Whether for good or ill, they are likely to share an unequalled relationship, far different than any they have previously experienced. They tend to have developed along different lines: whereas Leo-Virgos are usually caught up with personal issues, Pisces III's are more geared toward universal, philosophical, social or even romantic concerns. As a consequence their relationship is sometimes out of synch, featuring broad splits and differences of opinion. It isn't always possible for it to become a long-lasting tie.

Stability is difficult to attain in love affairs. Leo-Virgos can be irritated by the dreamier character aspects of Pisces III's, who for their part may grow tired of Leo-Virgos' inability to learn from experience. They often take to marriage and can be highly nurturing, but they may not find the support and permanence they require in a Leo-Virgo spouse. As a couple they will tend to travel and move a lot rather than establishing their home in one place.

Friendships can be relatively long-lasting but will not necessarily involve the pair seeing each other more often. The relationship's penchant for originality can lead to some unusual meetings, associations or hobbies, in which Leo-Virgos and Pisces III's will often find deep fulfillment. Not infrequently, the more sensitive and inward side of each partner is activated here, and they may come to rely on each other's help in mutual introspection. When they meet as rivals or opponents, on the other hand, they may, in their clash, unwittingly touch deep emotional areas and activate each other's most basic beliefs. It may be possible for family members in this combination to work together in a business, religious or social activity. The relationship often combines practicality and idealism in a strange blend that will be interesting to those of a more down-to-earth philosophical bent. Dealing creatively with everyday matters is a specialty of this matchup.

ADVICE: Take a stand. Running away from problems rarely helps. Face up to differences and work out solutions. Find common ground.

THE WEEK OF SYSTEM BUILDERS
VIRGO I

August 26–September 2

THE WEEK OF SYSTEM BUILDERS
VIRGO I

To the Last Detail

Two Virgo I's can make an excellent match, but whether they will choose each other is another story—they most often pick people very different from themselves for their involvements. Service-oriented to the extreme, they can work well together in a variety of different settings. Because they both can function as assistants or co-workers, there should be little conflict between them over who takes the leadership role, unless a strong executive is not available and the group is in need of direction.

In love affairs and marriages Virgo I's tend to become involved either with strong figures, for whom they can assume the role of helpmate, or with needy people in whose company they can satisfy their need to serve. These choices sometimes turn out to be mistakes, but they do arouse Virgo I feelings, and this polarity is absent in their relationships with other Virgo I's. It is unlikely, then, that sparks of passion will fly here, even though the pair may have quite a satisfying physical relationship. Romance is also apt to be lacking in Virgo I marriages, although practical considerations and the day-to-day running of a household will usually take up much of the partners' energies and keep them fairly happy.

Friendships, family relationships and career matchups between Virgo I's may overlap. Should they meet for the first time on the job, they will usually be able to work together effectively as long as their duties and goals are well defined. Not always interested in really imaginative projects, they tend to put their efforts into practical endeavors that are well grounded and yield solid results. Virgo I friends can count on each other in times of need. As family members they have a feeling for tradition and for doing things in a structured, pre-ordained way, and are quite likely to go into business together, or to cooperate in heading up a sports, religious, political or community group. Communication tends to be close here—most rules and values are tacitly understood without being spoken.

ADVICE: Sometimes you don't know what you've got until you lose it. Make the most of a good thing. Don't be sidetracked by self-defeating diversions.

September 3–10

THE WEEK OF THE ENIGMA
VIRGO II

Workaholic Tendencies

Both of these partners have a strong tendency to withdraw regularly from the world and to lead highly private personal lives. The synergy of their relationship magnifies this trait, making isolation almost a prerequisite for them at times. It's not that they can't be forceful and reliable in their professional worlds—far from it. It is simply that there is a split between their public and their private lives that must be rigorously observed. Their friends, for example, often come from their own professional strata, but their meetings with these people are usually subject to social rules that determine when and how often they can appropriately see each other outside work.

Love affairs and marriages between Virgo I's and Virgo II's can be quietly emotional relationships in which feelings are expressed without a lot of fuss. Virgo I's may be a little unprepared for Virgo II sexual tastes, but once they catch on the relationship can prove mutually satisfying. The couple tends to stay together through thick and thin. If breakups do occur they can be extremely painful. Friendships and sibling matchups may suffer from hypersensitivity, nervousness and instability, since these partners do not have a stabilizing effect on each other emotionally.

Workaholic tendencies seem inevitable in the Virgo I–Virgo II professional relationship, but hard work is not the only norm here: these two usually get involved in projects they find interesting and absorbing in the extreme. Their relationship elevates their work to a position of primary importance, and their concentration on it is total. Virgo I's often have a somewhat rigid insistence on doing things the proper way, and this can bother Virgo II's, who enjoy doing things in their own strange manner. In truth, though, the irritation here is mutual, for this Virgo II trait can upset Virgo I's no end—they will see it as unnecessary and wasteful. Yet both partners are careful, and together they can exert a beneficial braking influence on more impulsive types in a group or organization.

ADVICE: Try to relax a bit. Forget about work occasionally. Make some new friends who know how to have fun. Be more flexible and open.

THE WEEK OF THE LITERALIST
VIRGO III

No Holding Back

You wouldn't predict this relationship—it comes out of nowhere, often taking friends and family by surprise. Yet besides being unusual it is highly symbiotic. Virgo III's often find themselves directing the physical energy of Virgo I's. They may also be cast in the role of parent, boss, teacher or manager, while the Virgo I becomes the child, employee, student or performer. Virgo III's are often the older and more experienced of the two, and quite likely have already played the performing role in an earlier setting. Virgo I's can fairly easily accept the advice and guidance of these older Virgo III's, who are powerfully perceptive and analytic and will encourage their native ability. Quite often, they go on to take the managerial role themselves later in life.

Strongest in the classroom, the sports field or on the hard road of life, this relationship is often a solid bond based on trust and mutual understanding. Yet it is not an easy pairing, emotionally, physically or spiritually. Both of these two can be extremely rough and uncompromising with each other. In reprimanding a missed signal or other error, they are unlikely to hold back, teaching a lesson that the other partner will remember for a long time. Relationships in this combination, and their methods of teaching and learning, are generally speaking quite different from each other, since each matchup will be tailored to its partners' specific needs and talents. This is not to say that they won't pass on established wisdom and existing methods in the most exacting way but only that they recognize that exceptions to the rule, and direct experience, are as important as the rules themselves.

Virgo I–Virgo III work relationships can be as rewarding for the boss as for the employee, and mutually beneficial to both, especially when the team's work is reviewed by superiors. Lovers, friends and mates in this combination are usually less successful in the emotional and sensual realms than when they team up on social, financial or educational projects.

ADVICE: Don't take every mistake so seriously. When something stops being fun, maybe it's time to quit. Put more time into exploring thoughts and feelings.

RELATIONSHIPS

WEAKNESSES: OUT OF TOUCH, UNCONTROLLED, DISILLUSIONED

THE CUSP OF BEAUTY
VIRGO-LIBRA CUSP

The Chain of Miracles

This relationship often focuses on its awe in the face of something bigger than itself, whether a belief, a vision of a strange world or a magnificent work of art. The beauty or aestheticism of Virgo-Libras can awaken deep emotion in even the most prosaic Virgo I's, who, spellbound by what this partner offers them, may quickly scrap their usual common sense, gladly trading it in for just a few moments of additional pleasure. Indeed the relationship can have a devastating effect on their whole outlook on life. At the same time it will show Virgo-Libras, who often see only surface beauty, how to look for deeper levels of meaning in life.

When love affairs are on, they may trash the Virgo I taste for preparation and planning in all things: they emphasize spontaneity and the manifold surprises of coincidence and accident. Virgo-Libras of the more conservative kind may also be amazed at the things that can happen once they give up control. Ecstatic peak experiences can emerge unpredictably here, dazzling both partners. Marriage need not dull this richness unless the spouses feel too much need to structure their activities, perhaps fearing that they are acting irresponsibly.

Career matchups are best off when the pair can share their sense of wonder with other people—perhaps in some spiritual field, which, however, can overlap with commercial possibilities. In fact wealth will seem to come of its own accord to these two, who will not view it as antithetical to enlightenment. They may well view money as just one more link in the amazing chain of miracles that seems to permeate their lives.

Siblings of the opposite sex will have a magical relationship from an early age, imaginatively filled with genies, dragons, cyborgs and other fantastic creatures. Encouraged to leave these pursuits behind with childhood, Virgo I's and Virgo-Libras may rebel, refusing to give up their special fantasy bond. Friends who grow up together are more likely to drift apart, saying goodbye, with some sadness, to a relationship without which their imaginative creations may quickly fade away.

ADVICE: Keep hold of awe and wonder but also of reality. Find beauty in the common things of life. Everyday things have their own magic.

VIRGO I

September 25–October 2

THE WEEK OF THE PERFECTIONIST
LIBRA I

What Lies Beyond?

This down-to-earth, no-nonsense matchup can view life extremely pragmatically. Results count more than intentions here; the Virgo I tendency toward structure and organization is complemented by the Libra I drive to get things right. Two problems arise here, one moral, the other practical. First off, the feeling that the ends justify the means can often be selfish or worse—uncaring or hurtful. Second, although a pragmatic attitude would seem quite workable, it can end up making for a relationship so rigid and stuck that its abilities are severely impaired. If this relationship is to be truly successful, it must temper its stance and moderate its drives.

The literal attitude to life here can drive the poetry and the romance from love affairs. In their pragmatic approach to pleasure, sex and love, couples in this combination must be careful not to lose their spark. Marriage might represent a practical goal for them, but if so they risk letting true feeling slip through their fingers. Trying to hold on is not the answer here: better to relinquish control, and to accept faults and mistakes as an essential thread woven into the warp and woof of life's tapestry.

When these two are friends, no matter how wonderful they feel their connection is, their relationship is unlikely to deepen unless feelings of acceptance and understanding are allowed to prevail. Parent-child relationships may be rather harsh and unforgiving, recalling Shylock in The Merchant of Venice; taking words literally and insisting on sticking to facts can have a supremely negative effect here. Learning to broaden meaning rather than restrict it, and above all to fathom the true meaning behind the other partner's words, will be an important lesson.

Virgo I's and Libra I's can form an effective working team, but can also stress themselves out, leaving the relationship exhausted. Rather than depleting their energies constantly, they should learn to be more economic with them, both husbanding their strengths and encouraging them to grow.

ADVICE: Look at the whole picture. Don't take things so literally. All the world is a symbol. Try to peek into what lies beyond. Keep an open mind and heart.

THE WEEK OF SOCIETY

Broader Vision

It is not unusual for these two to find each other at exactly the right moment, usually when each of them is poised on the brink of something new yet unsure whether or not to jump. Their relationship often helps them to climb out of a well of loneliness and make a new start—a new life. Each partner here has the talents and skills to enable the other to see more clearly and with broader vision. Better able to scan the horizon, they will be able to make better choices. Libra II's have a light and fun-loving side that is just the tonic for cheering up Virgo I's. They also have an ability to assess other people and to act sociably, an invaluable support for more retiring and socially awkward Virgo I's. For their part, meanwhile, Virgo I's can show Libra II's how better to organize their lives, helping them to develop the analytic skills that will allow them to make clearer decisions.

Love affairs and friendships between these two are often workshops for accepting, resolving or working out personal problems. Libra II's have a lot of psychological understanding, making them well suited to helping Virgo I's begin to fathom their own personalities, a necessary step if they are to become more self-sufficient and less needy. Marriage will often deepen this pair's commitment to their relationship and increase the effectiveness of their mutual quest for self-actualization.

The pair can make an effective working team, with Virgo I's handling the books or administering the home base while their socially adept Libra II partners line up new clients and make deals. Close communication will be required here, for Virgo I's can be too wrapped up in technical matters and Libra II's can get carried away with human ones. Forming new companies and breathing life into old ones is a specialty of this duo. Siblings in this combination can play a similarly reconstructive role but can also be prone to apathy and laziness.

ADVICE: Strengthen your willpower. Learn how to work yourself out of depressions. Build self-esteem. Let your heart guide you.

Proud of Itself

This relationship will be a mutual-admiration society. It can even be quite narcissistic, for these partners are usually well aware of the value of what they have, and can be quite self-satisfied and proud of themselves. They should be careful of arousing the animosity and envy of other people, who might actually be no less happy or fortunate but could be annoyed by what they see—usually correctly—as conceit. Still, just a little bit of consciousness goes a long way here, and the fact that the couple value what they have is a huge plus for them, contributing to their relationship's longevity. Power struggles rarely surface between these two, since the Libra III's need to take the lead will be complemented by the Virgo I's contentment to serve as a helpmate.

Love affairs between these two are not so much passionate as sensuous. Fine food, massage, softly seductive music and a comfortable ambiance can all be part of the picture. This couple knows no greater pleasure than an intimate evening alone in quiet surroundings. In marriages there is a danger of polarization: Virgo I's can do all the giving and Libra III's all the taking, so that Virgo I's will have to be unduly dedicated and may end up resentful. No one would consider this combination the most intimate of relationships, but a lot of people might think it an ideal.

These two can do well as colleagues working on producing an attractive product, perhaps in publishing, film, fashion or design. In friendships, Libra III's may get the idea that Virgo I's are becoming too dependent on them, and whether or not this is true they will back off. Virgo I's can make excellent parents for Libra III's in that they will provide them with all their physical needs, but they may also unintentionally withhold the warmth and understanding these children need most.

ADVICE: Be more aware of others. A smug attitude antagonizes those around you. Discover your true needs. Even out responsibilities and benefits.

THE CUSP OF DRAMA & CRITICISM
LIBRA-SCORPIO CUSP

Blistering Criticism

This relationship is prone to passionate outbursts and to intellectual expressions that often take the form of blistering criticism. The pair can be completely inept socially but also highly gifted creatively if their energy is channeled in the right direction. These two are some of the most perfectionist individuals of the year, and the creativity they generate together can bring them to heights of achievement and stimulation. Virgo I's have a good effect on Libra-Scorpios, taming their wilder impulses and limiting their occasional waywardness. Libra-Scorpios meanwhile lend verve and sophistication to Virgo I endeavors, often spurring them on to the best they are capable of.

Love affairs in this combination can upset the balance and composure of Virgo I's, bringing out their nervous side. They may be flattered by their partner's passion but unequal to his or her ardor, even when the Libra-Scorpio seems satisfied and happy. Virgo I's are prone to moods that prevent them from believing they are really pleasing to another person. This can be frustrating for Libra-Scorpios, but here more than anywhere it is important for them to temper critical outbursts. For as long as it lasts, this is generally an exciting relationship. Marriages are another kettle of fish: Virgo I's may feel more comfortable here, less nervous and more self-assured, but Libra-Scorpios are often much too complex to be happy in a long-range relationship with this relatively predictable partner.

Work relationships and friendships between these two sometimes overlap, and will benefit from both partners' critical attitudes and high standards. Exacting in its requirements, the pairing will put them under some strain, but as long as the partners are sensible enough to pace themselves and don't take on too much work at one time, they can keep on producing excellent results. Virgo I–Libra-Scorpio sibling and cousin pairs can be a strong force for tradition in the family (if they are appreciated) or a very rebellious one (if they are not). Their ties are usually close in times of trouble, but differences are likely to surface during calmer periods.

ADVICE: Don't take on too much at once. Keep your intensity but learn to relax. Give others a chance to appreciate you. Direct criticism wisely.

Attention to Detail

This talented and attractive pair focuses heavily on technical drive, a code of honor and generally sticking to the rules. Their greatest pleasure is finding solutions to problems, something the melding of their individual strengths makes them very good at. Virgo I's and Scorpio I's differ temperamentally, but they have one thing in common, which is often the basis of their relationship: attention to detail. They usually also have the ability to concentrate totally on the subject at hand. Not surprisingly, they may have a special interest in and talent for technical, scientific and other research areas. This interest may be put to use professionally, but can also emerge in hobbies such as bridge, chess, puzzles and other challenging board and also video games, all of which hold a special fascination for these two.

When Virgo I's and Scorpio I's fall into a romantic mood, they sometimes put these interests aside, but they may also pursue their amatory activities in the same avid and dedicated way. Care, control and attentiveness tend to characterize their love affairs. Always concerned with how the other person is feeling, both Virgo I's and Scorpio I's usually put the relationship's priorities before their own. They may make a kind of religion out of their love, with sacrifice playing an important role. Learning to give up and surrender to the moment may be a lesson that these two controlled personalities can study together. This combination can be an excellent one for marriage.

Trust is the primary element in this pair's friendships. Scorpio I's can be highly demanding and moral, but as long as the bond of trust remains intact they will forgive Virgo I's their occasional unconscious lapses in order to preserve the relationship. Should that bond be broken, however, they will rarely give their Virgo I friends a second chance. This relationship can be quite unforgiving. Scorpio I's and Virgo I's do better as co-workers or siblings than when cast in the roles of boss-employee or parent-child. Equality is crucial here—that and an absence of condescension, power plays, guilt trips and blame.

ADVICE: Give in occasionally. Learn to submit. Try to be less unforgiving. Allow for mistakes. Don't use trust as a weapon. Let go.

Autonomous Partners

Equality and balance count in this relationship. The focus here is achievement, but never at the expense of either partner; nor is it the relationship itself that the partners seek to further, but each of the two as an individual. The pairing depends, in fact, on their equal status. It is one of those unusual situations in which the self-actualization of both partners is given the same importance. This attitude prevails in both the personal and the professional realms.

The earthy qualities of Virgo I's and the deep emotions of Scorpio II's meld well in the areas of sexuality and feeling. Neither partner will hold back physically in their love affairs, but it may take time for them to reveal and share the more secretive areas of their personalities. Because they both tend to be trustworthy, the relationship often has great longevity and can be well suited to marriage. Should a romantic triangle form in which both Virgo I's and Scorpio II's are involved with the same third person, they are usually able—amazingly enough—to wish each other well rather than acting out of jealousy or vengefulness. Although war between them is rare, they could make excellent opponents, since they can give their all while still maintaining respect and even trust, each knowing that the other will abide by the fair rules of combat.

At work, the attitude here is "Either we both make it or neither of us does." Many professional teams have this attitude, of course, but what is unusual here is the emphasis on each person's autonomy. There is none of the clinging, dependency or false loyalty that characterizes many career efforts ("friends to the end ... and this is the end").

Sibling and parent-child pairs in this combination, especially of the same sex, are often attracted to sports and other competitive and especially physical endeavors. Here the relationship acts as an incentive and inspiration for each partner to better their own personal best.

ADVICE: Don't take your relationship for granted. Sacrifice for it occasionally. Spend more time on mutual efforts. Try to share.

A Small Circle of Friends

This combination often revolves around a close circle of friends or family, which serves not only to satisfy the pair's strong social urge but to provide a support group that they can call on in time of need. They can acquire stability from this group, but they also contribute to it—this relationship will usually give at least as much to any group as it takes from it. Virgo I's will benefit from the self-possession and independence of Scorpio III's, Scorpio III's from the reliability and orderliness of Virgo I's. The relationship need not be romantic or physical; this pair can be quite fulfilled as friends, family members or co-workers.

There is no guarantee that Scorpio III's and Virgo I's will be attracted to each other, and any love affair they become involved in together is likely to lack the true spark of high passion. Marriages can be based more on practical and realistic grounds than on romantic ones, so that they can prove highly reliable and responsible, particularly when children are involved. In friendships these two will pursue many activities with other friends, probably involving travel and entertainment; within the group they may take the lead in planning, scheduling and coordinating these activities. As the years pass, this small circle of friends will suffer attrition from advancing age, and one or both partners may find themselves increasingly isolated unless they make a determined effort to broaden their circle.

Virgo I and Scorpio III family members often work in related fields or in the same business or organization. Such relationships are trustworthy and reliable, but if the co-workers restrict their social contacts to their immediate family group, the relationship may be somewhat closed, with narrow horizons and a limited capacity for personal or spiritual development.

ADVICE: Widen your horizons. Don't restrict your circle out of fear. Try to develop all your potentials as fully as possible. Believe in yourself.

Innovative and Visionary

These two are almost certain to demonstrate a pioneering zeal in any endeavor they engage in. They may have problems relating to each other interpersonally, however: Scorpio-Sagittarians sometimes see Virgo I's as formal and old-fashioned, while Virgo I's see Scorpio-Sagittarians as trendy and less innovative than they claim to be. And whether the pair are closely involved or not, Virgo I's may disapprove of the Scorpio-Sagittarian tendency toward inconstancy. Yet despite their differences, others may see these two as being in the forefront of their field, social group or family. Any rivalry here often appears less between the Virgo I's and Scorpio-Sagittarians themselves than between their respective supporters.

Romantic relationships are unusual between these two; Virgo I's can be much too emotionally demanding for Scorpio-Sagittarians, making them feel trapped. Nor are marriages much recommended, unless the partners work shoulder to shoulder in commercial or social endeavors. Easy friendships are perhaps more rewarding, although even here the partners are unlikely to see eye to eye. Scorpio-Sagittarius condescension to Virgo I's could spell the end of the relationship.

Virgo I parents can supply the physical necessities and often the financial resources that young Scorpio-Sagittarians want, but rarely the emotional understanding that these children need. In fact, they will often see their offspring as too wild and uncontrolled for their own good. At work, this combination can be impressive at getting results. Often innovative and visionary, it will give Virgo I's the chance to leave their somewhat conservative image behind and strike out for new and challenging terrain, often on the cutting edge. Scorpio-Sagittarians will appreciate the solid support this relationship affords them. Being backed up by someone so dependable will often enable them to do some of their best work. These partners should stop themselves from trying to get too close emotionally, however, for if they lose their objectivity they risk losing the whole thing.

ADVICE: Stick to the work at hand. Sharing secrets may be like opening a can of worms. Ease up in your demands, go with the flow, and try to lighten up.

Friends or Enemies?

This hard-headed and success-oriented matchup is characterized by persistence and consummate role-playing. In commercial endeavors this pair can work to win—the cool, relaxed and objective face they present to the world is bound to infuriate competitors into making mistakes. The relationship is by no means perfect; in fact, it can produce extreme tension, so much so that it is discouraged for intimate pairings. Conflict will inevitably emerge between these two, the question being whether the purpose it is put to is constructive or destructive. Because Virgo I and Sagittarius I lie square to each other in the zodiac (90° apart), traditional astrology predicts friction between them. Yet they are also mutable signs, so that the relationship can go through a lot of changes, watching friendships turn into enmities and vice versa, for example.

As a romance this relationship is likely to strike sparks—sexual tensions run high here. The couple will often be openly critical of each other, Virgo I's seeing Sagittarius I's as unsettled and unrealistic, Sagittarius I's seeing Virgo I's as picky and difficult. Differences like these may make marriages ill-advised, but if these two become spouses they will never complain that their relationship is dull.

Friendships and rivalries are often intertwined here. Even the closest of friends in this combination will enjoy pitting themselves against each other in various activities, usually physical but inevitably one on one. The competition between them will be highly challenging, for they are often well matched. Virgo I–Sagittarius I friendships are sometimes split apart by jealousies, career conflicts or financial disagreements, but if so, the former friends often suffer pain and remorse over their breakup, and do not make enthusiastic adversaries. Meanwhile, former rivals and combatants can form solid friendships, sometimes laughing about their hostile past in good-natured banter. Siblings and co-workers can go through rough periods together, with tempers flaring and disagreements abounding. Yet through it all they have an understanding that holds them together. The most consistent element of their relationship can be an agreement to disagree.

ADVICE: Keep the combat level reasonable. Learn the value of diplomacy and compromise. Winning is only part of the story. Never lose respect.

Unlocking Dormant Power

One theme of this relationship is unlocking the inner power lying dormant in individuals, groups or materials. Often of a technical, scientific or theoretical bent, these two make a highly curious and investigative pairing, being magnetically drawn to revealing the secrets of whatever it is they study. The systematicness of Virgo I's is fully realized here, giving structure and form to ideas that may have lain dormant for some time. This quality is unusually well complemented by the originality of Sagittarius II's, who have a strong ability to provide a new twist or unusual view on old ideas.

Virgo I's and Sagittarius II's in love affairs can unlock powers in each other that had previously lain undiscovered. The relationship's chemistry, and its interest in revelation, are useful for two individuals such as these, who tend to keep their thoughts and feelings to themselves, and who prefer being explored to exposing themselves by being more outgoing and aggressive. Both partners may have experienced their share of rejection and misunderstanding, and may come to the relationship badly bruised emotionally. A low-key relationship in which they are accepted, and have few expectations placed on them, may be what they both have in mind. Happily, it usually comes as a wonderful surprise to them when their relationship blossoms. These love affairs can be ideally suited to proceed on to marriage.

In the family and in friendships, Virgo I's and Sagittarius II's tend to be highly private, favoring quiet intimacy. In career matchups they can cooperate well on a daily basis, but they often do better working on their own and keeping in close touch by telephone, e-mail or fax. Since they live very much in the world of ideas, their physical presence in the same room is seldom really necessary, and they may brainstorm best when they think out their ideas on their own, then bounce them off each other in their fully formed state. These two can be successful in any of a variety of fields ranging from finance to science.

Bound to Clash

This combination is highly critical, with debates, arguments and outright battles likely to surface at any time. These two often find it hard to accept each other. After all, they have serious differences in temperament: Virgo I's tend to be highly suspicious of the domineering attitudes of Sagittarius III's, who in turn make things no easier when they brush off Virgo I's as nit-pickers. At times this seems to be a case of people who can't see the forest for the trees (Virgo I's) fighting it out with people who can't see the trees for the forest (Sagittarius III's). The Virgo I preoccupation with order and detail cramps the style of high-flying, expansive Sagittarius III's. Fundamentally opposed in their outlooks, these two are bound to clash.

This combination rarely reaches magical heights of romance or passion in love and marriage, but a strong physical bond can hold the couple together for a long time. The relationship tends to be faithful, and is supportive in time of need, but too often the partners ignore each other, stubbornly maintaining their own points of view. In the family and in friendships, Virgo I's will criticize what they see as Sagittarius III neglect and sloppiness. This can grow unbearable for their partner. Sagittarius III parents rarely have enough time for their Virgo I children, who usually give up trying to get their parent's attention after a while.

As executives or department co-workers, Virgo I's and Sagittarius III's can be overly sensitive to each other's progress, particularly if their achievements overlap. Battles over who gets the raise, promotion or credit after a job well done are especially common. But should the pair be able to put the good of the group before their own private interests, they could become a valued and trusted team.

ADVICE: Try to be more diplomatic. Don't be so vocal. Listen to criticism occasionally. Put more effort into sharing.

SAGITTARIUS-CAPRICORN CUSP

A United and Unyielding Front

This combination may be stubbornly opposed to change, both in its environment and within its own structure—unless, that is, the change is initiated by the partners themselves. Often monolithic in their outlook, the pair tend to move and think as one. They are drawn to the pursuit of power, and they know that if they present a united front and drive toward a common goal, their relationship can be unstoppable. Together they have a ruthless streak, but they generally behave kindly and thoughtfully enough to win the trust of their family and social milieu. Extremely capable and hard-working, Virgo I's and Sagittarius-Capricorns have a way of getting what they want, then digging in their heels and refusing to budge.

Intimate relationships between these two are less romantic and more realistic. Love and power may be inextricably combined here. At its heart, the relationship emphasizes the secret, more ambitious sides of its partners, and socially and financially this can propel it forward. Feelings of inadequacy in both partners tend to combine in a determination to prove themselves, and to succeed in their endeavors as a couple. They are usually better suited to marriage than to a love affair; as spouses, they tend to make their home a castle, their children princes and princesses. In their careers they try to build an empire, no matter how modest. In the family, they do best when working in the interests of the group, and worst when they try to oppose or take advantage of their relatives for their own private benefit. In all of these relationships, Virgo I's and Sagittarius-Capricorns would do well to make their outlook a bit wider and more flexible, and to modify their stance of power in favor of a little more empathy and understanding.

Work relationships and friendships are usually very socially conscious. The partners can depend on each other in seeking advancement and recognition. "United we stand, divided we fall" could be the pairing's watchword.

ADVICE: Develop spiritual pursuits. Beware the lure of power. Be more empathic in your personal relationships. Acts of kindness will be rewarded.

Tectonic Plates

Both Virgo I's and Capricorn I's have very definite ideas on how things are done. If their ideas coincide they are likely to get along quite well, but if not there can be the devil to pay. Virgo I's will not be interested in playing a secondary role to Capricorn I's in this relationship; things usually work best here when the partners share the power between them, with each having their own area of expertise. In certain departments, however, in particular the financial one, neither is likely to give ground very easily. Traditional astrology predicts an easy time between Virgo I and Capricorn I because of their trine aspect in the zodiac (they lie 120° apart), but their relationship is actually quite intense. Both earth signs, they can collide with the force of two tectonic plates.

Love affairs between these two can be sensuous, even passionate, but an element of control is always present—control of emotions, control of power, control of choice. No matter how gratifying the physical side of the relationship is, strains and stresses will eventually surface, undermining the pleasure factor. Power is even more of an issue in marriages, but here the couple can work out compromises and even outright deals. The marriage may in fact prove enduring, being virtually impervious to the buffeting of external factors that could penetrate a less unified front.

As friends, Virgo I's and Capricorn I's can get along well, but they usually keep a wary eye on each other. Their stinginess, or at the very least their somewhat tight attitude to finances, will assure that they get value for money, whether in consumer goods or entertainment. Parent-child relationships of whichever variation also put money first—the very worst sin in these matchups might be financial imprudence or overgenerosity. At work these two can achieve steady successes and even solid financial gains, but their fearfulness about taking risks can hold them back.

ADVICE: Loosen up. Don't take money so seriously. What good is it if you can't enjoy it? Sharing and compromise are necessary.

Setting an Example

These two can make excellent helpmates. In working together so successfully they often set a good example or model for family and friends, demonstrating the power of positive interactions and good feelings. It is often Capricorn II's who take the lead while Virgo I's serve in a lesser capacity, but whichever the case, power and control are seldom issues here. What is most obvious in this relationship is that the partners are enjoying themselves. This gives them a lot of satisfaction, and indeed they both would argue that without this mutual pleasure the value of even the most stunning accomplishments would be greatly diminished.

Love affairs and marriages here can be highly fulfilling. An easy sensuousness usually permeates the couple's daily life, the only downside being that things may not always get done in the quickest or most efficient manner. But the relationship is certainly responsible enough to guarantee that all concerned, including children, will be well looked after. Physical comfort is highly valued in these pairings, which, however, are also capable of going without for long periods of time, and of living on the warmth that comes from within. At its least successful, the relationship is merely satisfying, but should it have an element of spirituality and a desire for personal development, these two can reach new levels of self-actualization.

Working teams in this combination are sometimes a bit too relaxed and accepting, lacking the drive to succeed at the highest professional level. Parent-child relationships, too, whichever partner is the parent, may put too little emphasis on personal development and success, although they more than counterbalance this problem through their easygoing, sympathetic attitudes in everyday domestic life. Virgo I–Capricorn II friendships can be mutually instructive. These two sometimes meet as students and study an area of common interest together, but for the most part their relationship learns from experience.

ADVICE: Don't get too relaxed. Push yourself a bit. Enjoyment and success need not conflict. Be aware that others are watching you.

Not Easily Overlooked

The weight of this relationship is palpable. In whatever sphere of life it manifests, it is a combination of moment, and it demands attention. Not that these two are particularly needy individually; they both can go for years of work without demanding to be singled out for praise. Their relationship, however, is hard to overlook. Even if it is taken for granted for a while, its impact on its surroundings will be felt later on—sometimes when it is no longer on the scene.

As lovers and spouses these partners expect each other to toe the line and do their share. Their relationship takes little for granted when it comes to fulfilling responsibilities; indeed, it can be extremely unforgiving. Sexual expression here is usually direct, and perhaps somewhat unnuanced. Should the flame cool down, sensuality can be sublimated into other areas, particularly those having to do with food or athletic or fitness training. Children usually grow up seeing their parents as reliable and active.

Parent-child relationships, no matter which personality is the parent, are often characterized by affectionate physical contact and by attentiveness to each other's material needs. Friendships and other types of family relationships have an undeniable tendency to be overly materialistic, which can slow down personal development. Capricorn III's will usually take the lead when the couple feels stuck or bogged down, often encouraging the relationship to move in more philosophical, religious or spiritual directions.

As co-workers or business partners, Virgo I's and Capricorn III's are usually sensible about production, sales and financial management. The relationship is comfortable about handling money, and when possible will make lots of it, but will also be satisfied with modest gains, as long as they are steady. Attentive to the needs of others, Virgo I's and Capricorn III's will rarely forget those who work with or for them.

Clearing the Air

This relationship emphasizes the sharing and transmission of ideas and observations. Both partners naturally appreciate each other's thinking, so that even if they disagree over details, they invariably agree on the large line or the big picture. The relationship shuns both the false trappings of sentimentality and the phoniness of snobbism, and tries to express itself at a rather basic level. One problem with this approach is that those around it may consider it nonsensical, particularly if they are bound to more tightly traditional approaches. The relationship will have to be steadfast in its beliefs if it is to stand up to what could become overwhelming criticism.

Love affairs and friendships may attract attention through their unaffected and spontaneous behavior. Virgo I's will appreciate these relationships, which do not force them into a conservative mold, or insist that they repress their more outgoing side. Here they have the freedom they are often denied elsewhere. Capricorn-Aquarians feel at home here, and will rarely burden Virgo I's with duties or inhibit them by encouraging their desire to serve. Feelings are expressed openly and without censure in these relationships.

Marriages and work relationships between these two may not function so well in a standard social or career setting, since both Virgo I's and Capricorn-Aquarians demand something more out of life than just the ordinary. They will often reject the idea of marriage, doubting that it is really necessary or appropriate for them. In the professional sphere, these two do better if they are self-employed, or are entrepreneurs in a small-business or creative venture.

Virgo I and Capricorn-Aquarian family relatives often seek each other out. Despite any differences in age or social position, they are on the same wavelength, and will outrage more conservative family members with their unusual behavior and thought. This relationship often clears the air within its circle, but also stirs up animosity and resentment in those who refuse to take it seriously.

Magnetic Appeal

This combination is likely to radiate attractiveness and charm. As a couple, these two enjoy spoiling each other and themselves, and their relationship emphasizes sensuality. This is not to suggest a pairing without problems—these partners won't necessarily have an easy time of it interpersonally. Astrologically Virgo I and Aquarius I lie quincunx to each other (150° apart) in the zodiac, and their relationship can consequently be expected to be somewhat unsettled and to require adjustment. This is epitomized by the fact that the partners may not be wholly comfortable with their own relationship's emphasis on pleasure. In some ways they are antithetical to each other, and to the relationship itself: Virgo I's tend to be more conservative, solid and predictable, Aquarius I's more cerebral, flighty and spontaneous. If together they generate a magnetic appeal, drawing others to them, they also hide a lot of frustration and dark, claiming qualities beneath the surface.

Shadow elements often emerge in love affairs between these two. Virgo I's have difficulty with their deeper emotions (both in dealing with them and in expressing them) while Aquarius I's have no need to confront their own inner life. The synergy of the relationship also magnifies the more nervous, worried and at times self-destructive side of both partners. The tensions in the combination can result in exciting sexual interactions, but unfortunately can also produce emotional outbursts and rejecting attitudes. In many ways, and quite unlike their characters in other combinations, these partners have difficulty staying objective about each other. Given the considerable level of instability here, marriages may not be recommended for them. Friendships and family matchups are usually undermined over the long haul by a Virgo I–Aquarius I chemistry that seems to bring out overemotional, even hysterical tendencies and differences in temperaments and values. Yet in the professional or commercial sector the partners can convey a tremendous affability and allure that transcend any personal differences they have. Curiously, conflicting energies can be transformed into magnetic ones here. The social side of this relationship is often successful in convincing others and inspiring belief in its powers.

ADVICE: Don't deliberately give the wrong impression. Work on resolving personal differences. Learn balance, objectivity—and to listen.

Shifting Roles

This relationship often centers around promoting a cause, one powered by tremendous, almost inexhaustible energies. Yet fun and structure are also built into its endeavors if one looks closely enough. Aquarius II's certainly have something to show Virgo I's about learning to let go, kick back and have fun, and Virgo I's can show Aquarius II's a great deal about how to order their lives more efficiently. When they come together their respective playfulness and organizational talents can be combined, enabling them to enjoy their work and structure their play. Luckily for them, both work and play are usually imbued with an irrepressible energy. Tireless though they may seem, though, they may need to watch out for the early-warning signals of burnout.

Friendships, love affairs and marriages in this combination simply will not be denied. Whether or not they work out in the long run, they have tremendous drive and spirit, surmounting social disapproval and scattering critics left and right. Admittedly this can sometimes seem a peculiar choice of partners, even to the partners themselves, but they acknowledge no laws but their own, which gives them a chance to overcome personal differences and difficulties. Their relationship can often move easily between friendships, marriages and love affairs, as if they didn't recognize that for other people rather well-drawn boundaries generally exist between these states. The emotional versatility with which they shift roles gives them a chance to stay in each other's lives for years. Passive and active, masculine and feminine, extrovert and introvert stances can quickly be switched as well.

Parent-child matchups in this combination often feature a mix-up of identity in which the child is the more mature of the two. At work, Virgo I's and Aquarius II's can carry through social or business projects with unstoppable force. If they fail, it is because of an alienating tendency toward overconfidence and arrogance. Being more realistic and controlled will help this couple achieve their goals.

Protecting the Downtrodden

This relationship is interpersonally tense and rebellious but has its rewards. These partners will contend not only against each other but as a duo against the outside world. They will ignore any differences between them if the chance comes to stand up for others—indeed, their protective instinct has a knee-jerk quality, and may emerge at any moment. The pair can get on each other's nerves, but they also serve real needs in each other. Aquarius III's can generate chaos around them, which upsets Virgo I's, yet they are also able to roll up their sleeves and get to work bringing order into the relationship. The Virgo I need to have everything planned out beforehand, however, will not sit well with them, since they are spontaneous folk for whom half the fun is playing things by ear. Should the pair be attacked while fighting out a disagreement of their own, they will usually unite against an outside threat.

As lovers these partners often direct the relationship's inherent rebelliousness at each other, especially if one of them tries to exert too much power or control. But these confrontations usually work out all right, since neither of them is likely to play the tyrant for long. The biggest problem in marriage will be Virgo I resentment over having to clean up after Aquarius III's, who are often quite negligent domestically. Their freedom-loving nature may in the long run make it difficult for them to meet Virgo I demands of fidelity and marital responsibility. In the family and at work, Virgo I parents and bosses often arouse Aquarius III rebelliousness, but at the same time bring a much-needed structure to the lives of these somewhat erratic personalities.

Both Virgo I's and Aquarius III's have a strong sense of fairness, which, when offended, leads them into contention. Their friendships are particularly reactive against authority or outright despotism, whether it comes from teachers, bosses or parents. The protection of the disadvantaged and downtrodden is common in these relationships, and can even become a career or way of life for them.

ADVICE: Don't overreact. Still your rebellion and save your energy for the big struggles. Know who your friends are. Discuss what is bothering you.

A Free-Thinking Struggle

Freedom of each partner's distinctive way of thought is this relationship's imperative but also its most likely source of conflict. Virgo I's may reinforce and abet Aquarius-Pisces striving toward success, or they may discourage it; when they support it, a close friendship or working relationship may result, but when they oppose it, Aquarius-Pisces may be forced to battle them openly or may retreat somewhat but prepare for further struggle. Virgo I's, on the other hand, will find themselves defending what Aquarius-Pisces term their rigidity—of thought, habits and patterns. Actually both of these partners have a tightly wound side, which this pairing often springs, producing resistance and fighting spirit. The relationship can go from friendship to rivalry depending on a whole host of variables, not the least of them being circumstance.

Love affairs here have their ups and downs, but are often extremely close and affectionate. The couple's freedom of thought and action tends both to unite and to divide them at various points in their relationship's development. Virgo I hardheadedness and Aquarius-Pisces sensitivity may well clash, but can also meld beautifully, especially in the sexual sphere. Ideology and belief play a considerable role in marriages in this combination, with disagreement or agreement in these areas sometimes determining the entire course of the relationship.

Career connections, friendships and family matchups are more likely to find Virgo I's and Aquarius-Pisces as rivals than as partners. Even when they serve on the same business or professional team their disagreements are likely to be vehement. A fundamental difference in thought, or a personal dislike, may lie at the heart of their animosity, but it also often involves the Aquarius-Pisces' need to challenge the Virgo I's supremacy and threateningly rocklike presence. Yet the pair may subtly and often unconsciously recognize each other's insecurity, and work to make their relationship more self-assured, even if it is always at least somewhat contentious.

ADVICE: Play fair. You can disagree without engaging in character assassination. Competition can bring out the best and the worst.

Outside Organizational Limits

Virgo I and Pisces I lie exactly opposite each other in the zodiac, yet when these opposing forces combine, the relationship that results is often highly autonomous and independent, a coherent single entity. These partners do best when acting on their own, free from the influence of others and outside the limitations imposed by organizations and other group endeavors. A further dynamic here involves the Virgo I tendency to bring diffuse, cosmic Pisces I energy down to earth. In return for this grounding influence, Virgo I's themselves receive a tremendous infusion of spiritual energy, like radio receivers, satellite dishes or lightning rods pulling energy out of the atmosphere.

As lovers these two can be overwhelmingly attracted to each other, like oppositely charged particles. It is precisely their polarity that makes their love affair whole and fulfilling. Although their marked differences of opinion and of temperament will sometimes lead to conflict, they show an underlying understanding and acceptance, and their relationship rarely pressures either of them into being something they are not. Their views of each other are realistic and accurate, and neither of them expects any more or less from their partner than he or she is able to give. Marriages in this combination can work out well, and offer a broad spectrum of difference to their children, who will know instinctively which parent to approach in which situation.

Virgo I–Pisces I professional relationships may be less effective if the pair work on the same project or material, when their differing approaches may come between them and the result desired. If, on the other hand, they work as freelancers, business partners or executives with separate departments or areas of expertise, the independent action they exercise will usually pay off. Sibling relationships and friendships between these two, particularly when of the opposite sex, can be extremely close, particularly in childhood and early adolescence but sometimes also throughout adult life.

ADVICE: Try to improve your social skills. Even out differences and resolve internal conflicts. Independence may be less necessary than you think.

A Taste for the Peculiar

Independence of thought can be considered the higher power in this relationship. These two are apt to craft their matchup into something wholly unique, and will seek to touch the sublime, whether physically or mentally. Creative and original energies run high here, with the partners rarely doing anything in any way other than their own. Other people will often see them as peculiar oddballs. Their independence is such that they may not get along well in situations that are forced on them rather than chosen—as family members, say, or in working teams—but in interpersonal relationships that they do choose they often appreciate each other quite fully. Friendships or creative activities, love affairs and marriages can all do well here.

The relationship is ruled by fire, implying passion and intuition, especially in close personal matchups. Virgo I's admire the grace and emotional honesty of Pisces II's, Pisces II's the physicality and forthrightness of Virgo I's. Pisces II's can have problems with what they perceive as this partner's cynicism, which is really, however, the refusal of Virgo I's to bow down before models they see as irrational. For their part Virgo I's approach life with mocking wit, and may find Pisces II's much too fervent and serious. Yet these partners do have the ability to learn from each other, and to incorporate some of each other's strengths into themselves. The nature of the relationship is such that any attempt to fit it into more traditional forms may bring its end, but after it is over the partners may carry on stronger and better equipped than before.

As mates and as friends, these two will be faithful to each other in times of need. They will rarely forsake each other at such times, or hold back in what they are prepared to give, morally, spiritually or financially. This giving is usually unconditional, but later on may bring out feelings of guilt in the partner on the receiving end, who has not felt worthy of such attention.

ADVICE: Don't always expect agreement. Differences are what make the world go around. Stay objective in career matters. Make peace with parents.

Honing Concepts

This combination is often concerned with the development and communication of new ideas. In fact, the mental connection here can be so acute that it makes the relationship irresistible. More pragmatic Virgo I's may be mostly concerned with what is being said, imaginative Pisces III's with how it is being said, or with what is being symbolized. Virgo I's will help Pisces III's to hone their concepts to a fine edge, while Pisces III's will impart a vivid spark to Virgo I thoughts, making them more attractive to others.

The communication in love affairs and marriages between these two may be of a more personal sort, with lovers and spouses developing a private language not fully understood by other people. Their understanding of each other is high, but they must be careful not to become isolated from or misunderstood by family members and friends. In friendships the partners often show a lot of interest in technical innovations of all kinds, but particularly in those concerned with new computer software, video games and Internet developments. In pursuing these interests they sometimes overload on each other's company, creating problems in their contact with intimates outside their own relationship. Their lovers and spouses will feel rejected and resentful. When the Virgo I–Pisces III combination emerges within a family, other relatives can feel similarly excluded, and sibling pairs in this combination are often criticized by parents at their wits' end in trying to establish some minimal degree of contact with them.

Work relationships can be contentious—Virgo I and Pisces III co-workers seldom see eye to eye. Yet their discussions and arguments will often have the effect of sharpening their perceptions and increasing the cogency and logic of their thinking. Communication skills, then, can be improved tremendously within these relationships, especially when other people lend input of their own. Whether or not these partners are right in their arguments will be proved by the results they get, but whether they succeed or fail they will contribute immeasurably to raising the level of communication within their group.

ADVICE: Don't assume that others understand what you are saying. Remember, there are other ways to communicate than just the verbal. Less is sometimes more.

Unfathomable

The partners in this combination will find it extremely hard to share on a personal level. How lucky, then, that their need to share may not be so great to begin with—but they can still make life extraordinarily difficult for each other if that's what they want to do. Virgo II's react poorly when a lot of demands are made on them, but they are quite demanding with each other. They can have a great time together, particularly since they both love to laugh, but even here they might curb their tendency to make fun of each other, which can send their self-esteem into a nose dive. Paradoxical and hard to figure though they can be, these complex individuals may not be half as difficult to fathom as their relationship with each other is.

The textbook analysis of this relationship could be encyclopedic in length and depth. The combination's rarity is easily understandable: Virgo II's might be found in the same field, the same company, the same family, but they seldom remain under the same roof. It isn't so much that they are incapable of doing so as that, if given the choice, they prefer not to do so. In some ways Virgo II's are well suited to each other, since they both maintain rigorous standards that few but themselves will be able to live up to. They are also likely to share a high level of intellectual interaction and an interest in anything requiring a lot of expertise.

Virgo II couples have a way of being misunderstood that defies analysis. There is something so enigmatic in their relationship that even in the simplest, most common daily tasks a kind of mystery clouds their motives, their actions, their goals. One reason misinterpretations abound, perhaps, is that Virgo II's specialize in sending mixed signals. Their love affairs, marriages and friendships can be as confusing to the partners themselves as to other people, since they are unable to view each other or their relationship objectively. These two do best when focusing on anything standing concretely outside their relationship.

ADVICE: Don't take yourself too seriously. Try to enjoy rather than analyze. Beware of sending mixed messages. A bit less mystery would help.

Hard to Pin Down

This relationship is likely to be private, somewhat isolated and quite idiosyncratic. Since an important element here will be the realm of feelings, an area where both partners traditionally have problems, their matchup may be highly beneficial to them in allowing them to express themselves more fully. At the same time, however, the partners' difficulties with all that is not concrete may produce a kind of struggle. As individuals they will often feel uncomfortable with their combination's interest in spiritualism, religion or the arts—in things that are amorphous or hard to pin down. Another tension here may stem from the conflict between the Virgo III effort to make Virgo II's toe the line, and keep to their word, and the Virgo II tendency to bring out the procrastinating side of the Virgo III personality, encouraging them to kick back a bit. The winner of this particular battle will vary from situation to situation, but in general it is the more easygoing Virgo II influence that proves the stronger.

Sparks seldom fly in love affairs, but the partners do have an understanding of each other, and what they lose in excitement they can gain in stability. At their best, these affairs are fairly open and accepting and allow a moderate expression of feeling. In marriages and at work, the burden usually falls on Virgo III's to bring the more isolating and fantasy-oriented qualities of the relationship into line; by insisting on more social and commercial involvement with the world, they guarantee at least a modicum of healthy interaction with other people. Marriages will require great patience on both sides but can work out. Co-worker or employee positions in a company, on the other hand, are best avoided, since both partners usually do best in their own sphere.

Friends and siblings in this combination usually have quite private relationships that tend to shut others out. The pair's private jokes and humor tend to keep them in a good mood.

Traditional Guidelines

This relationship is governed by rules, spoken or unspoken, that should never be transgressed. If any of these prove ambiguous or open to interpretation, or if they aren't completely known or understood, problems will arise, but the partners often do understand them clearly, so that harmony reigns in the relationship a lot of the time. Together these two will work out effective working methods that will guarantee results. The relationship is often traditional in its approach, no matter how unusual the partners' individual predilections may be. In careers, perhaps in a family business, these two usually do things according to tried-and-true methods that have worked in the past. They should be careful to keep excessively rigid adherence to rules from destroying their spontaneity, resulting in a somewhat predictable way of life.

Love affairs are a bit complicated and chancy. Virgo-Libras are often intrigued by the mysteriousness of Virgo II's, but when mystery shades over into emotional complexity they may find it hard to fathom. Since Virgo II's do not depend on other people for praise or support, they may think that Virgo-Libras weaken themselves by giving in to such needs. Should the relationship gel on the physical plane (which isn't overly likely), the couple might contemplate marriage, but as orderly as they are, marital and domestic responsibilities may impose too much structure and responsibility for them to handle.

In friendships Virgo II's are more likely to value their private life, Virgo-Libras their public life. But differences like this are in no way insurmountable, and in fact may help to provide variety within the relationship. Further complementarity can be seen in the way Virgo-Libras give expression to Virgo II fantasy, often being able to translate this partner's wishes into vivid and original representations, whether in matters of style, design, decorations or furnishings.

Virgo II–Virgo-Libra parent-child, sibling and co-worker pairs can be the bulwarks of the families or organizations of which they are a part.

Rigorous Scrutiny

This relationship tends to hypervigilance in its attention to detail, especially in the partners' approach to each other. Their unending scrutiny of each other can be annoying and destructive. At the same time, the relationship's analytical approach is often its greatest strength, increasing the efficiency and productivity of, say, a work team through judicious and well-thought-out criticism. Both Virgo II's and Libra I's have an exacting side that leads them to subject whatever they come across to a rigorous once-over. They can be of great value to a work or family group, testing hypotheses, evaluating performances and reorganizing existing structures. Quite often they will come up with a new plan that may be much more effective than the one employed in the past.

Love affairs are often strongest in the sexual sphere. The partners are frank with each other on this subject, and neither of them has a whole lot of energy for romanticism or sentiment, or much interest in them, either. In satisfying mutual physical needs and wants, the relationship can be highly gratifying. Unfortunately, emotional conflicts can arise between the lovers from their criticism of each other's appearance or performance, inevitably puncturing ego balloons. Should they decide to begin a new life together as spouses, their enthusiasm may be considerable, certainly enough to carry them through their early years of marriage. As parents, however, they have a tendency to be too demanding of their children. Friendships in this combination generate fun times and provide an ambiance within which games, puzzles and other forms of challenging mental entertainment can be enjoyed. At work, the pair can perform well as consultants, analysts and even as ordinary employees. Superiors and top executives will rely on them for their frank and objective appraisals; in fact, they will be invaluable to management, since they will know their area well and are in touch with the needs of fellow workers. In the family, parents might often consult Virgo II–Libra I sibling pairs for advice during periods of stress and change. The siblings themselves, however, are apt to tease each other unmercifully.

ADVICE: Loosen up a bit. Don't be so critical all the time. Nursing a bruised ego can become a bad habit. Be less demanding with close relatives.

A Transparent Interface

This can be an easygoing relationship in which the partners learn from each other and benefit from their respective strengths. It is like a window between two people, one looking out (Virgo II), the other looking in (Libra II). What they both see appears through the window as an object of great beauty: the more private Virgo II, for example, admires the social world of the Libra II, and vice versa. The relationship rarely melds these contrasting views but does allow the preservation of its partners' individuality. Their polarity poses no threat to their unity.

Admiration and affection may lead to love between these two. The partners have the ability to express true tenderness for each other, even when empathy isn't really an option. Their differences in temperament often create an atmosphere of romantic fascination and awaken strong protective feelings. As spouses Virgo II's and Libra II's will be extremely proud of one another, and happy to be living with someone so different from themselves. The window effect between them separates them but allows a transparency, so that hiding secrets from each other will be difficult or impossible and sharing will be encouraged. Having children is recommended for this couple, since their polarity is essentially healthy, and gives their offspring a clear choice when in need of consultation or advice.

Since the harmony and balance between Virgo II's and Libra II's can limit the striving and aggression that are necessary in the business world, commercial matchups in this combination may lack the will and push to succeed. Harmony and balance will be more appreciated in the family, where other members of the group may see this pair as peacemakers, not through coercion but by example. Friendships here are generally relaxed and enjoyable. Here the partners sometimes don't share deep feelings or strongly emotional interactions, but they may reap rewards in an area too often overlooked in our stressful times: happiness.

ADVICE: Try to feel what others are feeling. Put yourself in their place. Perhaps you need to try a bit harder. When you see something you want, go for it.

THE WEEK OF THEATER
LIBRA III

An Excellent Foil

This couple usually creates an enthusiastic, youthful impression, putting others at ease. Their relationship has the kind of verve and dash that will make it effective in helping Libra III's fulfill their career ambitions. They will find a Virgo II an excellent foil for their outgoing personalities, and valuable when serving as their assistant, in an advisory capacity or simply as a capable helpmate. The problem here will be staying relaxed, for Virgo II's have a nervous side and may be unable to handle the pressures to which Libra III's expose them. Should they withdraw, or show signs of stress, the relationship's aspirations may be in danger. Libra III's may feel helpless to do anything about their partner's state.

Love affairs between these two can sweep both partners off their feet. Impetuosity can prove a problem here, but even if things don't work out in the long run, the memory of a natural and uninhibited love affair will remain. The relationship's youthfulness is often carried over into marriage. Children of such a union will enjoy their parents' positive outlook but must not be made to feel that they are sacrificing their own youthfulness to it. Interestingly, the detachment that both partners sometimes exhibit in relationships in any combination is understood and completely at home here.

Friendships here can suffer from irresponsibility, not only as a pair toward the outside world but between the partners as well. The most distressing part of this is usually the relationship's inability to come through in times of need. Family matchups, particularly between parents and children, may suffer from arguments that again reveal a certain immaturity. In work situations Virgo II's can ground the flightiness of Libra III's and can help resolve their periodic indecision. The relationship can also supply the stimulus and inspiration for many worthwhile projects and entrepreneurial endeavors.

ADVICE: Don't get carried away so easily. Exercise more prudence and care. Be there in times of need. Take responsibility for your actions.

THE CUSP OF DRAMA & CRITICISM
LIBRA-SCORPIO CUSP

Pressures to Succeed

This combination brings out the more demanding side of both partners. Together they are likely to produce work of high quality, and to have high expectations of each other in their personal interactions.

The pressures to succeed and excel in this relationship are self-induced rather than dependent on social or parental input. Ultimately, however, the rarefied air at the top may not really suit either partner, and a rejection of or rebellion against their relationship's values may spell the end. If the relationship is to succeed, it will have to acquire a more realistic sense of its partners' capabilities.

Recognizing limits and assuming a more moderate stance can prove difficult in love affairs and friendships in this combination. The tendency here is to go overboard and indulge in all sorts of excesses. The pair sometimes revel in binges, the direct results of their self-inflicted stresses and perfectionist drives. Seeking relief from the unbearable tensions of their own demands and expectations, they may turn to escapist activities for release. Should Virgo II's and Libra-Scorpios form a hard-driving business partnership or other professional relationship, they may similarly reward themselves with wild bouts of spending and drinking.

Marriages between Virgo II's and Libra-Scorpios can show great ambition, with the relationship pushing the spouses and their children to ever higher rungs on the social ladder. Finding more substantial personal values and feelings of inner worth can prove a rewarding challenge for them. The need for balance and moderation here is obvious, and perhaps the place for them to start is by letting up a bit in their expectations. A related problem can appear in parent-child relationships of either variation: the parents will seek to project their own frustrated ambitions onto their children, who may be ill suited to the careers for which they are being groomed.

ADVICE: Make realistic assessments of your capabilities. Don't push too hard or too fast. Allow time for events to unfold. Escapes are not the answer.

SCORPIO I

Mock Aggression

Humor in many forms, but particularly irony and sarcasm, is prominent in this playfully competitive relationship. Virgo II's love to kid their Scorpio I partners, who, although usually more serious, may tease them unmercifully in return. These provocations are usually light in tone, and can be quite amusing, but underlying them there is sometimes something darker, which cannot be expressed directly. One-upmanship can be the order of the day here: the partners often try to outdo themselves and each other, lifting the relationship into ever higher spheres of joking yet simultaneously earnest banter.

The problems that arise in love affairs and marriages in this combination can often be resolved in these conversational and often energetic exchanges. Mock aggression can be a useful way of working out resentments and frustrations. A point may come, however, where difficulties grow more severe and have to be confronted directly, and here trouble can be expected, precisely because the partners have no tradition of real discussion. But this is not to say that Scorpio I's and Virgo II's never have wonderful, even ecstatic times together—they often do.

Friendships and work relationships can overlap and can be more complex and serious than other relationships in this combination. Their level of competence is usually high, they discharge their responsibilities fully and they can rely on each other, particularly in times of crisis and need. Competitive impulses can arise, however, and at times will run out of hand. Seeking to outdo the other partner's technique, making a fool of the other partner (albeit subtly) or working to surpass the other partner's achievements are all likely tactics here. Competition between Virgo II and Scorpio I siblings can disrupt the family scene but have a toughening effect on the individuals themselves. Knowing when to stop is often the stumbling block, since these two are not always aware of the effects their shenanigans are having on other people.

ADVICE: Find quiet time to open serious discussions. Explore underlying motives. Cultivate honesty. Don't lose your comic sense, but know when to stop.

Unexpected Socialization

Both of these partners have a withdrawn, private side, so that they would often just as soon spend their time alone. The chemistry of their matchup is surprising in that it activates their impulse for social interaction with other people. This is a relationship that tries to turn its partners away from their preoccupation with the personal, giving them the chance to balance that side of themselves with family, community, club and team-sports interests. Virgo II mystery and Scorpio II silence will never be completely erased, but this relationship gives its partners an opportunity to combine their more introverted sides with other aspects of life that they might well have neglected.

Virgo II–Scorpio II love affairs can be dark, passionate, even stormy. They activate deep areas of their partners' psyches, creating a smoldering intensity. At the same time, the relationship has a social drive that prevents these lovers from wallowing in the moods and depressions to which they are prone, motivating them to seek out the company of others. Marriages between these two can be highly successful, even if the partners sometimes need a little relief from each other—which they are likely to find in parties, entertainment, vacations, games and other lighthearted activities involving friends or family.

The combination brings out a light, unserious side of both partners in friendships and sibling pairs, lending them both some relief from their own problems and a more carefree approach to life. Work relationships between Virgo II's and Scorpio II's are capable of success but will more likely bring out the partners' negativity, reinforcing whatever it was that gave them both a lowered self-confidence in the first place. Raising their self-esteem, perhaps by changing their attitude toward work, can make their pairing more effective, but their bond may ultimately have to be examined objectively and, if recognized as unworkable, to be modified or terminated.

ADVICE: Follow your more social instincts. Don't assume you have to be alone to be understood. Share hopes and dreams with others. Lighten up.

The Best Foot Forward

The surprising thing about this couple is that they know how to put their best foot forward and achieve worldly success. This is in part because their relationship is ruled by fire, here signifying dynamism and initiative, and making for a highly adventuresome matchup that does not hesitate to step out and take the lead. Magically, it mobilizes the most extroverted side of Virgo II's, which it melds with Scorpio III managerial abilities to make a winning pair. The relationship's intelligence is high, although it is more intuitive than mental. The partners know instinctively how to get people's attention and hold it. Furthermore, the Scorpio III ability to convince works more easily and naturally when based in the Virgo II–Scorpio III relationship, which avoids controlling or claiming attitudes. Other people enjoy this relationship and rarely resent its persuasions.

It is in career connections and friendships that the combination's complex chemistry operates best to propel the pair forward. Unfortunately, Virgo II's and Scorpio III's may not be quite as successful living together as lovers, mates or family members. In day-to-day emotional interactions in which they themselves are the central focus, the difficulties seem to climb. On the surface, this would seem unlikely to be a very long-lasting relationship: Virgo II's prefer to work things out alone and are usually resistant to being pushed, manipulated or charmed; Scorpio III's traditionally motivate or manipulate their partners seductively but quickly grow tired if they themselves feel unappreciated. Also, although Virgo II's are quite independent, Scorpio III's may see them as having to be pushed or, worse yet, supported, something Scorpio III's are loath to do. If the relationship lacks an external focus, it tends to devour itself in dissension or fritter away its energies.

ADVICE: Work on interpersonal understanding. Get to know each other better. Be more accepting. Beware of making assumptions. Exercise patience.

THE CUSP OF REVOLUTION

Exaggerative Statements

As a pair, these two know full well that all the world's a stage, and that their own personal drama is only one of many being acted out. They take great interest in the events unfolding around them, and try to find where their own personal relationship fits in. In fact, making social sense out of the personal is perhaps the main focus of this relationship. Rather than engaging in power struggles with each other, these two are more caught up in the nature of society—in watching and understanding the flow of power in the broader world.

Romantic relationships, marriages and even family matchups in this combination can have a certain objectivity and detachment about them that facilitates understanding others—their motivations, their foibles, their frustrations. The partners may pursue interests in areas such as psychology, being fascinated by the study of emotions like jealousy, hatred, love, and so on. At the same time, they are not particularly prone to sensing these emotions in their pure form in their relationship. Paradoxically, the Virgo II–Scorpio-Sagittarius relationship may be strangely unable to cope with its own problems, or in many cases even to realize that they exist. Its detachment and lack of awareness can severely detract from its level of intimacy.

Friendships and rivalries here are usually highly spirited. Volatile in the extreme, the relationship is not conducive to keeping either positive or negative feelings inside for very long. Given to the grand gesture and the exaggerated statement, the matchup is likely to call up dramatic response from other people, matching its own.

Professional pairings may be concerned with the conditions under which people work. Their basic creature comforts, and the conditions that will make them happiest and therefore most productive, are of primary importance. Discussions of how work can be intelligently scheduled, and attention to the special significance of holiday parties, special observances and company or group traditions, underline the pair's social interests. Similarly, parent-child combinations treasure family festivities of all types.

Strong Direction

These two tend to bring out each other's outgoing side. Together they can make a powerful team—in fact, their relationship often focuses on the exercise of power, whether in the family, in business or in society generally. It works less to dominate and control, however, than to act as a catalyst for dynamic forces and unusual ideas. Although Virgo II–Sagittarius I pairs have a highly private side to their lives that few know about, as individuals they also have powerfully aggressive personas that have to find their way in the world, a quality the synergy of their relationship magnifies. Each partner here is especially open to the influence of the other: Sagittarius I's have something to teach Virgo II's about trusting their intuitions, and Virgo II's can show their Sagittarius partners a lot about matters of taste, encouraging them to be a bit more patient.

Love affairs, marriages and friendships in this combination can be romantic, affectionate and rewarding, but the partners must beware of getting caught up in ego struggles. Sagittarius I's have a moral and unforgiving side that may make them critical of the less-than-perfect ethical stance of Virgo II's, who have a tendency to justify the means by the ends, and a certain ruthlessness in getting their way. Sagittarius I's are no less insistent on what they want but will try to be fair—and will say so. This can irritate Virgo II's, leading them to criticize their partners as holier-than-thou. Meanwhile, Virgo II selectivity may rub Sagittarius I's the wrong way, provoking charges of elitism, pickiness and snobbism.

In business partnerships and creative or research endeavors, this pair's vision can give strong direction to any working group. They are rarely split by a struggle for power, and can exercise leadership jointly if this is what is needed. Parent-child combinations are prone to some of the same frictions that appear in other interpersonal relationships but can still prove inspiring to family members and other relatives.

ADVICE: Minimize internal strife. Discuss differences openly. Don't let arguments destroy love. Try to be more openhearted and forgiving.

Out of the Ordinary

When two of the most unusual types in the year get together, almost anything can happen. Both partners here have an idiosyncratic view of the world, ranging from the out of the ordinary to the peculiar to the downright weird. This tendency is intensified by their relationship, which is therefore quite open to be misinterpreted and misunderstood by other people. Whether these two turn out to be friends or enemies, they usually have great insight into each other, to the point where each of them may feel that the other one is the only person who really understands them.

Virgo II's and Sagittarius II's are quite aware of their own values—they know what they want. Yet because they often lack insight into themselves, they don't always know what they need or how to get it. Their love affairs and friendships are highly complex emotionally, then, but the understanding present in the relationship can help them to gain self-awareness. This will inevitably involve struggle and pain but will also be highly meaningful. Through the depth and psychological insight that this relationship affords, the partners may finally come to terms with rejections and misunderstandings they have suffered in the past. Their bond can grow strong in the process, but they should beware of becoming too dependent on their relationship. Divorces here can be particularly traumatic, but the partners may be able to form better later relationships through the lessons they take away from this one.

Since Virgo II and Sagittarius II lie in square aspect (90° apart) in the zodiac, astrology predicts friction between them. Sparks can certainly fly if they are rivals or enemies, but if they are allies their family and business groups can benefit from the constructively critical attitude that their relationship offers. In all of their relationships, the Virgo II–Sagittarius II couple must walk a fine line between offending others with their unusual stance and compromising their beliefs. They should try to find a middle way between a nonconformist and therefore isolating stance and one that craves and seeks social acceptance.

ADVICE: Be yourself, but also be prepared to compromise. Take the time to review your past. Work on self-improvement. Make yourself clear.

THE WEEK OF THE TITAN
SAGITTARIUS III

Empire Building

The extension of personal power is a prime theme in this combination; the partners often come together because they perceive their ability to expand their capacities together. Sometimes, however, their interactions degenerate into power struggles over the most mundane things. The relationship can effectively run a business, family or social organization, but may also view its province as its own personal empire, whether it is contained within the partners' home or office or extends farther afield. Virgo II's see all the tiny details, and are fact-oriented, while Sagittarius III's see the big picture and are caught up with ideas. At their best, then, they have all the bases covered, but if they fight, their different orientations will bring endless argument.

Virgo II's sometimes feel neglected in love and marriage with Sagittarius III's. Emotionally complex, they require a degree of effort, patience and understanding that Sagittarius III's may be unprepared to provide. Sagittarius III's, too, can feel ignored by Virgo II mates or friends, who may be less interested in their latest plans and more in the work at hand. Even so, love affairs here can be thrilling, both in and out of the bedroom, with strong romantic feelings on both sides. Whether these feelings can be maintained over the long haul of marriage is another story.

Parent-child matchups between these two, whichever of them is the parent, tend to emphasize tradition, succession and passing the mantle of family finances, business or property from generation to generation. Problems arise when the next in line has no interest in such traditions or behaves irresponsibly. In the commercial sphere, Virgo II's usually know where to go for financial counsel when they can't answer all the questions themselves. Sagittarius III's can have a feeling for making money but could use Virgo II advice as to what to do with their earnings, for they are sometimes penny wise but pound foolish. They will usually take the lead in career and social endeavors, but Virgo II's are no slouches when it comes to power, so that problems may arise if Sagittarius III leadership falters or fails.

ADVICE: Be more patient and understanding. Show more interest, if possible. Don't assume that what you are doing is more important.

THE CUSP OF PROPHECY
SAGITTARIUS-CAPRICORN CUSP

Us Against the World

This combination could encourage its partners' less savory tendencies by allowing them to indulge each other's self-pity. In this sense their relationship has a supportive function, but also a tendency toward an us-against-the-world stance that can be dangerously isolating. Both Virgo II's and Sagittarius-Capricorns have a private, introverted side that the chemistry of their relationship heightens. They have often suffered some frustration and unhappiness at the hands of the world, and find some compensatory sympathy in each other—they may make each other feel that they have met a kindred spirit who understands what it is to have suffered life's slings and arrows.

Love affairs between these two are capable of deep passions. Extremely private, the lovers may resent any intrusions, and will consider the betrayal of a confidence the worst of sins. The relationship is deeply empathic but can include blame, guilt and shame trips that are often echoes of or scripts left over from unhappy childhood experiences. The partners must be careful to let each other know when they begin to act like disapproving parents. And should they become parents themselves, Virgo II's and Sagittarius-Capricorns should foster the intention of breaking with old patterns rather than repeating the mistakes of the past.

In friendships and working relationships, Virgo II's can inspire the creativity of Sagittarius-Capricorns and serve as their models in successful business and social endeavors. As a co-worker team, these two may be able to discharge their duties within a company or organization year after year, quietly and efficiently, steadily and without complaint. They are faithful to each other, rarely breaking their bond in order to gain advancement or remuneration. Unfortunately, this means they run the risk of getting stuck.

Siblings or cousins in this combination, especially of the opposite sex, may have a secret society going on within the family structure that few know about or even suspect. Their communication may be unspoken, but nevertheless rings loud and clear to them.

ADVICE: Support each other but don't pull each other down. Leave room for individual growth. Be more forgiving and less fearful. Open up to other people.

Parallel Evolution

This relationship emphasizes learning, experimentation and personal development through experience. Virgo II's and Capricorn I's usually have enough respect and trust for each other to be able to rely on each other's observations and input. Even without living and working together, in many ways they will parallel each other in their evolution, needing only to contact each other from time to time in order to touch base. In fact, it may be difficult for these two to establish their relationship in the same physical space, for they tend to be territorial and possessive, and find it hard to share what they see as their own.

Struggles usually emerge in marriages over space and ownership. The extent of these controlling attitudes can become all too apparent should the spouses break up—divorces can feature vehement fighting over property and children. Love affairs are less troubled. Here Virgo II's and Capricorn I's may place a much higher value on ideals, affection and consideration—in short, intangibles. Their matchup is also quite sensual; in fact gustatory, tactile and sexual areas draw this couple like a magnet and may prove a solid basis of their relationship. Still, avoiding the common ownership of possessions is a good idea in these romances.

Work and career relationships show a striking ability to digest and disseminate information. Sharing their discoveries is perhaps the greatest single joy of the Virgo II–Capricorn I professional relationship; commercial motives such as the fear that secrets will be stolen will rarely make this team repress its desire to learn, share and assimilate. Education also has a priority in the spheres of family and friendship. The conviction that learning should be valued above all else does not always have a beneficial effect, however, since this relationship is capable of exerting an unwelcome and unconstructive pressure on people who are not really suited to study.

ADVICE: Don't impose your will on others. Respect differing opinions. Give people time to make up their minds. Drop possessive attitudes.

THE WEEK OF DETERMINATION
 CAPRICORN II

Peas in a Pod

In some ways these two go together like peas in a pod. Lying 120° apart in the zodiac, Virgo II and Capricorn II have a trine aspect between them, which astrology views as favorable and easygoing. And the relationship is quite comfy—until problems arise. The matchup goes much deeper, however, than superficial liking or acceptance, particularly in emotional realms, and its depth only becomes more apparent in times of crisis and chaos. The bonds that tie Virgo II's and Capricorn II's together have an almost fatalistic or karmic cast to them. One gets the feeling that these two deserve or were made for each other, for better or for worse.

Love affairs here are often highly physical and sexually fulfilling. But worry, and fear of rejection, can plague the couple, and if their relationship is to retain a measure of balance it must become more aware, more self-confident (but not arrogant) and, above all, a bit lighter. Learning to have fun and to take itself less seriously may become a requirement for its health and, ultimately, its survival. Marriage and work are often interconnected, again raising stress levels and increasing workaholic tendencies. Parent-child relationships of either variety should struggle to get hidden material out in the open, where it can be dealt with and then, perhaps, forgotten.

Friendships and work relationships look to the rest of the world like the tip of the iceberg: a lot is hidden below the surface here. Extremely secretive, the partners make their own rules and do what they have to do, paying little attention to the consequences. In some cases ruthless, in others merely preoccupied or unconcerned, they patiently support and protect each other, knowing that their fortunes are inextricably tied. Yet they lack deep moral or empathic commitment. Should one of them fail in business, social or financial dealings, threatening to take them or their organization under, the other will show coolly pragmatic survival instincts.

ADVICE: Lighten up. What good is it if you can't enjoy yourself? Be more honest. Acknowledge personal responsibilities. Lower stress levels.

Assimilating Experience

This solid, tough relationship can stand a lot of knocks. At the same time, it is characterized by an ease in assimilating experience and by a natural feeling between the partners. It shows imagination, vision and an orientation toward the future. Sometimes the only thing needed to bring out someone's creativity is a relaxed and open approach, and Capricorn III's will particularly appreciate this relationship for allowing their creative side to be activated, a side too often neglected by people who lean on their strong shoulder for support. Virgo II's, too, will be happy that their unusual ideas and personalities are finding an understanding audience. True, challenging experiences are bound to confront these two, but the more roadblocks they face, the more determined they will be to break through, and the more they can hope to learn.

Virgo II's and Capricorn III's are an excellent match in love affairs, although these affairs may not be strongly romantic. Both partners have a natural attitude to sex and can express affection easily. Their marriages might also click, but in a different way: here responsibilities, and the opportunity to build an effective family unit, usually gain ascendancy. Many disagreements and arguments over day-to-day details can emerge, for as spouses these two don't necessarily see eye to eye on practical matters, and both will regard themselves as specialists in these areas. Building, restoring or refurbishing a home can be especially stressful in this relationship.

At work these partners make an outstanding combination. Virgo II's are especially good at tending to financial and business matters, while Capricorn III's contribute powerful skills in planning and administering projects. Friendships and family relationships (parent-child or sibling) in this combination may experience power struggles in which each individual strives to impose his or her own direction on the other. In order for such relationships to remain intact, some understanding, tolerance and compromise will have to be established. All-out conflict is a scenario best avoided here, at almost any cost.

ADVICE: Give each other enough space. Place limits on your disagreement. Work for the good of the group. Put personal power struggles behind you.

THE CUSP OF MYSTERY & IMAGINATION
CAPRICORN-AQUARIUS CUSP

Compelling Coalescence

This relationship often sees Virgo II practicality and Capricorn-Aquarius inventiveness coalescing in a compelling way. It has the ability to convince others, not only through ideas but through charm, and exerts a magnetic influence on its environment. Its internal dynamics are not always the most settled, but frictions and differences of opinion often have the effect of generating dynamic power. Virgo II's and Capricorn-Aquarians sometimes engage in outright enmities, but they are more likely to demonstrate competitive impulses that are ultimately positive in effect, pushing both partners to better their own personal best and to improve the quality of their work.

In love affairs, temperamental differences between Virgo II's and Capricorn-Aquarians usually keep them from forming a lasting or emotionally deep relationship. Both partners are likely to avoid being honest about their feelings and to find it hard to empathize. Even a strong sexual bond is not usually enough to sustain this relationship for very long. Marriages, too, are not much recommended here.

Competitive and even combative tendencies may threaten to destroy friendships, even if they are exciting. Prone to jealousy and possessiveness, friends in this combination are likely to become rivals when they share an object of their affections. They will ultimately have to choose, which may be painful. Work relationships between these two are best kept objective and should not involve family members, spouses or friends. Virgo II's may grow exasperated with impractical Capricorn-Aquarians, particularly in the financial sphere, but at the same time will be dependent on their creative input. Capricorn-Aquarians can resent Virgo II criticism and bossiness but need their pragmatic guidance. These partners' talents and needs are usually complementary and may lead to career success. Parent-child relationships, especially with the Virgo II as the parent, may prove stressful and experience periodic breakdowns in communication.

ADVICE: Try to be more honest and sympathetic. Put yourself in the other person's place. Keep lines of communication open. Take time to care.

Amicability and Animosity

This mix of amicability and animosity keeps both individuals on their toes. The guardedness that results between them causes a kind of energy blockage that can hamper both the relationship's results and its development. These two have much to offer one another, but their respective strengths are unlikely to merge, coalesce or complement each other, for this would demand exactly the free flow of energy that this combination lacks. The customs here, especially in business combinations and friendships, are distance and blockage. Furthermore, the relationship may include a certain enviousness—Virgo II's toward Aquarius I's for their quick perceptions and creativity, Aquarius I's toward Virgo II's for their practicality and money sense. Aquarius I's tend to overshadow their partner in this combination, but Virgo II's exert their own subtle influence and can function as the Aquarius I's most valuable critic, adviser or even teacher. Aquarius I's will be attracted by Virgo II complexity and secretiveness, perhaps trying to unravel this intriguing personality's mystery. Observation is a hallmark here, but usually to no avail, as inherent blockages keep the combination from progressing.

Love affairs bring out the nervous sides of both of these partners. Insecurities abound here, and the couple tend to worry a lot about whether they are pursuing the right path or were really meant to be involved with each other in the first place. The domestic responsibility of marriages will benefit the relationship a bit, but too often Virgo II's will be left doing the work while their Aquarius I partners are off having a good time. The resentments that Virgo II's may consequently feel they often just hammer down inside, resulting in depression and withdrawal.

Virgo II's are likely to be proud parents of Aquarius I's, and can also provide the kind of reliable home environment that these children require. Yet they may fall short in their ability to understand young Aquarius I's, and to supply them with what they need emotionally. Much of the guardedness in Virgo II–Aquarius I friendships can be alleviated when both partners are given lots of time and space of their own.

ADVICE: Free yourself from unnecessary worry. Accentuate the positive. Share responsibilities equally. Beware of invidious comparisons.

THE WEEK OF YOUTH & EASE
AQUARIUS II

Unfavorable Judgments

This can be a loving relationship, with a marked idealism, but it has its difficulties. Inherent differences in character can draw a lot of criticism out of these partners: each has a tendency to attack the other. Astrologically, Virgo II and Aquarius II lie in a quincunx aspect to each other in the zodiac (150° apart), which usually indicates some instability. Aquarius II's like problem-free lives, which means that they have to feel free to go their own way; Virgo II's may have other ideas, but every time they raise an objection or express a disagreement, they are made to feel that they are rocking the boat. After a while they could just give up, while holding on to their resentment and frustration. The point is that many Virgo II's are not really built psychologically for just going with the flow—they thrive on challenge, problems and difficulties. If Aquarius II's disapprove of this approach, Virgo II's will feel disempowered.

Warmth and sympathy are apparent in love affairs, and the partners present a solid and mutually supportive front. Aquarius II's are often the aggressive ones in initiating a romantic relationship, and Virgo II's have no objection to being so sought after. This is no guarantee, however, that they will open up to Aquarius II's once they are caught. One immediate problem arises when friends and family members make comparisons between these partners; it is usually the Virgo II who is found lacking. Once these personalities' pride is wounded, it may be difficult or impossible for Aquarius II's to get through to them again.

Marriages and business partnerships in this combination can work out well, with Virgo II taste, wit and discrimination offsetting the more youthful and enthusiastic approach of Aquarius II's. A mutual coolness emerges as one of the relationship's chief characteristics, and this may later grow into a deep reserve. The couple often presents a polished and serene face to the world that belies all sorts of underlying psychological problems. Virgo II–Aquarius II friendships and sibling relationships may exhibit youthful rebelliousness against parents, teachers and other authority figures.

ADVICE: Don't take to heart what other people say. Continue along your own path. Be more transparent. Scale back disapproving attitudes. Feed your love.

THE WEEK OF THE ENIGMA
VIRGO II

February 8–15

THE WEEK OF ACCEPTANCE
AQUARIUS III

Freedom from Negativity

This relationship faces two major challenges around the issue of freedom. The first is to help free the partners from their own negative thought patterns and low self-esteem. The second, assuming that the first can be tackled, is the preservation and celebration of the partners' individual freedom while honoring the relationship. Although these two seem quite different from the outside (Virgo II's more reserved, Aquarius III's vivacious), they actually have a lot in common. They are both sensitive to criticism, yet do not hesitate to voice their own critical dissatisfaction with the world. They also tend to play the victim—listening to them, one would think they had had a bad time of it, but there is an element of dramatic self-pity, and an inability to let go of the past, in most of their stories. Together these two can work at releasing their negative thoughts and habits—their simultaneous negativity seems to be so unbearable that the dam bursts and they mend their ways. They both (not just Aquarius III's) may have problems with acceptance and they both (not just Virgo II's) may be hard to figure out.

The closer these two get in romantic relationships, the more insecurity they may feel. Each is usually afraid of being rejected or abandoned by the other partner, usually in favor of a competitor who is better looking, more intelligent, more capable, etc. This relationship can heal their low self-esteem, but not miraculously—both partners must work on their own problems, occasionally touching base. In marriages the emphasis is more on the careful allowance of individual freedom of action, style, even taste.

Parent-child relationships find Virgo II parents somewhat severe and demanding, Aquarius III children stubborn and rebellious. Aquarius III parents, on the other hand, can be quite neglectful of their Virgo II children, leaving them pretty much to their own devices. Friendships and work matchups in this combination can reinforce both negative attitudes and the partners' feeling that the world is hostile and uncaring. At work this tendency will have an unfortunate effect on the team's projects.

ADVICE: Respect your differences, and don't try to gloss over or eliminate them. Solve your own problems. Try to emancipate yourself from old scripts.

AQUARIUS-PISCES CUSP

Working Both Ways

Although both of these partners have an undeniably independent streak, Virgo II's often assume the role of guide to Aquarius-Pisces, who, although quite tough and aggressive enough to make it in the world, benefit tremendously from their analytic powers and objectivity. Virgo II's, for their part, not only get tremendous satisfaction out of seeing their Aquarius-Pisces protégés succeed, but may also gain renown and financial reward themselves in the process. Within any family or social group, Virgo II's and Aquarius-Pisces will be strongly independent figures but at the same time will depend on their relationship with each other for counsel and inspiration.

In love affairs and marriages, Virgo II's show great empathy with Aquarius-Pisces' walled-off sensitivities, and vice versa. Both know when to be there with a willing ear and a sympathetic shoulder, and when to back off. The great trust that can emerge in such a relationship, however, may not be fixable once broken. This relationship is ruled by fire, here signifying passion, willfulness and instinct. With this level of sensitivity and passion, it is no wonder that these relationships can be very fulfilling, at least as long as mutual respect is maintained.

Parent-child relationships are strongest when Virgo II's are the parents. There is a danger, however, that Aquarius-Pisces children may worship them unduly and then be disillusioned when the truth is revealed. And although Virgo II's can be excellent role models for their Aquarius-Pisces children, they may also teach them a few bad habits, including secretiveness and arrogance. As indicated, Virgo II–Aquarius-Pisces friendships and social and career relationships can be outstanding. Whether in or out of the classroom, teacher-student relationships with Virgo II's as mentors flow in both directions: education here will be a mutually experiential process rather than a mere imparting of knowledge.

ADVICE: Never betray a sacred trust. Beware of arrogance. Respect is fragile and easily broken. Elevating someone can be a prelude to their fall.

Mapping Out the Future

This relationship is likely to focus on thought, intelligence, inspiration and the sharing of ideas. Personal difficulties may mar this outstanding mental connection, however. The saving grace will be the Virgo II ability to provide a stabilizing force in the up-and-down lives of Pisces I's, who tend to be quite uncertain and indecisive. Virgo II's will have a lot to put up with, and should they feel rejected or neglected, they will probably become unhappy and depressed. But if they have the patience to hang in there, their Pisces I partner may well come back after wandering off, or take a stand after a bout of confusion.

One of the biggest problems in love affairs is the emotional instability of Pisces I's, who may, however, find the cool, relatively detached Virgo II approach reassuring. Both partners are service oriented and they can generally be counted on to make their contribution to the relationship. In marriages, too, they are likely to give a great deal to each other and to their children. Pisces I's do sometimes forget or ignore their daily tasks, and Virgo II's can be helpful in keeping them in line. Domestic duties like cleaning and washing up will help ground Pisces I flightiness.

Friendships between these two can be outstanding. A Pisces I may well be that special friend with whom a Virgo II can open up and share, feeling unthreatened and interested and instinctively knowing that there is nothing to fear. It is in career and family matchups that the relationship's ability to generate ideas and discuss concepts is especially apparent. Engaged in shared research and development projects, mapping out the future course of a family, cultural or business organization, or providing a needed service together, Virgo II's and Pisces I's make an effective team and see eye to eye in most things.

ADVICE: Seek greater stability. Keep on sharing, but don't overemphasize problems. Tend to everyday matters. Push yourself a bit more.

Maintaining Objectivity

This relationship generates tremendous creative energy, being capable of expansive thinking, innovation and reaching for lofty goals. It is an energy that arises out of opposition: Virgo II and Pisces II lie across from each other in the zodiac (they are 180° apart). Capable of constituting a strong bond that can work to stabilize any group or organization, the relationship is also quite capable of standing on its own, so that business partnerships and close professional associations are especially favored here. Virgo II's will tend to deal with planning, finances and management while Pisces II's supply the imagination and often the theoretical or technical know-how.

In personal relationships these two tend to get lost in each other. There are so many mysteries in their hidden personalities that they can become obsessed with personal exploration, losing contact with everyday realities. Love affairs between Virgo II's and Pisces II's can be deep and emotional. There is a real danger of the partners losing their personal identities and merging in an all-absorbing relationship that takes every bit of their energy.

Friendships and marriages are likely to be more objective, and conducive to individual personal growth. The Virgo II–Pisces II relationship can be an extremely active social unit within its circle of friends and beyond; it is not uncommon for the pair to assume an important role in the development of community, church or athletic organizations, where their service-oriented side can be fully expressed. This work is usually done on a volunteer basis, and seeks little if any remuneration.

Virgo II and Pisces II relatives can give direction to the family group as long as they can stay objective in their feelings for each other. Unfortunately, they sometimes lack the toughness or willpower to withstand disappointment. The danger here is that they may disappear into their own cocoon and turn away from their responsibilities, particularly if they feel hurt or rejected.

ADVICE: Pull yourself together. Toughen your resolve. Don't let yourself dissolve away. Keep your focus on the creative.

THE WEEK OF DANCERS & DREAMERS
PISCES III

The Miraculous and Unexpected

Secret dreams, often dormant in these individuals for years, can blossom in this relationship, and when they are revealed the partners may be amazed at their correspondences and parallels of thought. The miraculous and the unexpected figure prominently here. The relationship focuses on aspirations and visionary thinking, both as a journey and as a destination.

Through marriages and love affairs, Virgo II's can be introduced by Pisces III's to a whole world of family relationships in which they were previously uninterested or else that they felt inadequate to become involved with. On the other hand, both of these individuals require a lot of emotional understanding, which for some reason it is difficult for them to give each other. Perhaps it is because the focus here is more on outward than on inward shared goals. Marriages will often give both partners the opportunity to work out childhood hang-ups, especially those concerned with the disapproval of authority figures. These two can be particularly successful in planning or building a new house together, or in fixing up an old one. Domestic pursuits like these can come to occupy most of the relationship's time and effort.

As friends, Virgo II's and Pisces III's make excellent traveling companions. Their expansiveness of thought as a pair is evident in the way they plan long vacations, or even expeditions into relatively remote parts of the world. Unfortunately, many of these projects never get off the drawing board, but the one or two that do are usually exciting and fulfilling. Although Virgo is an earth sign and Pisces a water sign, the Virgo II–Pisces III matchup is ruled by fire, here signifying a longing for dynamic endeavors.

Career connections may prove somewhat unrealistic. Dreams and aspirations often outstrip pragmatic realities here, leaving them far behind. In financial, business or entrepreneurial endeavors, Virgo II–Pisces III partners may fail to reach their objectives, and although they are capable of booking moderate successes they may ultimately give up out of sheer disappointment.

ADVICE: Form a more realistic picture of yourself. Examine your plans carefully. Don't be content with fantasies. Proceed methodically, step by step.

THE WEEK OF THE LITERALIST
VIRGO III

Undiluted Doses

These two are unlikely to try to kid each other a whole lot; Virgo III's are brutally honest, and a pair of them will expect the truth in undiluted doses. It's not that their relationship is overserious—banter and light humor actually figure prominently here. Behind every humorous statement, though, is a knowing quality, an assumption that the listener knows what's going on in the world. Virgo III's, in fact, assume a great deal about each other, and when their partner fails to live up to their expectations, derision may be their only recourse.

Virgo III–Virgo III love affairs are usually frank and down to earth, more sexual than romantic. The partners know what they want and usually think they can get it. A principal problem in relationships of this kind is selfishness, both of the physical and the psychological varieties. Although the partners are very much alike, it rarely occurs to either of them to try to put themselves in the other's place and see how it feels. Marriages between Virgo III's are often practical and pragmatic. Should they prove fractious, the couples will hang in there for what they consider a reasonable time, but then won't hesitate to call it quits.

Two Virgo III's in one family can be a problem for other family members, since these personalities tend to inflict their critical attitudes, strong wills and demanding natures on those around them. Autonomy is usually so important to them that Virgo III siblings will battle it out to protect their prerogatives. Conflicting choices may be a special problem for them. Parent-child relationships in this combination will expect absolute adherence to the written and spoken word; their promises are written in stone, and they will expect the same of others. Virgo III friends and business partners can get on splendidly as long as they don't expect too much attention from each other. These relationships should be kept as objective as possible—emotionally charged areas will be difficult here.

ADVICE: Forgive and forget. Try to be more flexible. Let some things go without comment. Put yourself in your partner's place. Don't expect too much.

Launching New Projects

This relationship is likely to create new outlooks and orientations, which might result in the realization of new projects, or more simply but more basically, in new ways of thinking—as long, that is, as the partners let things gel between them. If these two rub each other the wrong way (always a possibility), they will deny the relationship the chance to work its effects. Virgo III's can offer Virgo-Libras a common-sense, down-to-earth, practical approach, and Virgo-Libras can teach Virgo III's something about sensuous pleasure, enjoyment and relaxation. Thus both partners can have a grounding effect on each other. Once this quality begins to enter their relationship, Virgo III's and Virgo-Libras may decide to take off on a new undertaking, most likely an ambitious one. That this imaginative new effort should arise spontaneously may come as a surprise to both of them.

In love affairs, the somewhat stern Virgo III attitude to anything they consider immoral may soften under Virgo-Libras' persistently sensual tutelage. At any rate, it should, and if it doesn't, Virgo-Libras may start to chafe under their partner's severity of judgment. Virgo III's would do well to learn to relax and enjoy the spontaneous affection that this relationship offers. In marriage too, the Virgo III expectation that his or her spouse will toe the line can arouse resentment and bewilderment unless they learn to temper it.

Friendships and work relationships often overlap, and might be based in the exploration of far-out theoretical areas. They have a good chance of being commercially successful. Virgo III common sense and Virgo-Libra taste can be an excellent combination, but the pair should guard against the Virgo III tendency to be overly critical and Virgo-Libra trendiness. Siblings in this combination may vie for attention, especially when they are of the same sex. Their selfish, possessive and controlling drives may lead to conflict and argument that upset the family. They will absolutely need their own unquestioned space, possessions and priorities. It is usually a big mistake for parents to push or require them to share.

ADVICE: Try to avoid being irritated by each other. Focus on whatever is mutually relaxing and enjoyable. Learn the gift of giving. Working together requires patience.

A Search for Harmony

This combination is often involved in a search for harmony, both within the relationship itself and in its surrounding environment, both in the partners' own joint projects and in the creative output and endeavors in which they are involved with other people. Harmony within the relationship may or may not be achieved, but in terms of creating beauty of form, these two have no match. Their standards are usually very high. Perfectionist Libra I's meet their match in Virgo III's, and both partners have first-rate critical minds. Despite the possibility of personal conflict, these two can work well together when their ideals of high-quality work mesh. Without mutual respect and admiration, however, emotional irritations and clashes can drive them apart. The synergy here will magnify not only perfectionist and critical drives but a tendency to procrastinate; for Virgo III's this has something to do with overconfidence, for Libra I's with indecision.

Love affairs and friendships may be difficult for these two, since they are temperamentally so different. The direct intensity of Libra I's often puts off more subtle and discriminating Virgo III's, who, for their part, are likely to be threatening to Libra I's through the quality of their intelligence—an area where Libra I's need to dominate. Marriages can be much more successful, particularly when the partners can ground their abilities and visions in concrete daily tasks. The acid test here will be whether caustic disagreements can be avoided when setting up the domestic space.

Work relationships between Virgo III's and Libra I's work out best when the two personalities have an equal say in their projects, whether they are co-workers, business partners or executives. Their personal contact should be limited and their attitudes kept objective. Their insistence on high standards can make them respected but also feared by their fellow workers and employees. Parent-child relationships in this combination can be unsettling: patience will be a rare commodity here, and explosive disagreements can break out at almost any time.

ADVICE: Scale back disagreements. Try to be more relaxed and less critical. Don't let important matters go for too long. Stay as objective as possible.

Dropping One's Guard

This relationship can be trusting, open, even innocent. As such it has the capacity to breathe fresh life into the viewpoints of two often jaded individuals. Virgo III's and Libra II's are tough nuts when it comes to the rest of humanity, and sensing the ability to let down their guard in this relationship can give them a whole new energy level and a new lease on life. They may find that they are able to tackle projects that would otherwise have daunted them. In fact, the relaxation here may foster a whole new level of creativity for them.

Romances in this combination can be highly rewarding. A mixture of personal understanding and sensuousness guarantees a warm and loving relationship. These partners could continue close for years—they might feel no need to marry, but might eventually make a decision to live together. When they do get married, Virgo III's sometimes feel they have to assume too large a share of the couple's daily responsibilities, which they resent.

As friends and siblings these two usually have a positive effect on other friends and family members. Their attitude is generally constructive, and they enjoy playing a low-key but significant role in the activities of the larger group. Occasionally Virgo III–Libra II “innocence” can irritate people who see it as a ploy to avoid work or responsibility. Generally speaking, in fact, this relationship may need to adopt more mature attitudes if it is to escape the accusation of acting childishly or irresponsibly and to gain the respect of others. The success of Virgo III–Libra II working relationships in particular may depend on the pair's ability to toughen up a bit and be more realistic. Although the matchup will usually bring good feelings to the workplace, it may also reinforce indolent and indecisive tendencies in others. Superiors would do well to push these two, who are capable of high-quality work if encouraged in the right way.

ADVICE: Be a bit harder on yourself. Prove that you are mature enough to handle responsibility. Seek out sources of inspiration and motivation.

The Highest Values

Social feelings generally predominate in this combination, which focuses on making daily interactions more pleasurable and rewarding. It makes for a relaxed relationship that aims for peace and harmony. It is by no means dull, and it has a demanding side that asks its partners to do their best at all times, but the basic setup here rarely allows those demands to become unreasonable or stressful. In fact, the relationship's highest values seem to be consideration and kindness.

The relationship is at its most demanding in marriage. Usually powered by the insistence of Virgo III's and the large presence of Libra III's, this couple is a force to be reckoned with in any social or family context. Their children will get attention and respect from both of them, although Libra III's can seldom supply as much nurturing energy as their Virgo III partners. As parents these two may also err in having too high expectations of their children.

Friendships and love affairs in this combination are more relaxed. Humor is important here, but it tends to be directed toward other people; the relationship takes itself a wee bit seriously at times. Activities of all types attract this pair, but they are particularly interested in entertainment and self-improvement. A tendency to extreme, even fanatical involvements in programs of weight loss, fitness training and health should be watched and avoided.

Perfectionism emerges most prominently in the family and at work, which are also less easygoing manifestations of the relationship. Both Virgo III and Libra III parents can be extremely critical of their children of the other sign; the same goes for bosses and employees. Even though rebelliousness is rarely an issue here, these parents should be extremely careful not to alienate the affections of their children, who, again whether they are Virgo III's or Libra III's, may carry psychological complexes into maturity that will make it difficult or impossible for them to relate normally to authority figures.

ADVICE: Try to laugh at yourself occasionally. Seek the middle way. Hedonism isn't always best for you. Be a bit more skeptical of extreme behavior.

Youthful Sparkle

The childlike exuberance in this combination is such that the world is bound to notice it—these two have a certain capacity for fame. Fortune, however, may escape them. Youthful sparkle dominates here and can overcome the partners' respective personality traits, which in both cases tend toward the severe. Their relationship also encourages them to show initiative, although to realize this drive they will both have to overcome a desire for overly careful planning. If they can add the insightful commentary and capable management that are common in this matchup to the other traits they share, they can achieve a lot. On the down side, tempers can flare here as well.

In love and family pairings, a third person often figures in the Virgo III–Libra-Scorpio relationship, a person who occupies the spotlight and around whom the partners revolve, whether as a complementary or a warring pair. Jealousies and competitiveness can figure strongly in such triangles. Ideally, Virgo III's and Libra-Scorpios will eventually recognize the inner logic of the situation (which may be fated to continue for years) and work out a kind of truce. But one problem here is that both Virgo III's and Libra-Scorpios are usually much better geared to social pursuits and physical activities than to matters of human psychology and emotional understanding. They may have problems coming to deeper realizations about the dynamics of their relationship, particularly with respect to others. Marriages and working relationships in this combination are apt to generate a lot of attention from others. One would expect success here, given both partners' high degree of competence, but the matchup is unfortunately seldom enduring. The partners are often much too opinionated, and too attached to their own approach, to work together for very long or even to live under the same roof. Friendships can work out better, especially when both partners share an interest or pursuit, often involving the arts, travel or collecting. As long as this activity takes the spotlight, competition for attention between Virgo III and Libra-Scorpio friends will not generally mar their relationship.

ADVICE: Try to see yourself as others sometimes see you. Don't compromise yourself too much. Recognize the importance of diplomacy.

THE WEEK OF INTENSITY
SCORPIO I

A Form-Fitting Dynamic

This relationship demonstrates a kind of self-consciousness over how it fits into the family, career or group hierarchy of which it is a part, so that its thrust is social in nature. An interesting molding dynamic is at work here, more so than in other relationships: Virgo III's and Scorpio I's have the ability to adapt themselves in serious ways to each other and to their environment without compromising their essential individuality. They achieve this through the taste for quiet reflection and thoughtfulness that their relationship engenders. This pair will periodically need to withdraw in order to assess the situation in which they find themselves. Having done so, they will reemerge more malleable, fitting either into some new form or more comfortably into an old one.

Friendships and sibling matchups often cast Scorpio I's as observers, a role to which they are suited. Their natural attentiveness may lead them to obsessive examinations of their Virgo III partner, who may be flattered by this at first but will ultimately be made quite uncomfortable by it. Virgo III's are very stable in this combination, which can make Scorpio I's quite dependent—they must be careful not to let the matchup assume too much importance in their life. Both partners will eventually come to resent the relationship if it binds them too tightly. Love affairs and marriages between Virgo III's and Scorpio I's are highly social. Rather than burying themselves in secretive and hidden activities (which both of these personalities might do in other combinations), they thrive on interactions with other people, perhaps during parties, dinners, outdoor events or vacations. It is usually through their social contact with outsiders to their relationship that they really get to know and appreciate each other. These partners must be careful to foster intimacy between them and to give it time to develop. Working relationships between them can be excellent as long as they maintain respect and preserve some semblance of equality. The tendency of Virgo III's to dominate their Scorpio I partners must be watched carefully, for it can lead to resentment and even rejection.

ADVICE: Leave enough time for personal matters. Be less concerned with your image. Beware of obsessive tendencies. Promote equality.

THE WEEK OF DEPTH
SCORPIO II

Tight Team

This powerfully persuasive matchup tends to ignore society's rules, setting its own standards and doing pretty much as it pleases. The relationship's focus is likely to be an important activity or project in which the two partners function as a tight team. Virgo III's may resent Scorpio II dominance, and Scorpio II's can find Virgo III's manipulative, but all in all they both are willing to pull together in a common effort. Scorpio II's will enjoy the mental stimulation offered by the relationship, and Virgo III's its intense emotional involvement.

As lovers these two can initially be swept away by passion, but Virgo III's will begin to back off if they feel claimed or controlled. If the relationship is sexually rewarding, this distancing will be a difficult and painful process. Scorpio II's may retaliate, but if they choose to fight, they will find the Virgo III tongue sharp and may have to suffer in silence. Repression often sets up a vicious circle in which the blocked energies of Scorpio II's repeatedly summon up attacks from Virgo III's. Marriage can work out better; both partners have nurturing tendencies that the synergy of their relationship intensifies, so that they will probably provide both their offspring and each other with a protective, caring environment. Virgo III and Scorpio II parents can make an effective business team or can successfully share a creative hobby or sport.

Virgo III and Scorpio II friends may decide to work together as freelancers or to run a small business together. But problems over money can arise if Scorpio II tastes prove too expensive for thrifty Virgo III's, and working relationships between these two may eventually break up if they cannot reach or stick to firm financial agreements. In the family, Virgo III–Scorpio II parent-child relationships of either kind can be excellent, but their success will ultimately depend on whether or not the parent can prove an acceptable role model to the child, particularly if the two are of the same sex.

ADVICE: Give vent to feelings. Think constructively. Take account of wishes and needs. Balance your cash flow but don't be stingy or spendthrift.

Scintillating Presentations

The focus of this matchup is likely to involve being the moving force behind commercial presentations, family celebrations and cultural manifestations. Although as individuals these partners tend to lead controlled and muted personal lives, their relationship allows them an extroversion that could be called scintillating, most obviously in any projects they share. The relationship is highly successful in directing energies to where they really count, rather than frittering them away on emotional displays. Although Virgo is an earth sign and Scorpio water, the Virgo III–Scorpio III relationship is ruled by air, an element in this case signifying thought and entertainment. Realists first and foremost, Virgo III's and Scorpio III's will not kid themselves about their relationship.

In love affairs these two rarely get carried away by romantic drives. The relationship can be somewhat dangerous for them, since neither of them will hesitate to withdraw or break it off should it run counter to their interests or wishes. Yet it can be highly satisfying and even sometimes thrilling, especially sexually. Marriages in this combination can work out well, for the partners usually take their domestic and parental duties seriously and will rarely compromise the family unit by untoward behavior.

As friends, these two can depend heavily on their relationship for support and advice. But Scorpio III's may find Virgo III's a bit selfish while Virgo III's think Scorpio III's are sometimes too concerned with their social image. Parent-child relationships of either variation feature rather strict parental attitudes and dutiful filial ones.

At work this pair has a keen eye out for success. Aware of what others want, the partners know how to provide it in an exciting and attractive manner without unduly compromising their own standards. Honesty is extremely important to them, and they will rarely pretend to be something they are not in order to achieve financial or career advancement.

ADVICE: Loosen up emotionally. Don't be afraid of feelings. Try to be more kind and understanding. Consideration of others is of utmost importance.

Pragmatic Discussions

Power struggles are likely to be the theme here, and the relationship's success tends to rise or fall depending on whether the partners gain and keep each other's respect. It is crucial that they negotiate with each other fairly; they will rarely see eye to eye without extensive, open and pragmatic discussion. Both partners appreciate free and easy communication, which, however, is never more valuable to the relationship than negotiation. Tough agreements will usually have to be hammered out here, whether the relationship emerges in the domestic, commercial or family sphere.

The sticking points in love and marriage will be Scorpio-Sagittarians' need to roam, or generally to maintain their independence, and the ability of Virgo III's to accept and allow such behavior. Their stern judgments will drive Scorpio-Sagittarians up the wall, eventually alienating them completely. There may be a strong physical attraction here, but it is usually insufficient to override or mitigate these problems. On the other hand, power struggles in these relationships are not always divisive, since the partners are a good match for each other and are quite capable of gaining satisfaction from their interactions.

Friendships can be marred by stubborn confrontations between these sometimes willful and headstrong personalities. And confrontation is even more likely in the family, particularly in parent-child bonds in which Virgo III's are the parents. The strictures they impose will produce only rebellion and wildness in Scorpio-Sagittarius children, inevitably resulting in serial clashes.

Virgo III's and Scorpio-Sagittarians can work excellently together as long as they respect and trust each other. This last item is important, since Virgo III's may find Scorpio-Sagittarians slippery customers and may not always be certain of them or of their motives when they are out of sight. Scorpio-Sagittarians, on the other hand, sometimes find Virgo III's a bit conservative and inflexible. If a workable dynamic is achieved, however, commercial and artistic success is within the partners' grasp.

ADVICE: Suspend judgments when possible. Try to be more accepting. Don't get carried away with power struggles. Stay flexible and open.

A Discriminating Approach

Naturally lively and affectionate, this pair is apt to be attractive to other people, even as they stand back somewhat detachedly and secretly analyze and criticize the very people who are drawn to them. Their relationship puts a high value on honor and integrity, but its true focus is likely to be a discriminating and critical approach toward the material world, and especially toward people. Virgo III's are attracted to the naturally expressive qualities of Sagittarius I's, Sagittarius I's to Virgo III grace and cool elegance. Although Virgo III's are more at home in this world, Sagittarius I's will appreciate being able to express their more selective side and to share high standards with their partner. Another of the relationship's themes is the generation of excitement, and here Sagittarius I's usually take the lead.

Love affairs here can be highly romantic. Passion often manifests strongly, and physical involvement can reach a fever pitch. Yet discriminating and critical qualities are not left behind at the bedroom door. Both partners are very much aware of their ability to please and be pleased by their demanding mate, especially sexually. The strong feelings between these two are unlikely to fade with marriage; in fact, they usually deepen. Such marriages are temperamental, featuring bouts of explosive anger but also a tendency to kiss and make up.

Siblings in this combination are often extremely close. They have a deep understanding and acceptance of each other, particularly when they are of opposite sexes, and their ability to think through problems and come up with workable solutions can be very valuable to the family of which they are a part. They will often be thought of as compromisers and peacemakers, a role that Sagittarius I's especially will enjoy, since in other relationships they more often play the part of activist or rebel.

In their friendships and work relationships, mental Virgo III's may have conflicts with their intuitive partner. Their critical qualities may also unnerve Sagittarius I's, who will often be unable to explain how they feel about a given problem to the satisfaction of Virgo III's.

ADVICE: Evaluate others less—life isn't a contest. Work on keeping your opinions to yourself. Take the time to understand.

Reconciling Different Outlooks

The focus of this relationship, and also its challenge, is to set up a business, family or system to achieve mutual goals. Many difficulties can be expected, not the least of them the problem Virgo III's will have accepting the more unusual aspects of their partner's personality. They may not see themselves as straitlaced, but more far-out Sagittarius II's will quite likely make them feel uptight and conservative. The difficulties here will emerge not just in getting along on a daily basis but in reconciling differing outlooks and attitudes.

Virgo III parents can be a bit severe with their Sagittarius II children, whom they probably see as wayward and needing discipline. Young Sagittarius II's may withdraw or try to escape when a parent does not understand them; they may also start to prefer the other parent, a choice that will likely only cause more tension. Friendships here can succeed wonderfully, on the other hand, arriving at unanimity of opinion while thriving on diversity and difference. Since it is precisely for their little peculiarities that these two are so fond of each other as friends, their relationship exerts little or no pressure on them to be anything but themselves.

It is probably marriages and live-in love affairs that suffer most from the partners' differences in temperament and from the power struggles inherent in this combination. As spouses these two could find their greatest fulfillment in buying a house or in building or redesigning one; Sagittarius II's have a practical energy that can go to work here extremely effectively. The only danger is that they may have problems sustaining their efforts, so Virgo II's will have to be patient. In matters of business and education, Sagittarius II's are apt to depend heavily on their partner in this combination for support and help. As a result, Virgo III's may find themselves tending to most of the practical details of life while their imaginative partners are more absorbed with their creative work. Resentments and frustrations may consequently build up here, as well as blame and recrimination centering on Sagittarius II unreliability or eccentricity.

ADVICE: Reconcile differences whenever possible. Try to be more accepting and understanding. Find a balance between having fun and being responsible.

Stimulating Tensions

This relationship is supportive and understanding but intense. It demands that its partners work to win each other's respect, and the road to this goal can be rough indeed. The difficulty is underlined by the fact that Virgo III and Sagittarius III lie square to each other in the zodiac (90° apart), so that astrology would predict problems between them. The tension between them, however, has the positive effect of stimulating them both to ever higher levels of achievement.

As lovers these two can reach emotional levels untouched in their prior relationships. Powerfully intense, their sexual interaction can sweep them away emotionally. Although it may not be possible for either partner to stay objective at such times, later on Virgo III's will be able assess the state of the relationship. They may keep their findings to themselves, however, realizing that Sagittarius III's will have no interest in their analysis. Marriages between these two tend to suffer from power conflicts; Sagittarius III's might try to force Virgo III's into a subservient role that they will find difficult to accept.

Friendships and sibling matchups in this combination are likely to be extremely close, particularly when of the same sex. As friends Virgo III's and Sagittarius III's might be taken as pairs of brothers or of sisters. Competition and even combat are to be expected between them, but over the years their bond will deepen. They can invariably count on each other for help in times of crisis or emergency.

At work, especially at the professional level, Virgo III's and Sagittarius III's will recognize each other's talents, whether they are co-workers or rivals. Assessment is the key concept here; these two tend to be each other's own best critics. Should they work for the same company or organization, their relationship will be recognized as a powerful force in reorganization, market analysis or the kind of research and development that produces startling innovations and inventions.

ADVICE: Control combativeness. Find common agreement. Put tensions to positive use. Stay positive in outlook. Relax whenever possible.

Blown by the Winds of Chance

To the extent that these partners are able to work together, their relationship will be enriched by opposing talents and points of view and may even focus on what they can learn from each other. Yet it is doubtful that they will be able to live in harmony for long. This is not an easy relationship: Sagittarius-Capricorns are too frequently off on a starry-eyed trip or are too involved with their latest project to take much notice of their Virgo III partner. When they are in one of their deep, silent moods, they are also likely to feel the down-to-earth common-sense statements of Virgo III's as a threat (or at the very least as a criticism). The dynamic here is a kind of tug-of-war in which Sagittarius-Capricorn abstraction struggles with Virgo III pragmatism.

Love affairs and marriages are likely to suffer from a lack of understanding. Yet these two will usually learn a great deal about themselves from the relationship, if only by becoming aware of their dislikes and other negative feelings. Conflicting ideologies and points of view can be particularly disruptive.

Co-worker and teacher-student relationships between Virgo III's and Sagittarius-Capricorns can work well when their activities are limited to a specialized area. Indeed, specialization may become the relationship's saving grace, for it encourages a kind of objectivity not otherwise possible for these two in personal areas. Analysis and discussion of technical subjects can be especially fruitful.

Parent-child relationships can see a reversal of roles in which the child proves the parent's teacher and even, in later life, a role model. In actuality the child may be acting out the healthiest parts of the adult's repressed wishes, which will make their unspoken bond extremely strong. Virgo III-Sagittarius-Capricorn friendships and enmities can alternate within the relationship, fluctuating with circumstance and blown by the winds of chance.

ADVICE: Take a stand. Don't leave things to chance. Be honest about your feelings. Accept differences. Stay objective and keep cool.

THE WEEK OF THE RULER
CAPRICORN I

Butting Heads

These two hardheaded individuals inevitably butt up against each other, particularly in family settings. Neither of them is likely to be too flexible or understanding in this relationship, although they often gain each other's respect—at least enough to know that neither will allow the other to aggress on their territory. Circumstances usually determine whether or not Virgo III's and Capricorn I's will be found on the same side of the fence. If they are allies, their relationship can become the solid backbone of any organization; if they are opponents, they will usually fight to the last. Although Virgo and Capricorn are both earth signs, the Virgo III-Capricorn I relationship is ruled by water, an element here signifying emotional depth and seriousness of purpose—a seriousness that can determine the relationship's tone.

Love affairs are unlikely to be taken lightly. These partners demand a serious commitment from each other and are sensitive to each other's lapses in conduct or breaches of ethics. This often proves a strain for Virgo III's, who find Capricorn I inflexibility too much to bear. Capricorn I's, on the other hand, can feel threatened by the freethinking and questioning style of Virgo III's. Marriages between these two can be effective in many practical areas but lack the spark necessary to sustain active feelings over the years.

Friendships and working relationships between Virgo III's and Capricorn I's are usually solid, dependable and responsible. Neither partner is likely to have many illusions about the other as far as either their capabilities or their personality is concerned. Financial dealings are bound to be pretty sharp—although these partners can be generous on a personal level, they will usually expect to be paid what is owed them to the last penny. Should Virgo III's and Capricorn I's work in the same department or as executives concerned with finances, they must beware of a tendency to hold back in their cash outlays, usually out of conservatism or a fear of incurring losses. If the relationship is to book significant commercial successes, its greatest challenge will be to dare to fail sometimes.

ADVICE: Try to stay open and flexible. Taking chances yields greater success. Be diplomatic and seek compromise. Keep the flame of desire aglow.

CAPRICORN II

Having a Good Time

Earthy qualities coalesce in this combination. Not only are both partners pleased with a relationship that lets them agree, for the most part, on practical matters, but also the synergy between them intensifies their sensuous tendencies, resulting in a love of food, comfort and physical pleasure. The pair will be galvanized into action by Capricorn II ambition and will benefit from the practical common sense of Virgo III's. These two generally know how to have fun together—in fact, their relationship may focus on having a good time. Lest the combination sound superficial, it should be pointed out that these partners know how to work as hard as they play.

Love affairs here can be highly sensual, yet each partner's commitment to work may preclude their spending enough quality time together. Even in the most intimate settings, Virgo III's and Capricorn II's have trouble forgetting about worrisome career matters and may be unable to give themselves to each other 100 percent. Their marriages, on the other hand, have a good prognosis for healthy survival. Jealousy and infidelity are rarely a problem here.

As friends and mates, Virgo III's and Capricorn II's may find it opportune to share a career or at the very least to serve each other in an advisory capacity or as helpers. Should they be unacquainted when they first meet as co-workers or associates, they stand a good chance of forming a fast friendship, which will continue after hours. Both of them value the relationship's natural approach, which lets them be themselves without fear of criticism or judgment.

Virgo III parents will usually have more time for their Capricorn II children than Capricorn II parents for Virgo III children. But the latter are independent, will not be overdemanding of their parents and may even appreciate being left on their own a lot of the time.

ADVICE: Try to scale back on your work activities a bit. Beware of going overboard or bingeing. Use your analytic faculties to help maintain moderation.

THE WEEK OF DOMINANCE
CAPRICORN III

Muted but Direct

This relationship works surprisingly easily in many areas of life; the trine relationship between Virgo III and Capricorn III (they lie 120° apart in the zodiac) predicts as much. The emphasis here is on an easy emotional give-and-take. An immediate understanding often emerges between these two, accompanied by a muted but direct sort of communication. Capricorn III's tend to have a secret inferiority complex, but it somehow is not activated in this combination, although they do admire Virgo III intelligence and achievements. Virgo III's, on the other hand, often come to depend on their powerful partner for protection and financial advice. At times their rationality will have problems with the more religious, spiritual or metaphysical interests of Capricorn III's, but it also happens that these qualities prove inspirational to them.

Love affairs in this combination are magnetic and nonthreatening. They can occasionally prove exclusive and even in certain cases physically obsessive, so the partners must beware of a tendency to cut themselves off unduly from society. The undeniable self-sufficiency that manifests here may thus become the relationship's simultaneous strength and weakness. The couple has a tendency to serve others, and should they marry, this trait will be magnified, auguring well for raising children, keeping pets or caring for each other, particularly in advancing years.

Childhood friendships and sibling relationships of the same sex are close and fruitful. The partners are extremely close in their formative years, and when they get older they will have to make an effort to establish separate lives while at the same time keeping their bond intact. Career matchups between these two are most successful in business areas, where Virgo III watchfulness and boundless Capricorn III energy can gel to create the nucleus of an effective group effort. Capricorn III bosses are likely to arouse rebellious instincts in Virgo III employees with whom they interact on a daily basis, and this situation should be avoided.

ADVICE: Preserve equality as much as possible. Stay open to the world. Give unconditionally, without resentment, or not at all. Be patient.

THE CUSP OF MYSTERY & IMAGINATION
 CAPRICORN-AQUARIUS CUSP

Few Deep Conflicts

These two create a naturally energetic combination, but Virgo III's must be careful that the relationship's considerable electricity does not short out their circuits. Although the partners are temperamentally different, they find their relationship highly satisfying and experience few deep conflicts. They may have difficulty dealing with the darker areas of life, however, and during times of trouble they experience stress that can be great enough to be overwhelming. Capricorn-Aquarians tend to rely on their Virgo III partners for stability and common-sense know-how, while Virgo III's are entertained by Capricorn-Aquarian humor and fantasy.

Love affairs here can be challenging and sensual. Capricorn-Aquarians may be a bit baffled by Virgo III coolness and reserve but will be intrigued by the mysterious aspects of this partner's personality. Virgo III's will be flattered by Capricorn-Aquarian attention but put off by a stance that in this combination can be overly aggressive, even violent. Marriages between these two can be highly problematic, since Capricorn-Aquarians may find it difficult to live up to the expectations of Virgo III's or to listen to their continual criticism.

Family relationships in this combination tend to be open and communicative, especially when there is a wide age gap between the pair, eliminating competitiveness and allowing affection and playfulness. Friendships are particularly close when the pair share a common area of endeavor, often in sports, entertainment or media; they are more often observers than participants, but in developing these interests together they may become more actively involved in these areas, whether at an amateur or a professional level. In work relationships, conflicts between the wide-open Capricorn-Aquarius style and Virgo III carefulness can quickly escalate to alarming proportions. The judgmental attitudes of Virgo III's can quickly puncture Capricorn-Aquarians' balloons, arouse their insecurities and dampen their enthusiasm. In the long run, however, the influence of this partner will prove positive (albeit discouraging) for them.

ADVICE: Even your energy has its limits—try to budget it. Pay attention to and use each other's strengths. Keep criticism to a minimum.

Feisty Intractables

Sparks can fly when these two get together. This feisty relationship does not believe in knuckling under to any form of coercion and will stubbornly maintain its integrity at all costs. Virgo III's and Aquarius I's value their individuality highly. As a matter of fact, what binds them together most tightly may be their joint rebelliousness against external authority, which can even become the relationship's focus. Virgo III's have an interesting and undeniable tendency to subordinate themselves to their Aquarius I partner. This is rarely because of power struggles between them but because of the greater need of Aquarius I's to be the center of attention.

Love affairs here can be dynamite—unstable and explosive. Although Virgo is an earth sign and Aquarius air, the Virgo III–Aquarius I relationship is ruled by fire and water, which together suggest the pressure that builds up when this couple's emotions come to the boil. The only predictable element in the relationship may be its unpredictability. Marriages may not necessarily add stability to the matchup or elicit more responsible behavior, but they are important as a social statement and, even more so, as an expression of the partners' belief in the relationship's rightness.

Co-workers in this combination can cause problems for any commercial organization of which they are a part, for they will not hesitate to speak their minds in any situation that they feel involves unfair treatment. Should the matchup find itself at the top of the corporate ladder or engaged in a business partnership, it is likely to be considerate but demanding of those who work under it and will often gain their respect. Sibling pairs here can be extremely rebellious during their teenage years, but the battles they fight can make them mutually loyal; they will have enough on their hands without fighting each other. Although friendships between these two can be close, they may be periodically tested by serious disagreements, which pit Virgo III strong will against Aquarius I rapierlike wit.

ADVICE: Don't give too much energy to feather-ruffling. Find constructive outlets for your energies. Avoid disagreeing just for its own sake.

THE WEEK OF YOUTH & EASE

Made in Heaven?

This seems to be one of those natural combinations, a matchup made in heaven. Yet it is often hard to imagine how two such fiercely independent individuals ever got together in the first place—and sometimes they don't! It's not that Virgo III's and Aquarius II's are really any more independent than any other types in the year, but their relationship certainly brings out this quality in abundance. Capable either of teaming up closely or seeing each other rarely, adopting the same ideology or battling out opposing points of view, being scarily on the same wavelength or totally incommunicado, Virgo III's and Aquarius II's will not bind each other to strict rules or established patterns. Theirs is the kind of relationship in which the partners might not see each other for years and then take up exactly where they left off, virtually in mid-sentence.

Personal relationships in this combination—whether friendships, love affairs or marriages—are not particularly oriented toward emotional expression. Their emphasis is more on thought, wit, intelligence and speech than on anything else. Not that emotion is by any means ruled out, but it is secondary to matters of the mind—although it can in fact be enhanced by them. Whether a relationship is concerned with love or friendship also matters less than what and how it communicates. Virgo III's and Aquarius II's meeting for the first time quite commonly feel closer—or perhaps angrier and more upset with each other—than they have ever felt with anyone in their lives. Past life or karma is inevitably suggested by such meetings, which may also involve feelings of déjà vu.

When two such individuals grow up together as family members, they almost inevitably become involved in sharing the theory or practice of a given area, whether artistic, athletic, scientific or game-oriented. Such "hobbies" often lead to career connections, especially in areas where mental coordination and interaction figure prominently. Should Virgo III's and Aquarius II's meet at work, their job may later be seen as only fate's pretext for bringing them together.

ADVICE: Try being more consistent. Sacrificing some of your freedom may be worth it. Don't be afraid to share feelings. You have the right to ask.

THE WEEK OF ACCEPTANCE
AQUARIUS III

Freedom from Dependency

A curious dynamic emerges here: a need to be supported and nurtured conflicts with an equal need for independence. Overall, however, the relationship's energy is beneficial to both partners. Aquarius III's often derive inspiration and strength from Virgo III's, who will sometimes have preceded them down the road they are traveling; but the benefits they receive from the relationship may become habituating, and their reliance on their partner can become a bad case of overdependency. Somewhat paradoxically, they will be able to turn to Virgo III wisdom to help them in their struggle for autonomy within the relationship. Virgo III's, too, have much to learn here, though their lessons will be more absorbed than struggled over. In their own way, they can be quite rigid, and they could learn something from Aquarius III's about the freedom they might find by accepting things as they are and moving on.

Virgo III patience will be necessary in love affairs if Aquarius III's become starry-eyed over them. Because Virgo III and Aquarius III lie quincunx to each other in the zodiac (150° apart), astrology correctly predicts instability in their relationship. Maintaining a kind of dynamic equilibrium of feeling will be a principal challenge here. In marriages, too, Aquarius III's will need to come into their own as equal partners. The relationship usually gives them the chance to do so.

Siblings and friends in this combination, especially when of the same sex, will have a rough time of it in childhood through their habit of unfavorable mutual comparisons. Angry arguments, including physical confrontations, will not be unusual in these cases and in fact may be expected. As the two mature, however, they grow much closer and can achieve mutual respect as they free themselves from childhood roles. Career connections require sensitivity from both partners if they are to avoid power struggles and promote equality. Since Aquarius III's are prone to seeing Virgo III's as role models, they must beware of falling too much under their influence. As a result, boss-employee relationships are less recommended here than co-worker or colleague matchups.

ADVICE: Stand up for yourself. Inspiration is healthy, domination is not. Avoid unfavorable comparisons like the plague. Promote consideration.

THE CUSP OF SENSITIVITY
AQUARIUS-PISCES CUSP

Shock Treatment

This relationship tends to explore new horizons and fearlessly confront the mores of an organization, family or social group with its own individualistic vision. Its innovations sometimes have to do with ideas, speech or appearance, sometimes with personal ethics or feelings, but in either case the combination often focuses on forcing other people to accept it for what it is. No excuses whatsoever are made here. Criticism and challenge are welcome in the relationship, but the partners must beware of getting overstressed or of living their lives in permanent rebellion against the attitudes of others.

Love affairs between Virgo III's and Aquarius-Pisces can be deep and passionate but also undeniably theatrical. These two often try to shock or upset more conventional souls. Maintaining privacy, quiet and calm will be hard for them; try as they may, they inevitably stand out in the public eye, no matter how small their social or family circle. Friendships here are often difficult for others to understand or penetrate, having a highly personal form of communication that only the partners can fully understand.

Marriages and work pairings between Virgo III's and Aquarius-Pisces are often interwoven. Virgo III good sense and Aquarius-Pisces ambition gel effectively, but a certain ruthless tendency sometimes manifests here, so that the partners must be careful not to arouse the animosity of those around them. They really create their own difficulties, which they could in many cases avoid by being more tactful and kind. By the same token, they could also avoid personal problems by being careful to schedule enough time away from each other. Parent-child combinations are often close but must beware of arousing jealousies through the exclusiveness of the relationship. In the long run, including rather than shutting out other people will be much more expedient in forwarding the family's interests.

ADVICE: Don't go out of your way to shock or provoke. Go about your work quietly. Strive for balance and calm in your personal life.

THE WEEK OF THE LITERALIST
VIRGO III

February 23–March 2

THE WEEK OF SPIRIT
PISCES I

Strikingly Different

The accent here is on giving, and the relationship generally asks for little in return, aside from warmth and affection. These two are as different as night and day, but their matchup is proof of how differences can be transformed through the magic of a relationship. Pisces I energy is as diffuse as it comes while Virgo III's are practical and grounded, yet their combination partakes of both elements and comes up with a result that is strikingly different and above all generous. Their relationship is certainly original but also decidedly service oriented, usually working for a cause, a family or an ideology.

Love affairs in this combination are seldom as successful as friendships are. As lovers Virgo III's and Pisces I's arouse each other's impatience and irritation in proportion to their desire, creating what is often an unbearable situation. They do better as friends, particularly if they have few responsibilities or worries on their hands and have lots of time to hang out together.

Marriages can be successful as long as they draw on every ounce of the relationship's creativity and originality. Virgo III's may be driven crazy by Pisces I financial irresponsibility, and if they are required to be the main breadwinner and/or the watchdog of the finances, they will resent it. Sometimes this matchup does better when living on less, perhaps in the relationship's initial stages. Should the spouses eventually succeed in evolving an unusual way of making money linked to their equally personal lifestyle, their relationship can prove quite happy and fulfilling.

This is seldom a good combination for business, rarely being tough, selfish or aggressive enough to succeed in the hard commercial world. Within a family, however, its capability and nurturing qualities will be appreciated by close and distant relatives alike. As sibling pairs of opposite sexes, Pisces I's and Virgo III's often bond for life, and, even if separated by continents, will still feel each other's spiritual presence.

ADVICE: Be a bit more practical. You deserve to be served also. Demand to be adequately compensated for your work. Work on being more patient.

March 3–10

THE WEEK OF THE LONER
PISCES II

Calculated Gambles

The innate sympathy between these two, combined with their open kind of communication, can lead to the pursuit of challenging goals and far-reaching thoughts and ideas. As a pair, they enjoy exploring areas beyond ordinary limitations and in fact have a tendency to get carried away. Virgo III's will have to exert every ounce of self-control they have to keep the relationship grounded. Highly inspirational, this matchup can overcome substantial odds in its battle against daunting forces.

As lovers, Virgo III's will generally be sensitive to the Pisces II need to spend time alone. They will certainly want attention at some point, having needs of their own, but periodic expressions of love and sympathy from Pisces II's will go a long way toward satisfying them. In marriage, the relationship may encounter a chronic health problem in one of the spouses, which will demand extreme loyalty, patience and understanding from the other. Should this difficulty be overcome, it will often deepen and broaden the bond.

At work, ordinary desk or factory jobs are seldom what this relationship has in mind. These two demand challenge, and in daring to fail they may achieve high goals that few others could reach. Their particular forte is taking calculated risks, but knowing where to stop will be important, since they are sometimes tempted to gamble everything they have earned on a single throw of the dice. In the family, relatives in this combination usually seek each other out, regardless of age difference, and may embark on exciting financial, educational or spiritual endeavors together. Friends in this combination like adventure and are likely to travel together to distant lands or to seek out somewhat dangerous activities that spur them to give their all.

ADVICE: Keep something in reserve. Try to act more prudently. Moderation is not a dirty word. Don't always choose the most difficult path.

March 11–18

THE WEEK OF DANCERS & DREAMERS
PISCES III

Megalomania

This combination tends not to bother itself with anything but epic projects. The problem is that it is usually completely unprepared for activities of such scale and would do much better cutting back on its goals. Virgo III and Pisces III lie directly opposite each other in the zodiac, and this polarity often energizes their relationship and pushes it to go beyond reasonable limits. Although Virgo is an earth sign and Pisces water, the Virgo III–Pisces III matchup is ruled by fire, here emphasizing the danger of getting swept up by inflammatory desires.

In love affairs and friendships, feelings may go far beyond realistic boundaries. The partners have a penchant for thinking that their relationship is the best, the most romantic, the most sensual, etc. Learning to be a bit more realistic about what they have may be impossible for them, and in fact they may only learn how far off their perceptions were through hindsight. It is not so much the relationship itself that is lacking here than an objective assessment of it.

Particularly when Pisces III's are cast in the parental role, parent-child relationships in this combination must fight a tendency for the child to be exploited by having to act out the parent's hidden ambitions. Grandparent-grandchild matchups are likely to err just as strongly in this direction; spoiling grandchildren may give them very unrealistic ideas about themselves, setting up for a very rude awakening.

Thinking big and fantasizing about wealth and power can severely cripple working relationships in this combination. These matchups would do much better to try small steps first, establishing a firm career base before taking off for the moon. Although Virgo III's and Pisces III's may find mundane jobs quite boring, hanging in there promotes psychological stability. In the long run, modest positions can contribute more to the relationship's self-esteem than more ambitious ones. In marriage, too, dwellings are best kept small-scale and manageable.

ADVICE: Take one step at a time. Get control of your fantasy life. Remember that having a thought is in itself a powerful and influential act.

THE CUSP OF BEAUTY
VIRGO-LIBRA CUSP

September 19–24

THE CUSP OF BEAUTY
VIRGO-LIBRA CUSP

Skin Deep

The ideal relationship for two Virgo-Libras is a platonic one in which they are able to appreciate art, or the beauty of the natural world, without passion or possessiveness getting in the way. A cool objectivity or detachment is likely to characterize this relationship, which can achieve an almost perfect balance, given the absence of messier human concerns. Although such a duo can be enormously popular within their own social and family circles, they are not really interested in compromise—in a lowering of standards or sacrifice of ideals—in order to widen their sphere of influence. Actually, these individuals see no contradiction between commercial success and artistic integrity, so sure are they of the quality of their work. Should it be appreciated, fine; if not, so be it.

Nonetheless, setting trends, or at the very least recognizing them, seems to be the fate of this couple. Thus two Virgo-Libras can be of great use to an organization as independent consultants or as permanent members of an executive team. It is not only that they have their fingers on the public pulse; they know how to make that pulse rate quicken or slow at will. In this regard, however, one might say that they act more like experimental psychologists, testing their themes in the antiseptic environment of the lab, than like therapists who interact with clients on a one-to-one basis—their understanding of human nature is not that great.

Love relationships between two Virgo-Libras can stretch narcissism to its limit. Each partner tends to be a mirror for the other—preening, making up, putting on the best face possible. True empathy and depth of feeling are not given top priority. In marital relationships, full emphasis is given to social considerations, which does not exclude putting on a show for the neighbors. Such matchups must beware of passing along false or superficial values to their progeny. Friendships and family relationships between two Virgo-Libras may show a marked aversion to darker feelings, which are frequently repressed. Escaping problems through drugs is a Virgo-Libra tendency that can, unfortunately, be synergized by this relationship.

ADVICE: Pay more attention to human feelings. Don't be so concerned about what others think. Find deeper meaning in your life. Beauty may be only skin deep.

THE WEEK OF THE PERFECTIONIST
LIBRA I

Melting Hardened Hearts

This relationship can be a highly enjoyable one, in which an unassuming attitude and natural behavior figure prominently. The Virgo-Libra-Libra I combination also fosters trust and understanding, allowing the partners to lower their guards significantly. Playfulness is a frequent attribute here—one especially appreciated by intense Libra I's, who often find it hard to relax. Thus the relationship is likely to have a child-like aspect, an aura of innocence that is likely to melt the more hardened hearts that the partners encounter on life's path—including their own. The biggest problem for this duo is their own naïveté, which may leave them vulnerable to victimization.

Love affairs between Virgo-Libras and Libra I's are often preoccupied with the pursuit of fun, in private and in public. Carefree and social to the extreme, these two are ill prepared for serious problems when they do arise; barring catastrophe, however, they are likely to proceed undeterred. The relationship is less well suited to marriage, where the lack of insight on the part of Virgo-Libras, combined with the tendency of Libra I's to worry, may create a perilous situation.

Friendships and working relationships between these two can be interrelated, with co-workers developing friendships on the job or friends deciding to go into business together. One of the real strengths of such relationships is the partners' ability to give each other sound advice; that both critical Libra I's and tasteful Virgo-Libras are able to take such advice is a tribute to the relationship's openness. Both are difficult to please, and their working relationship is a demanding one, with excellence the goal. In the family sphere, parent-child combinations are generally oriented toward more youthful values. Childhood games, holiday trips and other forms of recreation and amusement are likely to have a salutary effect on the relationship by drawing parents and children close together through the bond of mutual enjoyment.

ADVICE: Be trusting, but not completely so. Try to be a bit more realistic. Growing up need not mean leaving amusements behind.

THE WEEK OF SOCIETY
LIBRA II

Little Rest

The determination of both Virgo-Libras and Libra II's to be always at their best is magnified by their relationship, which therefore grants them little rest. Being thoroughly up-to-date on the latest issues and trends is important to these two. Newspapers, magazines, television, the Internet—all are used to feed their incessant hunger for new information. Not only quantity is important here, but quality as well; indeed, the focus of the Virgo-Libra–Libra II relationship may be a relentless search for the perfect style, the perfect house—in short, the ideal situation. Learning patience and becoming attuned to kairos (the right time to attempt something) will be important here. One danger of the relationship is an undeniably elitist attitude that can arouse the antagonism and envy of others if not held in check.

Libra II's value their privacy highly and need to insist on being left completely alone from time to time, which can irritate their less understanding Virgo-Libra lovers and friends. Love affairs between these two are usually more affectionate than erotic, but there is often a corresponding lack of tension and annoyance as well. Cooking, shopping and decorating are special interests for the couple, whether they live together or not. Success in these and other domestic activities augurs well for marriages or permanent living situations. Since Libra II's and Virgo-Libras are not particularly self-aware, their relationship may at times be plagued by unaccountable depressions that can cause anxiety and bewilderment.

Should Virgo-Libras and Libra II's work together, they will do best if self-employed or involved in small-business partnerships, where responsibilities are lighter and there is greater freedom of choice. Virgo-Libras are generally quite astute in assessing the capabilities of their Libra II partners and putting them to best use. Sibling matchups of the opposite sex are mildly antagonistic, but such pairs are usually able to work out their difficulties within the context of shared social involvements. Jealous rivalries over a favorite parent or friend are common here—a tendency that should be watched.

ADVICE: Be aware of your effect on others. Do not exhaust yourself in pursuit of the latest trend. Seek traditional values.

THE WEEK OF THEATER
LIBRA III

Solar Flares

Virgo-Libras and Libra III's are stars in the same firmament. Although the relationship is oriented outward, and is at times quite extroverted, it derives its power and energy from a very deep place indeed: each partner's need to find the perfect outer representation of his or her own inner vision and to make it shine. Equality between the partners in such relationships is essential, but it is more often Libra III's who are the more exciting. Not infrequently, Libra III's spur Virgo-Libras to outstrip themselves—to strive for the very best of which they are capable. The most common scenario here is that these two individuals spend a certain amount of time together and then go their separate ways, each enriched by their contact with the other. Thus the relationship may be fleeting, or it may last for a number of years, but in either case it must be phased out once it has outlived its usefulness.

Love affairs and marriages can be profound but rarely last long. The contact is often viewed, in retrospect, as having been necessary and valuable to both individuals' personal development. Friendships and sibling relationships can be mutually supportive and stabilizing. Although competition inevitably arises, especially between partners of the same sex, such activities have a toughening effect and rarely result in serious animosities. Virgo-Libras and Libra III's both need to be in the spotlight a good deal of the time, but eventually will have to seek their own arena in which to perform, which usually means terminating, or at least severely limiting, their relationship.

Work or career connections, no matter how brief, generally allow for an unusually high degree of inspiration and collaboration. Rarely will either partner hold back from giving the other the best he or she has to offer professionally. In all of the above relationships, friends and family alike will marvel at the partners' abilities to exchange spiritual and creative gifts with one another, considering how much attention they both require. There is an apparently innate understanding that whatever benefits one benefits both.

ADVICE: Don't exploit each other unduly. Develop your caring side—sharing is not enough. Express your emotions. Keep things simple.

A Curious Split

This relationship may experience a curious split between its social and its personal aspects. Combining Virgo-Libra taste and Libra-Scorpio I initiative, it is extremely interested in both aesthetic and group affairs—possession, of either objects or people, is not an unusual theme here. These two may vie with each other for dominance of social groups. Both are willing to go to the ends of the earth to find collectibles of good value, or simply to have a one-time glimpse of an exquisite art object. Such love of beauty may belie the tremendous psychological problems that can mar this relationship. Certain dark tendencies, carefully hidden from the view of concerned friends and family members, may reach obsessive or even addictive proportions. Too often, Virgo-Libras and Libra-Scorpios are unaware of the subtle connections among their love of beauty, desire for social position, and negative thoughts about themselves.

Love affairs and marriages between these two may be controlled by dark forces beyond their ken. Erotic rather than affectionate impulses predominate here, and the partners may be tightly bound to each other not only by passion but by desperation and fear. All of this may go on behind a brilliant social facade. Unless one partner has marked analytic skills, it is unlikely that the relationship will furnish an environment in which self-understanding can flourish.

Friendships, family relationships and career connections are likely to overlap. These two know a great deal about the world, particularly the latest styles and fashions. If involved with the arts, architecture, fashion, music or design, then, they are likely to be highly successful. In all the foregoing areas, the Virgo-Libra-Libra-Scorpio relationship would do well to spend even a fraction of the energy it devotes to outside concerns on its own internal problems. Building self-confidence, accompanied by a thorough psychological housecleaning in which old scripts and tapes are swept out the door, is most important here.

ADVICE: Put your house in order, and illuminate dark corners. What attracts you may reflect negatively on yourself. Move forward with self-confidence.

THE WEEK OF INTENSITY
SCORPIO I

A Contentious Dynamic

This combination is likely to be an unsettled and suspicious one, but also one in which a persistently contentious dynamic forwards the action on life's stage. Thus the relationship is characterized by impulse and aggression. Things will not go well between these two if Scorpio I's feel that Virgo-Libras, as arbiters of taste, are treating them in a condescending way. They may easily see Virgo-Libras as snobs, and the Virgo-Libra approach as elitist. Feeling personally attacked on such a level will only cause the partners to take countermeasures.

No matter how gratifying a love affair here might be in the sensual sphere, Virgo-Libras may eventually give up on this partner if they feel they have been made the objects of unrelenting scrutiny or criticism. Nor will they enjoy periodic blowups with their Scorpio I lovers, which tend to knock them off balance. Marriages, too, are unlikely to click here, principally because Virgo-Libra social tastes may be irreconcilable with Scorpio I wishes in this area. Most often a Virgo-Libra will make friends out of people who are likely to enhance their social and career opportunities. This will be unbearable to Scorpio I's, who keep their few friends for highly personal reasons, often involving trust and honor.

Career connections are often of the more ambitious sort. Neither will shy away from using the other's talents to advance his or her own purpose, but when push comes to shove, real appreciation and loyalty may be sadly lacking. Most upsetting will be the justifications they may give for breaking off their connection, which purport to be ethical but in fact ring hollow. Ambition will also play an important role between parents and children. Both partners are likely to push each other at various points to further their careers, supposedly for the benefit of the group. Attempts to engage in a family business can be emotionally catastrophic, and should be avoided unless strict objectivity can be maintained.

ADVICE: Keep things a bit lighter. A deep involvement may not be a good idea. Beware of making promises you can't keep. Tone down your morality.

THE WEEK OF DEPTH
SCORPIO II

Boisterous Variety

This pair can enjoy a variety of social activities together, often complementing each other and filling in the gaps. Of particular note is their sense of humor, which is often boisterous. The satire and parody exhibited here are not directed solely against other people, however; the partners' ability to laugh at themselves is a prime indicator of their compatibility.

These two would seem to be diametrically opposite in orientation—Virgo-Libras are more concerned with social matters and externals, Scorpio II's with personal issues and their complex inner lives. Yet the extroverted side of Scorpio II's is revealed here, especially in the sphere of friendship; being able to indulge in theatrical displays without risk of disapproval can be a liberating experience for them. Furthermore, the deep concentration of which Scorpio II's are capable is an excellent tool for directing Virgo-Libra attention to the matters at hand.

In love affairs, Scorpio II's may be a bit too much for their partner in this combination to handle. Their moods can be oppressive, leaving Virgo-Libras feeling helpless and overwhelmed. Virgo-Libras who like to keep it light may back away when they get their first glimpse of the subterranean levels to which Scorpio II's can descend. Marriages between these two can thrive on social interaction, which often helps to brighten the darker side of the relationship.

Virgo-Libra parents admire the energy of their Scorpio II children but may be hard put to keep up with them. Should Scorpio II's be cast in the parental role, they will generally enjoy sharing light, entertaining activities with their amicable Virgo-Libra offspring, on whom they can exert an overwhelming influence. Their children of the opposite sex particularly may be influenced by them in choosing friends or partners later in life. At work, Virgo-Libras and Scorpio II's had best avoid fixed situations. If they pursue any career at all together, it should only be one that allows them flexibility and mutual independence.

ADVICE: Be aware of your influence on each other; bring energies into balance. Laughter is the best medicine, but be serious when it really counts.

SCORPIO III

Going for the Goodies

The hunger for beauty in all its forms that these individuals share is transmuted by the chemistry of their relationship into a bid for all the material, and immaterial, rewards that money and influence can bring. This is an extremely dangerous combination, since its partners' combined will to power is potentially strong enough to demand that they sacrifice affection, love, kindness—practically all the fundamental human values—to their ambition. Their relative positions in the relationship are usually fixed, and they are not particularly susceptible to internal power struggles—the overriding focus here is outside conquest.

Love affairs, friendships and sibling matchups between these two are likely to manifest strong competitive urges, which can best be kept positive if sublimated into healthy physical interaction or game-playing. Should such impulses turn negative, however, they may cause untold harm, not only to the partners themselves but to the social and family units of which they are a part. Marriages are often defined by a desire for upward social mobility. If this impetus can be controlled and better directed, however, these relationships have an excellent chance for success in the sphere of personal development.

In work and family settings, power is often transferred from one generation to the next. Great sacrifices can be required in such groups; ironically, although luxury and ease may seem to be the ultimate goals, the demands of hard work and a Spartan lifestyle leave little time or energy for enjoying the fruits of their labors—the means become ends in themselves. Cultivating a balance between business and pleasure is important here, since the Virgo-Libra-Scorpio III relationship is capable of going to the opposite extreme, and of periodically giving itself over to the fanatical pursuit of pleasure—a work-hard, play-hard ethic that ultimately leads to both psychological and physical problems.

ADVICE: Find a balance between work and play; know when to quit. Enjoy the fruits of your labors. Share with others outside your group.

What Never Was—Could Never Be

This highly exciting matchup has a tremendous capacity for initiating and maintaining projects. But critical tendencies are also abundant here, with each partner censuring the other for the very strengths he or she brings to the relationship. This judgment is viewed as unfair, of course, and is met with opposition. A potential instability is mitigated by the presence in this relationship of all four elements—earth (Virgo), air (Libra), fire (Sagittarius) and water (Scorpio). Although activity here is often at fever pitch, the energy of the matchup is rarely wasted, and is ultimately used constructively.

Sensuality manifests in this relationship toward food, sex and in particular art. Love affairs and marriages are often marked by frustration: since neither partner can be happy with what they have, things rarely seem quite right. It is not so much finicky attitudes (although these certainly do exist) as a vague dissatisfaction, involving unfavorable comparisons to past or idealized loves, that keep them apart. Paradoxically, they readily share in their appreciation of art and the pleasures of the table. The relationship may eventually become a platonic one, its partners de facto friends and companions rather than lovers and mates.

Friendships are perhaps the most balanced of the Virgo-Libra–Scorpio-Sagittarius relationships. There are many areas here that afford mutual enjoyment and development, free of attendant emotional problems. Such a relationship can become central to the lives of both partners for years, and intense feelings of loss may be experienced by either individual on the departure or death of the other.

Work relationships between married couples or friends are suggested here, especially in publishing, television and other areas of mass communication. The relationship does run the danger of becoming elitist and snobbish, however, which can alienate other people. Family matchups, particularly those of parent and child, also reiterate a theme of incompleteness or regret, as if both partners were separated at times by an impassable barrier.

ADVICE: Examine what's holding you back. Try to abandon impossible ideals. Let go of the past—appreciate what you have in the present.

Building Brick by Brick

This pair may be found designing, decorating or even building physical structures, which themselves lend shape to the family, social or professional groups that occupy the partners. The relationship allows for the merger of Virgo-Libra taste and Sagittarius I initiative, and its strength lies in its capacity for giving material form to its beliefs—a bit of the empire builder characterizes the matchup. Although neither of its partners is especially patient, it confers the stamina and the ability to build something slowly, brick by brick. Moreover, it is highly symbiotic: its partners are undeniably dependent upon each other. Rarely will either partner advance his or her own interests at the other's expense, for both instinctively realize that what's best for the relationship is best for the individual.

Sagittarius I's will enjoy this relationship because it grants them a solid foundation for their lives without compromising their conspicuous need to be free; Virgo-Libras will appreciate having the relationship's considerable energies to draw on to institute their artistic and technical vision. In love affairs and marriages, despite an orientation toward security, neither partner feels particularly bound by conventional notions of fidelity. Without compromising their loyalty to each other, Virgo-Libras and Sagittarius I's often feel free to carry on full-blown love affairs with other people. This can strain the relationship socially, but family and friends soon realize that these two can, for the most, part handle such tricky situations in a mature way. The real difficulty arises only when one partner feels relegated to second-best, or feels a negative shift in the relationship's energy. Virgo-Libra–Sagittarius I mates, family members and friends can work together as business partners or in allied professional fields. Their plans are often far-reaching, for the relationship is rarely satisfied with only moderate success: Virgo-Libras and Sagittarius I's will always aim for the top. Learning to have more realistic expectations—to be content with having reached a respectable level of success, and to have a gritty determination to stay there—is an important lesson for this pair.

ADVICE: Don't ignore conventional wisdom. Cultivate humility. Curb your ambition—learn to be satisfied with what you have.

THE WEEK OF THE ORIGINATOR
SAGITTARIUS II

Beauty and the Beast

This relationship is usually a very straightforward one, emphasizing intensity of emotion and an appreciation of beauty—passions run high here. At its simplest the combination is about the Sagittarius II being attracted to and inspired by Virgo-Libra beauty and charm, engendering a desire to become involved with the Virgo-Libra in mutually rewarding or pleasurable activities. Sagittarius II's usually take the initiative here, but Virgo-Libras are just as often attracted to Sagittarius II's for their innovative thinking and vision. Not infrequently, career and personal involvements are interconnected with these two, making it difficult for professional relations to be maintained after the breakup of a friendship, love affair or marriage. Thus it is usually best if a choice is made at the outset as to whether the relationship should concentrate on personal issues or career matters; it should not deal with both.

Love affairs between these two sometimes experience a split between Virgo-Libra physical beauty and Sagittarius II intellectual strength, but this division will also bring the partners together—it is the classic attraction of beauty to brains and brains to beauty. Should the age difference between them be extreme, the couple will have to develop a sense of humor if they are to cope with other people's snide comments about "beauty and the beast" or "age before beauty." Marriages may suffer from an implied power structure based on whose prime attributes—beauty, age or intelligence, for example—are valued more by society. Maintaining equality while at the same time acknowledging differences will be the principal challenge here.

Teacher-student relationships, usually with Sagittarius II's in the dominant role, may involve the process of discovering Virgo-Libra talents and abilities for the first time. Tremendously flattered by such attention, Virgo-Libras may respond either by working harder or, conversely, by taking it easy, secure in their ability to manipulate their admiring instructor at will. Parent-child and boss-employee relationships in this combination may follow a similar pattern.

ADVICE: Separate work and play. Be aware of critics, but stick to your guns. What happens between two adults is ultimately their own business.

Finding Out for Themselves

The great mutual respect that is common in this relationship promotes easy interaction on a daily basis, and precludes feelings of condescension and struggles for power. The Virgo-Libra-Sagittarius III matchup, whether it is a solid family bond, a friendship or a sensual love affair or marriage, has a strongly physical quality. Virgo-Libras rarely mind playing a secondary role here; usually being able to enchant Sagittarius III's, they seldom have trouble getting their own way. Virgo-Libras and Sagittarius III's are often able to learn a great deal from each other but can learn even more from the relationship itself.

Love affairs are usually quite romantic and feature a kind of adoration. Each partner has a lasting idealized image of the other that generally goes far beyond mere physical appearance. Marriages can be successful as long as Virgo-Libras do not require too much attention from their hard-working Sagittarius III mates and Sagittarius III's do not impose their heavy moods on Virgo-Libra spouses.

Friendships and sibling matchups emphasize mutual growth and development, but at various stages Sagittarius III's may need to push a little bit to get things going. Virgo-Libras won't resent such encouragement now and then but will want to feel included in the making and implementation of decisions. Such matchups often rebel against parents and teachers who wax didactic, not from a particular dislike of authority, but rather because this duo would rather find things out for themselves.

Work relationships between these two can be outstanding. Sagittarius III vision and Virgo-Libra taste meld exquisitely and give the stamp of success to many of their endeavors. But financial matters will require expert advice from an accountant or business manager—this combination is not the most astute when it comes to money.

ADVICE: Don't close your ears to other people's advice, or make unreasonable demands on yourself—when you need help, ask for it. Allow for mistakes.

In Over Their Heads?

Powerful and magnetic, this relationship is also apt to be highly contentious. Strongly unconventional and asocial tendencies may be aroused here, underlined by the couple's striking need for privacy and penchant for secrecy. The Virgo-Libra cusp coincides with the fall equinox and the Sagittarius-Capricorn cusp with the winter solstice, two of the four power points of the year. Lying square to each other in the zodiac (90° apart), Virgo-Libra and Sagittarius-Capricorn produce strongly contrasting personalities for whom astrology would predict friction and difficulty. Becoming involved with someone as spirited as themselves may prove irresistible to this pair, however. Once the two are involved, they may both end up feeling that some dark force or fate has them in its grip.

Virgo-Libras will often be confronted by a projection of their own dark side in love affairs and marriages in this combination. Sagittarius-Capricorns may function as animus or anima figures for Virgo-Libras, becoming the irresistible object of their secret desires. Falling in love here can have grave repercussions for both partners, who may be getting in way over their heads—caught up in a maelstrom of feelings, they can be drawn to levels of emotion deeper than any they have yet approached. Siblings in this combination can be extremely close, with the older sibling often serving as a parent substitute or role model in adolescence or young adulthood. Virgo-Libra-Sagittarius-Capricorn friendships may also fulfill a need insofar as they compensate for the absence of satisfactory family relationships. Such matchups can be extremely close, but possessiveness, overdependency and inhibition of personal development in the name of loyalty to the relationship must all be carefully monitored.

Ideas and ideals are extremely important to Virgo-Libras and Sagittarius-Capricorns in their professional relationship. As members of a business or social organization they are likely to have the best interest of others at heart, and to be untiring in their capacity to give of themselves. Often champions of the dispossessed or downtrodden, they will fight the good fight together to guarantee fair treatment for all concerned.

ADVICE: Keep an eye on yourself, and on your own best interests—don't be swept away. Remember to give each other room to breathe.

CAPRICORN I

A Search for Meaning

Natural feelings and attitudes predominate in this free and easy relationship. In many ways liberating, the Virgo-Libra-Capricorn I matchup can powerfully influence both partners in their search for meaning in life, and also in their self-development. Thus Virgo-Libras learn a great deal from their Capricorn I partners, who, in turn, benefit tremendously from the aesthetic influences of Virgo-Libras, which can open up whole new worlds for them.

Romance is possible between these two; it will seldom be of the wilder sort, yet it will be more uninhibited than either partner is used to. Capricorn I's will be enchanted by their Virgo-Libra partners but, unfortunately, will also regard them as possessions. Virgo-Libras can only be flattered to a point, and will back off if they feel claimed or controlled. In marriage, they benefit from Capricorn I practicality and common sense. They will not be dissatisfied with playing a supporting role, but must beware that their own personalities are not swallowed up by the relationship.

As friends, these two enjoy taking courses together that lead to mutual self-improvement, whether commercial, physical or artistic. A common hobby often emerges that unites the pair and becomes the basis of the relationship. Virgo-Libras should not be surprised at Capricorn I thriftiness but should edge the relationship away from a stingy attitude that can limit its possibilities and inhibit creativity.

Parent-child relationships can be extremely favorable, with both partners sharing, learning and growing together. Artistic and spiritual bonds may be formed here that continue into adult life. In the work sphere, Capricorn I's tend to think they are omniscient, a trait that, if encountered on a daily basis, will grate on the nerves of Virgo-Libras. These two relate best as independent colleagues or freelancers who touch base occasionally to share their thoughts and observations.

ADVICE: Learn from each other, but maintain your independence—beware of claiming attitudes. Cultivate artistic and spiritual pursuits.

CAPRICORN II

Fateful Resolution

Constructive outlets must be found for the emotional and often physical intensity of this relationship. The partners are magnetically, even fatally, attracted to each other, but the interactions that result are not necessarily pleasant. An undeniably antagonistic or violent energy pervades the relationship. The partners are better off not making excuses for this, since they will usually need direct confrontation to resolve any conflict. Should such confrontations be avoided, the relationship is likely to suffer from frustration and to stagnate and remain unfulfilled.

Love affairs exhibit a great deal of sensuality and mutual attraction; the emphasis here is on a deeply satisfying physical and emotional involvement. Sexual striving might seem to indicate conflict but, in fact, leads primarily to greater pleasure. Marriages should aim for harmony and stability, or perhaps should not be initiated in the first place, since the outcome of marital disputes and eventual breakups here is not a pretty one. Should mates become adversaries, the situation is likely to turn into all-out warfare as the partners struggle to settle disputes over possessions, money and children.

Friendships and sibling relationships in this combination may be either amicable or adversarial, or may fluctuate between the two. Ambivalence and ambiguity will sometimes cloud the real nature of the relationship, since love and hate are so closely intertwined here. Often, many years will pass before the true meaning and focus of this relationship are revealed to its partners. Professional matchups between these two best exemplify these observations. Realistic in the extreme, both partners know exactly where they stand in the relationship; in fact, for either of them even momentarily to abandon realism for sentimentality could prove a fatal mistake. Although adversarial roles often manifest here, the dance in which this couple indulges is so well synchronized that opponents appear, even in battle, to be harmoniously linked. A lack of underhanded behavior indicates the willingness of both partners to abide by the rules and to eschew personal gain in favor of fair play.

ADVICE: Limit confrontations if possible, but do not avoid them—resolve your difficulties. Accentuate the positive.

CAPRICORN III

Thick and Thin

This energetic relationship is capable of getting new projects on the rails and of enhancing communication within the groups to which it belongs. Capricorn III admiration for Virgo-Libra physical attractiveness is only thinly disguised here, and Virgo-Libras may learn a great deal about forcefulness, self-confidence and willpower from Capricorn III's. Such qualities complement each other well in a relationship focused on establishing and maintaining its position through thick and thin.

Subtle conflicts may arise in love affairs and marriages between these two, since Capricorn III's are anxious to control and even deny their physical needs and Virgo-Libras are all too willing to indulge them. One problem is that Capricorn III's are by nature pleasure-loving, yet are intent on withstanding their hedonistic impulses; as such, they can be very susceptible to Virgo-Libra influence, which they may later regret. Thus Capricorn III's are likely to resent the temptations this relationship places in their paths, and Virgo-Libras to wind up feeling frustrated when blamed or excluded.

Parent-child relationships in both possible arrangements are characterized by a mutual admiration that can at times approach worship. Difficulties must be expected during adolescence, when painful separations may prove necessary to enhance individuality. Once the partners have spent enough time apart, they may reunite, having achieved a new level of trust and respect. Virgo-Libra-Capricorn III friendships usually interest themselves in a wide variety of activities, and dislike getting stuck in one particular area of endeavor. This relationship must beware of nervousness and overexcitement resulting from spreading itself too thin.

In career matchups, these two will work themselves into a solid position but will often be content to stay there rather than going for the top. Thus Virgo-Libras and Capricorn III's make excellent co-workers within a department of a large corporation, where over the years they may continue to impress others with both the quality of their work and their facility for promoting cooperation.

ADVICE: Take things as they come. Don't be too adoring. Give each other enough space—separation may be necessary at times.

Reactive Rebellion

This relationship is a strange blend of accord and dissension. Although a trine aspect here augurs well for an easygoing relationship (Virgo-Libra and Capricorn-Aquarius lie 120° apart in the zodiac), this only tells part of the story. At ease with each other one moment, these two can suddenly explode, in a spontaneous eruption that leaves others breathless in its wake. Like so many cusp combinations, this one contains elements that are singularly unpredictable. Should either partner attempt an overt power play, the result will surely be a full-scale revolution. Indeed, rebelliousness can be the focus of such a relationship, especially in family and work settings.

Although Virgo-Libra and Capricorn-Aquarius are both earth-air combinations, their relationship is ruled by water and fire and may all too quickly boil over. In marriages and love affairs, the rule is often excitement and sensuality but, equally, psychological and emotional instability—something neither of these individuals is temperamentally equipped to handle. Virgo-Libras, attracted to their mate's imaginativeness, may keep their cool for long periods, but if Capricorn-Aquarians push them too far they can spring into attack mode.

Friendships between these two, particularly in their school years, will be unlikely to allow perceived insults by teachers or fellow students to pass without challenge. Both may acquire reputations as spoilers or trouble-makers, when in fact they are simply refusing to be pushed around. Parent-child and boss-employee relationships are often fiery, especially when Capricorn-Aquarians are in the dominant position. These personalities have an authoritarian streak; they can give effective direction to the family or work group but can also sometimes needle good-natured and peace-loving Virgo-Libras, even ridiculing them publicly on occasion. All this Virgo-Libras can bear good-naturedly, until Capricorn-Aquarians pick on weaker colleagues or family members and finally arouse Virgo-Libra opposition. Such confrontations may actually be necessary for reinforcing the self-esteem and confidence of Virgo-Libras, particularly if they are able to triumph over their formidable adversaries.

ADVICE: Keep your cool, but don't let others manipulate you. Maintain self-respect while giving others their due. Be consistent.

THE WEEK OF GENIUS
AQUARIUS I

Intricate Workings

The focus here is to be found in the intricate and labyrinthine workings of the human mind. Not at all easy to figure out, even for the partners themselves, the combination is a devious one, and rarely follows the straight and narrow path. This couple tends to be arrogant, and to assume that they are a law unto themselves. Stressing freedom for themselves, they sometimes apply a double standard, demanding that others toe the line. This relationship suggests the classic pairing of beauty and brains, and to get others to do its bidding, it often makes use of both an attractive exterior and clever arguments. Not surprisingly, honesty is not a strong suit here.

Serious power struggles emerge in love affairs and marriages, especially if one partner feels trapped or oppressed by the other, but by no means are these interactions predicated on such a scenario. Usually one of the partners likes to come out on top, at least from the standpoint of providing direction or giving orders. Mind games are likely to be used in surprising variety, again indicating the degree to which each partner will manipulate the other to get his or her own way.

Friendships are unlikely to be very intimate or deep between Virgo-Libras and Aquarius I's and usually occur only when shared work or property is at stake. For the most part, individual interests undercut the possibility for sharing in such a relationship. Siblings in this combination are likely to defend their own interests aggressively. Indeed, the family unit of which they are a part may founder in a sea of dissension unless they recognize the extent to which they are weakening it.

Career connections between these two can be highly effective, even brilliant, but also a tad ruthless or dishonest. The reckless drive to succeed is a sign not only of ambition but of how little this couple may be aware of the feelings of others. This pair will dream up complex plans to further their own interests, then will efficiently put these plans into effect.

ADVICE: Take feelings into account. Beware of ruthless tendencies. Power is less important than love. Double standards arouse resentments.

THE WEEK OF YOUTH & EASE
AQUARIUS II

The Gift of Laughter

This relationship carries with it the gift of laughter. The pair will enjoy having a good time as much as any other matchup in the year and will not care a bit whether they are having it at someone else's expense. Independence of thought and action features strongly here, and as a unit these two can be guided unerringly to lock onto a target and fire at will. Having humor as its focus could open the relationship to charges of superficiality, were it not for the fact that its barbs sting and, in doing so, wake people up and make them think. Often hiding a more serious message behind a ribald or outrageous facade, this duo can succeed where parents, teachers and philosophers may fail.

In love affairs and marriages, this couple, who can be outrageously funny around others, may suffer from depression when alone. In fact, there is a fair amount of hopelessness or despair at the center of the relationship, thinly disguised as sarcasm and dark jokes. The source of this unhappiness usually has to do with a certain soullessness or lack of true intimacy, which the partners feel as a vague dissatisfaction, since neither of them usually has the psychological insight needed to pinpoint what is wrong. Private confrontations between these two can be anything but funny and, in fact, may be excruciatingly painful, since resolutions are unlikely.

Friendships of this type are unambiguously, unashamedly and unconditionally dedicated to having fun. Some sensitivity will have to be shown to the feelings of others if this matchup is not to become something from which others instinctively turn away in fear or disgust. In the family sphere and at work, Virgo-Libras and Aquarius II's can be counted on to lighten the mood. Should they be attacked or reproved for their irreverence, however, they are quite capable of launching scathing attacks that may send their critics running for shelter. One such incident is usually enough to teach others to avoid this pair's wrath as they would a swarm of bees.

ADVICE: In making jokes at someone else's expense, you may be harming yourself. Try to react less violently; be more diplomatic. Work on intimacy.

THE WEEK OF ACCEPTANCE
AQUARIUS III

A Psychic Link

The reason for the success of this relationship can often be traced to the very personal kind of communication that exists between the two partners. Because this communication rarely takes the form of a system of thought or an actual language, it will be difficult to let others in on the process. This unknown tongue may lead to misunderstandings with those outside the relationship, and even to envy and resentment. Defining this pair's channel of communication is not easy, but the elements involved are openness, respect, acceptance and understanding, in addition to a special psychic or intuitive link.

In love affairs, both partners will derive pleasure from not having to work to explain themselves, something neither likes doing. Very much tuned in to each other's wishes, Virgo-Libras and Aquarius III's will immediately know how to please each other—but of course won't always choose to do so. Thus in arguments they are more apt to charge each other with willful neglect rather than offer the excuse that either one of them is simply unaware.

Marriages and working relationships between Virgo-Libras and Aquarius III's are, for the most part, solid. These matchups thrive on having an interest to protect, be it financial, domestic or perhaps even their own reputations. The partners will rarely forsake their best interests or sell them to the highest bidder, knowing instinctively that giving up such permanence would subject the relationship to tidal drift and, eventually, to breakup. Friendships can be extremely close, but also somewhat unstable. A nervous quality pervades this matchup, as does a tendency to blow with the latest wind, which leads to occasional acts of selfishness and inconsiderateness.

In the family sphere, the open channels of communication within a parent-child pair in this combination can be a blessing to the family unit of which it is a part but also a thorn in the side of family members who feel excluded from it. Including others whenever possible will be in the best interest of all concerned.

ADVICE: Hold on to what you've got, but don't shut others out. Beware of selfishness. Acting in a superior fashion arouses resentment.

THE CUSP OF SENSITIVITY
AQUARIUS-PISCES CUSP

Singular Vision

This matchup is a highly unusual and not necessarily stable one. In fact, the partners may have to work consciously toward being more grounded and practical in their outlook and actions if they are to preserve their relationship. There is a tendency here for instability to increase in proportion to idiosyncrasy. These two share visionary ideas with each other; it is a relationship more dreamlike than either individual is accustomed to, and can be a loving and caring one. Aquarius-Pisces have the sensitivity, and the drive, that Virgo-Libras need, and Virgo-Libras are able to share their aesthetic interests with their Aquarius-Pisces partners. These two may surround themselves with beautiful objects, and spend as much time as possible in unspoiled nature. It will be very important for the pair to be engaged in projects that will allow them fully to share the relationship's singular vision. Because of a quincunx aspect between Virgo-Libra and Aquarius-Pisces (which lie 150° apart in the zodiac), astrology predicts imbalance in the relationship, and the partners may have to work hard to keep themselves on an even keel emotionally.

Marriage and work relationships are particularly rewarding, since many opportunities emerge here to implement a world view or lifestyle that is to the liking of both partners. Travel may also be important, providing new sources of inspiration for the couple's principal endeavors. Care must be taken to manage the partnership's tendencies toward impulsive behavior and risk-taking. Especially in friendships, love affairs and marriages, the partners should work to ground themselves in daily responsibilities, which can keep their relationship afloat and on an even keel.

Problems arise in sibling relationships and friendships when conflicting wishes clash. The need of both partners for companionship may be well satisfied by their relationship, yet their individual desires—notably those of Virgo-Libras for material goods and of Aquarius-Pisces for more philosophical pursuits—may be at odds.

ADVICE: Value traditions—they've survived for a reason. Pay attention to finances. Take on a greater share of responsibility.

THE WEEK OF SPIRIT
PISCES I

Reconciling the Material and the Spiritual

In many ways, this combination seeks to reconcile and unite the superficial and spiritual elements of existence, an approach in which both comfort and contemplation figure prominently. The pair seeks the meaning behind all beauty—the essence that empowers it. Not satisfied with material existence alone, these two will always yearn for something else; in their relationship, financial success can be viewed as an aspect of spiritual reward. Conflicts are bound to arise between more materialistic Virgo-Libras and more spiritually oriented Pisces I's. Yet the relationship is not one to avoid challenge, and if both partners are willing to go beyond themselves, they may be united in a common search, and gain as a result.

Love affairs between Virgo-Libras and Pisces I's will often succeed or fail depending on the degree of commitment present. Surrender is an important theme here, whether to this couple's own love or to a higher source—perhaps a teacher, a philosophy or a religion. Should one partner be wholly committed to the relationship and the other only partly so, discussions, arguments and even battles may become the rule, hastening the relationship's demise. Marriages between these two should not be attempted until ideological differences have been settled.

Friendships here may be squarely based on a search for truth and knowledge. Profoundly idealistic, the Virgo-Libra-Pisces I matchup is likely to set high standards for honor and trust, which, once violated, are not easily reestablished. This relationship is generally easygoing, as long as the partners are in fundamental agreement on issues of morality and decency. Such friends can have wonderful times together, while also indulging their more serious sides. Quietude occupies a special place here. In the family and vocational spheres, Virgo-Libras and Pisces I's can be of great help to one another in getting the daily work done. Although the partners may not be of the most ambitious or hard-working sort, their relationship is generally able to discharge responsibilities in a relaxed fashion, which can lower the stress level of the organizations of which they are a part.

ADVICE: Sort out your priorities and find common points of agreement. Beware of indolence. Try to be more forgiving and less judgmental.

THE WEEK OF THE LONER
PISCES II

A Rarefied Atmosphere

The expansiveness of this relationship is likely to carry it to the farthest reaches of the stratosphere. In this rarefied atmosphere, the Virgo-Libra-Pisces II pair is preoccupied with a kind of abstractness of thought that others will not easily understand. This pair will have to reconcile itself to the fact that only a select group of family, friends or co-workers may ever really understand them on anything more than a superficial level. Somewhat mysterious, though not really by design, Virgo-Libras and Pisces II's may simply decide to go their own way, grateful for each other, and let everyone else try to sort it all out.

Love affairs and friendships between these two are often based on an appreciation of dance, music or film, as art forms rather than sources of entertainment. This sensibility is carried over into their everyday life as well, where grace of movement, immaculate taste and highly selective attitudes toward people are emphasized. Carried to an extreme, such an approach may result in elitism or snobbism, pushing the relationship toward alienation or isolation.

Virgo-Libra-Pisces II marital and family relationships often benefit from the presence of a single appreciative relative, perhaps a child or parent. Such an individual may have a strong grounding influence on this duo, or at the very least supply them with a companion on their flights of fancy. The belief of just one such individual in the relationship can lend it the credibility that it requires to maintain its pride and self-respect.

Work relationships in this combination are rarely interested in making a quick killing but can be content with earning enough to break even. More interested in the quality of the product or service and less in filling the cash register, Virgo-Libras and Pisces II's are usually happiest when they can devote themselves to what they truly believe in. These two will sacrifice a great deal on the material level to be allowed to go on with their work, even under adverse circumstances.

ADVICE: Don't be too extreme; maintain contact with others. Cultivating a bit of practicality won't hurt. Beware of sacrificing your own best interests.

THE WEEK OF DANCERS & DREAMERS
PISCES III

Colorful Dreamworld

Romantic and emotional matchup, Virgo-Libras and Pisces III's are likely to live in their own colorful dreamworld, mesmerized by each other's charms. Highly imaginative, this relationship may seek out experiences where uncertainty, ambiguity and magic all play important roles. The couple generally eschews rigid schedules and predetermined directions, preferring to allow things to happen rather than making them happen. In fact, the partners may firmly believe that making things happen is not really possible, and that most of life is really a matter of fate or chance.

As lovers or friends, Virgo-Libras and Pisces III's often meet in a way that substantiates this belief. In retrospect, the odds against their even encountering each other seem prodigious, giving their meeting a kind of miraculous air. Their conviction that the relationship was meant to be may give it tremendous momentum, sustaining it over many a difficult period. Marriages may wear thin over time, however, with only such miraculous claims to sustain them. In fact, the partners may discover that they are not really suited to each other at all, or simply grow apart as the years spin by.

Parent-child relationships in this combination may be complex emotionally. Pisces III parents tend to adore and spoil their Virgo-Libra children. Virgo-Libra parents, on the other hand, may be impatient with their Pisces III offspring and may make demands—for neatness, efficiency or common sense—that the children find difficult or impossible to meet. In both cases, having fewer preconceived ideas and accepting children as they are will be of the utmost importance if psychological problems are to be avoided here.

Virgo-Libra-Pisces III working relationships may not be at all well suited for full-time positions in companies or organizations. Should these two form their own business, they must be extremely careful not to be carried away by their fantasies and risk losing everything financially.

ADVICE: Keep your eyes open. Make more of an effort to see things as they are, not as you want them to be.

THE WEEK OF THE PERFECTIONIST
 LIBRA I

A Mocking Edge

The principal energy of this relationship is likely to go into wordplay. Like fencers, these two are masters of the riposte. It would be difficult for a third party to tell when either of them is voicing sincere sentiments, since there is often a mocking edge to their words or in the tone with which they are delivered that could indicate irony, sarcasm or a double meaning. Nor are Libra I's above using either body language—hand movements, a frozen facial expression, even a simple shrug—or silence to get their message across. Skilled in ambiguity and subtlety, each Libra I will usually get the point the other is making, even if it goes over the head of other listeners.

Love affairs and marriages between these two can be highly romantic yet at the same time not entirely serious. Thus there is a kind of healthy self-consciousness at work here that alerts the relationship to its own pretense. Both partners are realistic enough not to kid each other, but occasionally they get carried away with their own histrionics. One partner, seeing the other shed crocodile tears, may have trouble controlling his or her laughter. In fact, laughing at each other gently or scornfully, if carried to excess, can be one of the worst habits of this relationship.

Libra I–Libra I friends demand a quality to their experiences, whether entertainment, sport or adventure. They will rarely pretend to have had a good time when they have not, and when united in their criticism of a person or an event they can be quite devastating. Such friends must be careful not to succumb to the lure of negativity, that is, steadfastly ignoring the better parts of whatever is under discussion in order to cut it skillfully to the bone.

Work and family relationships can be extremely difficult because of continual strife within boss-employee and parent-child pairs of Libra I's. Since both partners are likely to insist on having the last word, verbal sparring may go on endlessly.

ADVICE: Do you know when you are serious? Keep your negativity under control—look for the best in things. Enjoy without critical examination or comment.

Worthy Opponents

Competitive urges often arise between these two and can become the focus of this relationship. They are of two types—the first, in which they vie for the spotlight within their family, social or professional group, and the second, in which they compete to surpass a stated objective or to outstrip each other. In either case, this adversarial relationship does not necessarily have to involve animosity and can be quite a friendly one. Libra I's have the drive and critical intensity, Libra II's the charm and deep insight, to be worthy opponents.

An interesting mix of ease and demand is operative in love affairs. At times Libra I's and Libra II's are content to loll and laze, but at others they can imbue the relationship with the fury of a hurricane. Such unpredictable swings of mood will have to be evened out if a modicum of psychological stability is to be achieved. In both love and marriage, competition for the attention of mutual friends may temporarily drive these two apart.

It is in the professional sphere that the most productive sorts of competition arise between Libra I's and II's. Here one gets the idea that they actually need each other to achieve the best of which they are capable, especially when they are bitter rivals. If they serve on the same team within a company, this competitive edge is no less present, but here it can be put to good use by a clever boss or superior to benefit the organization as a whole. Libra I's and II's often treat each other with such cordiality that a visitor might remark on how well they get along.

Friendships and sibling matchups often evidence not only a desire to win in sports, games and play but also a struggle for the attention of other friends and family members. Nevertheless, this relationship can be an extremely close one. In fact, a kind of affection, and in certain cases even love, is predicated on the very conflict that at times seems to indicate hostile conflict.

ADVICE: Beware of unproductive competition. You may not be as far apart as you seem. Strive for greater understanding. Sometimes winning is losing.

A Social Whirl

The thrust of this relationship is usually social in nature. As a pair, these two are interested in putting their best foot forward, whether in a family setting or among a circle of friends. Being badly thought of will be terribly wounding to such a relationship, and thus partners are usually careful to observe the proper codes of behavior. The problem is, it is not always so easy for such individuals as these to behave in a conventional manner. Libra I's are too iconoclastic and Libra III's too flamboyant to be able to conform fully, and this may put enormous strains on the relationship.

In love affairs and marriages, Libra I's and Libra III's would be content to relax with each other and maintain a rather private lifestyle, but their relationship dictates otherwise. Somehow another meeting, appointment or responsibility looms just around the corner and too often requires the attention, if not the presence, of both partners. In desperation, these two may seek to absent themselves from social responsibilities by taking frequent vacations, yet on their return they seem to have ten times more to attend to than before.

The Libra I–Libra III pair may be far more successful in meeting the social demands of friendship. Here the problem could be the opposite one, namely, that the partners enjoy social interaction so much that their relationship is weakened by their inability—or, eventually, by their lack of desire—to spend much time alone together. Likewise, parents and children in this combination may busy themselves with a spate of school, extracurricular, family and other activities that may give them little time to build a strong personal bond. This deficiency may become apparent in later life when crises of a life-or-death nature arise.

Business partnerships and other commercial dealings will benefit from the extensive contacts the relationship engenders and also from a canny approach to money matters. But Libra III fiscal conservatism can clash with the wilder, more speculative approach of Libra I's.

ADVICE: Fight for time alone together. Don't be so concerned with your social image—other people will have to understand. Cancel appointments if you must.

Romantic Fulfillment

This can be one of those ultraromantic relationships that many people yearn for, a relationship of passion, excitement and daring. This pair will share their innermost desires and dreams with each other; they are secure enough to reveal their most sensitive sides without fear of reprisal. Their relationship has few problems of a mundane and practical sort.

In love, this pair will let itself be swept away on a romantic wave. Libra I's and Libra-Scorpios have so much under control in other areas that they have tremendous self-confidence as a couple. Thus they have no fear of losing all in a headlong rush of passion. The relationship generally proclaims what it is openly, and if it is somewhat unconventional, it is prepared to take the flak that society may aim in its direction. Some love affairs may be of the more outrageous sort, not because the partners are intent on flaunting their connection but simply because they do not believe in tempering their affection for each other, privately or publicly. Libra I's and Libra-Scorpios are tremendously critical people, however, and this tendency is synergized by their relationship, making it an extremely demanding and at times stressful one. Miraculously, in love (but less often in marriage) these two usually succeed in meeting each other's high standards, whether physical, financial or social. There may not, however, be a correspondingly deep emotional bond here, which can indicate a lack of self-awareness and an unwillingness to confront feelings directly.

Friends and family members in this combination will also share deeply, perhaps exchanging tales of romance and faraway lands. Those who seek to work together, possibly forming a small business, will do particularly well as consultants, troubleshooters or technical problem solvers. Libra I's and Libra-Scorpios can make a powerful team, helping both individuals and organizations get back on track. Should co-worker pairs first meet on the job, they may continue their relationship after hours, first as companions, later as fast friends.

ADVICE: Don't be afraid to examine your feelings critically. Dig a bit deeper emotionally. Give the opinions of others serious consideration.

Kicking Off from Excitement

The exciting chemistry between these two often encourages dramatic events to swirl around them. Even if their life together is fairly conventional, this pair may have difficulty achieving stability, and indeed may have little interest in doing so. Involvements in film, theater and other entertainment fields may become an effective means of compartmentalizing and objectifying this need for excitement. Dissatisfaction or boredom will continue to be the principal problem here, generating a need for ever-more-interesting experiences. Unfortunately, the pursuit of excitement can be addictive, causing these two to pack more and more events into their available time, leading ultimately to nervous exhaustion and even breakdown.

In love affairs it may be important to learn that the paramount goal is not excitement but rather the kind of satisfaction that comes from acceptance of both the self and the other. Likewise, in marriages and friendships that indulge in a frenzied search for gratification there is probably something dreadfully wrong at home. People should find each other interesting enough to want to be alone together rather than run out all the time. Moreover, constantly comparing their relationship with those of others is destructive.

In familial relationships, as in the ones already discussed, a reexamination of values—perhaps even a total rethinking and restructuring of daily life—is probably in order to ensure greater stability. Kicking the addiction to stimulation can be accomplished in a parent-child relationship, but it requires self-awareness, which initially will have to come from the parent and only later from the child. Libra I–Scorpio I professional matchups will find ordinary work unsatisfying, but if the relationship emerges in more flamboyant sorts of careers, these two may grapple with a high level of criticism of each other.

ADVICE: Calm down a bit. Be objective about what you are doing. Find more fulfilling activities. Furnish your own entertainment and creativity.

The Hard Facts of Existence

This is an intense combination that won't flinch when confronted with the truth. The Libra I–Scorpio II pair has a much greater respect for the cold hard facts of life than for all the theories in the world about what things are supposed to be like. Power struggles within the relationship are generally kept to a minimum out of mutual respect but also from both personalities' desire to advance their own cause. Thus the relationship usually has the approval and solid backing of its partners, who are confident in their ability to withstand almost any onslaught through a united defense.

Business partnerships and colleague matchups are particularly favored here. Realistic and tough, this pair is not without its personal charm as well. The relationship has a strong sense of how power works in the corporate and business worlds and does not hesitate to wield it authoritatively. Likewise, in the family sphere, Libra I and Scorpio II relatives are well able to defend family interests and to make wayward relatives fall into line. Such combinations must be careful not to arouse the ire or resentment of other strong-minded family members.

Love affairs and marriages are a bit tricky. Power struggles are likely to emerge here, particularly in the sexual arena. Scorpio II's need to dominate physically, Libra I's mentally, and the intensity of these encounters can reach seismic levels. Unfortunately, arguments and emotional conflicts of equal intensity often precede or follow such interactions. Some balance or compromise will have to be reached if this relationship is to avoid burnout. Moreover, the heavy emphasis here on cold reality and the nature of power leaves a lot to be desired in the way of warmth, sensitivity and kindness. Ultimately, even these two tough customers may find that passion isn't enough. Friendships here are at their best when the partners are able to spend their time together relaxing, perhaps indulging in easy conversation, sharing a meal or just hanging out.

ADVICE: Reach important agreements. Moderation and compromise are essential. Don't get carried away with power. Sex can be a dangerous weapon.

Closed Ranks

A split in character type is likely to be emphasized in this relationship. Libra I's adhere to the more tried-and-true way of doing things and believe in maintaining the highest possible standards and codes of conduct. Scorpio III's, on the other hand, seek to be modern and up-to-date and are more than willing to cut corners. Should the pair be attacked or opposed, however, it will usually stand firm against a common threat, making this a relationship that generally shows less unanimity when unpressured. Libra I perfectionist tendencies generally make a strong impression on Scorpio III's, who will try to emulate them with more or less success. In return, Scorpio III charisma can often be used to convince exacting Libra I's of the need for compromise—to their benefit. Luckily, the partners' positive attributes and their ability to mitigate their negative tendencies helps this pair to arrive at a happy balance.

Love affairs and marriages can be highly passionate but also warm and affectionate. Dramatic displays of emotion are unavoidable, since the relationship brings out the more temperamental aspects of both partners. Libra I's are highly demanding of their mates in the physical sphere, but Scorpio III's are usually more than a match for their intensity and stamina, and in fact may even surpass them on occasion. The sexual relationship does not usually display bipolar or frustrating tendencies but is able to create an energy flow that is for the most part constant and sustaining. Parent-child combinations are most favorable with Scorpio III in the parental role, guiding and nurturing their precocious Libra I offspring. Likewise, in working relationships Scorpio III's make the better bosses and Libra I's the better employees, as long as duties are well defined from the outset. In friendships this pair is able to merge contrasting energies and points of view into a cohesive unit. Such combinations often feel almost euphoric, and at such moments the partners may believe they can take on the world. In their social, business and family circles they can be inspirational, but they also suffer from extremely low periods when their energy or self-confidence wanes. Too much time spent together without purpose or direction can lead to internal squabbles, indecision and torpor.

ADVICE: Reconcile opposing points of view. Learn to motivate from within. Fight lethargy and indecision. Maintain self-confidence.

Manifesting the Lighter Side

This combination makes a definite impression on its surroundings and tends to leave something memorable behind after its passing. The matchup is characterized by grit, determination and staying power. Despite its rather heavy and palpable effects on its environment, this combination is particularly marked by its lighter side. Libra I's tend to bring out more of the Scorpio-Sagittarian wit and sense of ease, particularly noticeable when these two start kidding around. Scorpio-Sagittarian irreverence toward authority stimulates and supports the strongly individualistic stance of Libra I's. The focus of this relationship is likely to involve breaking with established traditions and attempting to set up an independent structure within a family, social or professional setting.

In their love and marital relationships, these two can share many carnal delights. While Scorpio-Sagittarians tend to be more sensuous, however, enjoying food and comfort as much as sex, Libra I's are often more-passionate types, reserving and funneling most of their sensual energy directly into sex. Furthermore, Libra I ideas and ideals may keep them from participating physically at certain times, making Scorpio-Sagittarians frustrated and unhappy. Marriages can be both practical and fun but ultimately won't adhere to tradition.

In friendships and work relationships these two are likely to brighten up their environs through their humorous exchanges. Given the chance, however, they would rather structure and manage their own organization. The problem here is that this pair is actually better able to work for others and in fact may lack the administrative and practical financial skills to succeed on its own. In the family sphere, both sibling and parent-child combinations can successfully impose structure on daily activities, and galvanize other relatives toward involvement in team efforts.

ADVICE: Don't take on more than you can handle—be realistic about your capabilities. Be careful not to arouse the wrath of authority figures.

Twisting Arms

This dynamic matchup will not back down from a fight. It is explosive in its mixture of elements: Libra is an air sign, Sagittarius is fire, and the relationship is also ruled by water, here signifying deep emotion. Powerfully persuasive, this relationship knows when and how to twist arms to get its way. The partners most often feel best when protecting or representing the best interests of others, even more so than when pushing their own relationship. Libra I critical instincts and considerable ambition may bother Sagittarius I's, whose ideas and morality will in turn grate occasionally on Libra I nerves, but these two make it their business to get along, often for the sake of fellow employees, children or other family members.

This pair's love affairs will be exciting, but they are also likely to be highly unstable. A deluge of feeling threatens to overwhelm this couple, which seems ill-prepared to cope. Emotional awareness is not at its highest in this relationship, and unconscious elements will often prevail over conscious ones. Marriage is not highly recommended here unless the partners make a concerted effort to get to know themselves and each other better at a deep level.

As friends, Libra I's and Sagittarius I's need specific activities to be involved in, often of a technical nature. Such matchups can suffer from emotional difficulties, but problems are often simply ignored or put off until a later date. So close is this relationship that real sharing is possible in most areas but is rarely or never discussed. An unspoken code is often silently agreed upon; breaking it can cripple or even destroy the relationship.

In family and work relationships, the Libra I–Sagittarius I duo can be both a strong force for change and a solid support in times of need and crisis. Social and political awareness are usually strong here, lending a highly realistic outlook to any group of which the relationship forms a part. Libra I charisma and Sagittarius I energy gel effectively enough for this matchup to assume a leadership role in such areas.

ADVICE: You need to discuss things more openly—beware of silent condemnation. Fight the good fight. Guard against selfishness, and don't neglect personal matters.

Whetstone Sharp

The Libra I–Sagittarius II combination is one-of-a-kind. Although there is an undeniable tendency for one partner to assume the role of mentor in this relationship, the focus here is to acquire experience and knowledge within a certain area that can then be put to specific social, financial or artistic use. It is not uncommon to find teacher-student interactions here, but the roles are regularly reversed. Moreover, although autonomy is important to both Libra I's and Sagittarius II's, there is no denying the benefits of their working together in equal partnership. For either partner to act in a selfish or self-aggrandizing fashion runs counter to their own self-interest, since the real benefits of this relationship accrue from the interactions between these two. Love affairs and marriages between Libra I's and Sagittarius II's can be quite stressful. The perfectionist tendencies of Libra I's may lead them to evaluate their lover or mate in this combination as a trifle sloppy or negligent, while Sagittarius II's may consider Libra I's overly tense. When the level of physical satisfaction is high enough here, such annoyances are quickly forgotten; but the partners should take the time to discuss problems and possible solutions rather than bounce back and forth between periods of stress and more pleasurable times. Friendships and rivalries are extremely challenging and often fulfilling. A competitive edge is rarely lacking here, and the relationship often acts as a whetstone to keep its partners sharp.

The stubbornness, even defiance, of the Libra I–Sagittarius II pair may prevent family members from getting together for some time. Competition unavoidably surfaces here, particularly between relatives of the same sex, but experientially both partners gain from such encounters, no matter how unpleasant they may seem at the time. The mental quickness of Libra I's and the high degree of creativity that characterizes Sagittarius II's gel at times and at others collide, but obstinacy leads both partners to continue on rather than abandon the relationship. Both parent-child and sibling matchups often have marketable qualities, which they can explore either in terms of a family business or as freelancers providing a service or craft.

ADVICE: Keep antagonisms under control. Act in the best interests of all. Two heads are often better than one. Discover hidden possibilities.

Secret Love

This is a profound matchup overall, one that brings out deep feelings in its partners—not always comfortably. These two are not known for their emotionalism; in fact, both of them have a knack for detachment and objectivity. Yet emotions here are intense and sometimes inexplicable, often manifesting in an explosive and frightening manner. The relationship often carries with it a secret known only to its partners, one perhaps rarely discussed. That secret may contribute to the depth of the relationship.

Even so, Libra I–Sagittarius III couples will not necessarily achieve a blissful consummation. Frustration is as likely to predominate here as satisfaction, since the operative emotions are often confused. Thus in love affairs one partner's feelings, desires and hopes may feed off those of the other, yet without permitting any lasting happiness or fulfillment. Although tremendous sexual satisfaction may be achieved for a period of time by one or both partners, it is rarely sustainable. In marriage, Sagittarius III's may have highly unrealistic expectations that cannot ultimately be met, while Libra I's can be baffled by their inability fully to satisfy their partner. Instead of looking for such ultimate experience or for consistently high levels of pleasure, the Libra I–Sagittarius III couple would do well to be content with their emotional bond, which is often considerable.

Family pairs in this combination are prone to emotional upsets and rejection scenarios that may play out over years. Unresolved feelings are usually at the root of such difficulties—feelings that must be brought out into the open and discussed, perhaps under professional guidance. Libra I–Sagittarius III friendships can be serious and committed, yet may not have a capacity for the enjoyment of great times. Complex emotions are usually less of a problem here, except when personal or career drives arouse jealousy or the need to compete. As co-workers, Libra I's and Sagittarius III's may experience conflicts arising from the former's drive for technical perfection and the latter's grand plans for success or overly optimistic view.

ADVICE: Lower your expectations. Take things as they come. Happiness may be closer than you think. Examine what lies behind your dissatisfaction.

THE CUSP OF PROPHECY
SAGITTARIUS-CAPRICORN CUSP

A Study in Contrasts

These two are very well suited to each other in certain respects and not well at all in others, which creates a study in contrasts. Sagittarius-Capricorns enjoy the lighthearted, conversational side of Libra I's at the outset of their relationship, but continual exposure reveals a certain shallowness that the more profound Sagittarius-Capricorn disdains. Similarly, Sagittarius-Capricorn quietude and silence may be unnerving for Libra I's, who depend on the responsiveness and, ultimately, the appreciation of their partners. Both of these personalities value simplicity and a lack of artificiality; they may share a love of organic foods, soft fabrics, muted colors and, in general, a natural lifestyle. Living in pleasant surroundings with at least a touch of greenery is also conducive to a feeling of well-being here.

Love affairs are curious in that the partners can feel very close to each other and be extremely affectionate in their sexual interactions, yet cold and distant in daily life. Repressed anger on the part of Sagittarius-Capricorns and a hypercritical, bossy Libra I approach are the determining factors here. A breakdown in communication is signaled by a deadly quiet that casts its pall over everything. In marital situations, Libra I's and Sagittarius-Capricorns tend to suffer from Libra I involvement in outside hobbies or social affairs that leave Sagittarius-Capricorns sitting at home feeling neglected or abandoned.

In many ways Libra I's and Sagittarius-Capricorns are better suited for friendship and family relationships than for love. Partners here are able to exhibit loyalty and compassion toward each other. Such relationships often serve as a haven for two individuals who feel ignored by the world, and can afford both partners much-needed sympathy and understanding. Working relationships here seldom function well on either the executive/entrepreneurial or the co-worker level; Libra I's will be impatient with Sagittarius-Capricorns' slower pace and need to do things their own way.

ADVICE: Talk openly about what's on your mind. Allow for disagreement without anger. Show more patience. Accept differences. Don't condemn.

Agreeably Uncompromising

These two could have a thoroughly agreeable and charming relationship. Conventional astrology predicts a difficult time here, since Libra I and Capricorn I form a square aspect in the zodiac (lying 90° apart), but this can also indicate an honest, realistic and often uncompromising attitude. Thus neither partner lets much go by without making comment, but this can often be done in a light, easy and, above all, considerate manner that is unlikely to arouse anger. There exists within this relationship the kind of diplomacy that can guarantee the possibility of harmony on a daily basis. Nonetheless, an edge is almost always present, and partners must never forget that a full-blown argument could easily erupt should courtesy and respect be neglected even for a second.

Love affairs and marriages are particularly favored between Libra I's and Capricorn I's, who can be stern, demanding and unforgiving in their relationships with others but exhibit a certain softness when together. This is because both partners respect and trust each other enough to let down their guard, allowing each to see the other's more vulnerable, human side. Friendships in this combination can founder when brutally honest attitudes offend one of the partners, usually the thinner-skinned Libra I. Similarly, parent-child relationships can suffer from real or perceived insults. In both sectors, Libra I and Capricorn I friends and parent-child pairs must learn to be more diplomatic as well as more forgiving.

Libra I–Capricorn I work relationships can be excellent, with the practical and financial skills of Capricorn I's complementing the Libra I drive to get things right. But unless an effort is made to keep personal and business matters strictly separate, emotional conflict is inevitable. Although Capricorn I's usually need to be the boss in other relationships, they have no problem taking orders from Libra I's if these are given in a respectful manner.

ADVICE: Be as diplomatic as possible—keep your temper under control. Retain respect and openness. Don't be afraid to show your vulnerability.

Thriving on Success

This couple likes to take things as they come, with few expectations or pieces of textbook advice determining their actions. Tremendously energetic, the Libra I–Capricorn II pair can marshal its forces and direct them in a highly effective manner. Achieving specific objectives is often the strong point of this relationship but can become a sticking point when such achievement is difficult or perhaps impossible; an evident setback will usually serve to lower the confidence and self-esteem of its partners. This is a combination that thrives on success but is not particularly well prepared to handle failure.

Love affairs between these two can be highly sensual and exciting. Libra I's are attracted by the earthiness of Capricorn II's and the stability they afford, while Capricorn II's are turned on by the intellectual brilliance of Libra I's. Although of extremely different temperaments, their energies can dovetail beautifully, coalescing into mutual appreciation and cooperation. Unfortunately, some of their romantic spark is often lost when they marry; as they settle down into a more humdrum existence, they may find themselves at loggerheads.

Friendships wear better over the years, and here Libra I–Capricorn II differences are likely to keep the relationship vital. Stimulating disagreements and discussions, mild competition in sports-related activities, and playful rivalries for the affections of others are all characteristically part of the game. Sibling relationships, on the other hand, are more likely to erupt into open conflict, and the pair will have to learn to compromise and share if they are to get along at all. Libra I's and Capricorn II's can have an efficient and productive relationship as co-workers in a large firm or as executives guiding the destiny of such an organization. If extraordinary success is to be achieved, however, the pair will have to become tougher, more flexible and resilient.

ADVICE: Don't be so easily discouraged—stiffen your resolve. Stay confident. Don't remain tied to past mistakes.

Resolution Without Fuss

This is a relationship that thrives on difficulty yet does not expend a lot of energy solving problems. Its style, rather, is to go with the flow and attempt to resolve issues quietly, with little fuss. Actually, the Libra I–Capricorn III pair finds public displays a bit distasteful and much prefers to go its own way without attracting a lot of attention. Capricorn III's can provide stability for Libra I's while at the same time often becoming enchanted with Libra I charm. These two individuals can form a relationship that is quite sophisticated and refined, yet also one strong enough to maintain its integrity in the face of internal conflict or outside pressure.

Love affairs between Libra I's and Capricorn III's are likely to be highly private in nature. Few outsiders are allowed to see the relationship's inner workings, and, truth to tell, its mysteries may be beyond the ken of the partners themselves. The contrast between heavier Capricorn III and lighter Libra I energies is marked—family and friends often find the success of this relationship puzzling. The secret, of course, is that without too much fuss, each partner receives what he or she needs from the other. What Libra I's need is a broadening of themselves; what Capricorn III's need is deeper emotional understanding. Such love affairs may progress to marriage, maturing and becoming wiser through the years.

Friendships between Capricorn III's and Libra I's that form in childhood, perhaps at school, show a tendency toward rebellion against unjust treatment from teachers and other authority figures. They also often fall under the influence of a powerful older figure, one who may dominate the partner's early intellectual and spiritual lives. As parents, Capricorn III's can be alternately lenient and severe with their Libra I children, which can create confusion. Libra I parents often demand far too much of their Capricorn III offspring. In the workplace, too, Libra I bosses may drive their Capricorn III employees excessively, and come to put too much responsibility on their broad shoulders.

ADVICE: Be a bit more realistic in your expectations. Sometimes it's necessary to take a stand. Learn from those more experienced than you.

Freedom to Act

This combination allows both partners to be themselves. If the relationship's focus is to ensure the freedom of its partners, how is it possible for it to hang together at all? Why is it even necessary? Herein lies the mystery of the relationship. Paradoxically, these two are fully committed to each other when together and are at no risk of losing their individuality. At the same time, their absolute trust that neither partner will compromise the relationship frees them to act as they choose when they are apart. Libra I's tend to be as demanding as Capricorn-Aquarians but are not always as energetic or imaginative. Capricorn-Aquarians are likely to prove the more unpredictable of the pair, Libra I's the more moderate and reasonable.

Love affairs and marriages between these two rise and fall on the partners' ability to leave each other free to interact with others. Such matchups outside the primary relationship need not be threatening or sexual. As accepting of each other's activities as these two seem, however, they are only human; jealousy, anger and the need to possess may lie just a scratch beneath the surface. Either such open attitudes work or they don't, but certainly the most important indication of the relationship's success is the high degree of happiness within it, which should be carefully monitored by both partners.

Work relationships may be a trifle tricky, since here each partner tends to want exclusive rights to the other, and both may grow restive when a third party tries to entice one of them away. In fact, their professional reputations can be so strongly linked within an organization or as freelancers that one of them is seldom thought of without the other. Thus their marketplace value as individuals is often less than that of their partnership. Friendships and sibling relationships are most effective when requirements and claims are few and far between.

ADVICE: Let each other know you care. If you need something, say so. Don't assume you can do it all. Scale back desires—increase commitment.

Undermining Authority

The Libra I–Aquarius I couple is likely to have a liberating effect on those with whom it comes into contact. The emphasis in this relationship is not so much on the independence of each partner but on their combined power to undermine authority and loosen the bonds of tradition—in general, to promote a freethinking and forward-looking ideology or lifestyle. Libra I and Aquarius I lie in trine aspect to each other in the zodiac (they are 120° apart), suggesting an ease between them. Here, however, this ease translates into a relaxed attitude or air of negligence that can subvert more conservative approaches.

Live-in love affairs and marriages are largely concerned with personal matters but can still find expression in conjunction with social groups seeking redress for unfair treatment. Libra I's and Aquarius I's tend to have a fairly social lifestyle together but should not neglect the need for intimacy and for time alone. The steady stream of traffic through the domestic space that is typical for this relationship can cause instability and nervousness in both partners, ultimately weakening their relationship. These matchups enjoy the constant interaction and activity, the holidays and special celebrations, inherent in family life.

In friendships and working relationships, Libra I's and Aquarius I's are likely to be quite outspoken against teachers or bosses who attempt to impose their will on their students or employees. These two are often active in student organizations or labor unions, working to see to it that their fellows are treated in a fair and just manner. Nor will promises and good intentions succeed in placating such drives, for partners want results immediately, in writing and in deed. Although Libra and Aquarius are air signs, the Libra I–Aquarius I relationship is ruled by fire, an element here indicating a passionate commitment to their cause that encourages spontaneous acts of defiance.

ADVICE: Reserve enough quality time for yourself. Beware of spreading yourself too thin. Posit constructive alternatives for what you oppose.

In Need of Roots

This relationship is not well suited to high seriousness. Its principal focus is on keeping the mood light and safely on the surface; humor and quick-wittedness are characteristic here. Perhaps fated to a degree of superficiality, the Libra I–Aquarius II combination is often geared toward having a good time, employing the full roster of entertaining activities, from games to parties to films and television. Religious, philosophical or spiritual reflection is rarely found at the core of such a relationship but may be sorely needed by a matchup that lacks a firm ideological foundation. The relationship may, however, attempt to substitute more transitory values of a social, political or artistic nature to help fulfill this need.

In love affairs, neither partner seems interested in causing problems for the other. Yet this is precisely what Libra I's will do: their overly critical and at times fastidious manner can make their more relaxed Aquarius II partner uptight. Furthermore, the somewhat lackadaisical Aquarian approach may madden Libra I partners in search of a more clearly defined philosophy. Sexually, Libra I sexual intensity may prove threatening to the more sensual Aquarius II. Marriages between these two are not particularly recommended.

Friendships involving this pair may be given over entirely to the pursuit of pleasure, in which sarcasm and wordplay assume prominent roles. Personal hang-ups and thin-skinnedness, however, are likely to cause sudden explosions of temper. Libra I–Aquarius II relatives are apt to get on each other's nerves but may act out melodramatic scenarios that other family members find quite amusing. In the professional sphere, co-workers may intentionally or unintentionally become the butt of jokes, for their relationship will have an oblivious and awkward side.

ADVICE: Be a bit more aware of what others are thinking. Commit to serious ideas or beliefs. Work on tempering irritation.

Channeling Irrepressible Energies

This relationship is ruled by fire, here symbolizing a wellspring of energy that can be either used constructively or simply left to flood out of control. Thus this matchup may be characterized as a continual struggle on the part of Libra I's to harness the irrepressible energies of Aquarius III's. If they are successful, and the necessary discipline is imposed, this pair can be highly effective in bringing Aquarius III energy to a wider public; in the best-case scenario, the result is a merger of Libra I technical know-how and Aquarius III creativity. If they are unsuccessful, battles between the two will rage, with neither side prepared to compromise.

In love affairs there is a hint of the kind of idiosyncrasy of which this pair is capable. Unusual, even peculiar practices may well emerge here, which partners are likely to accept as normal but which society, if made aware of them, would frown on as kinky or bizarre. No matter how far Libra I's and Aquarius III's are apt to explore less-traveled roads, however, they rarely cause any serious harm, either to themselves or to others. Their pursuits are not restricted to the physical plane by any means but may well emerge in intellectual or even spiritual practices. Marriages are often based squarely on one such field of practice, which may involve an ideology or a social or political group to which this relationship devotes its energies.

Parent-child or boss-employee relationships in which Libra I's play the commanding role will hinge on the tractability of the Aquarius III child or employee. Ultimately, Aquarius III's will demand to be treated equally, and the resulting combination may prove more effective than before. Libra I–Aquarius III friendships often flaunt an unusual style, whether in looks, clothing, musical tastes or sexual preference.

ADVICE: Listen carefully to each other. Maintain equality whenever possible. Keep wilder energies under control. Flaunt who you are, but respect other people's preferences.

A Prelude to Adventure

This relationship is on the move, forever in search of new horizons. Libra I dynamism combines with Aquarius-Pisces ambition to produce a hard-driving and uncompromising relationship that makes few excuses for its actions and none for its intentions. Tending toward the idealistic, these partners generally proceed from a strongly ethical or moral standpoint and thus feel justified in what they do. Although the focus of the relationship may well be on worldly adventures and challenges, its greatest need is for introspection and self-understanding.

In love affairs, friendships and marriages it is essential for the partners to spend time getting to know each other well. If other activities have to be postponed or meetings canceled for this to be accomplished, so be it. Aquarius-Pisces may lead the way in this endeavor, although they are often loath to open up areas in themselves that they have successfully sealed off. The trick here is for both partners to begin not with self-analysis but with discussions of the relationship itself. These can be the prelude to a highly exciting adventure of a different sort. The realization that self-discovery is a worthy challenge will lead the pair to explore this new territory more fully.

Work relationships between Libra I's and Aquarius-Pisces can be highly productive. This duo is particularly interested in the most current happenings, whether in politics, finance or entertainment. The information gleaned will be processed and put to work for the relationship's benefit but may become the basis for a professional endeavor in and of itself. Family members in this combination are likely to see eye to eye on many issues, but temperaments can clash. Remaining cool and controlling emotional outbursts, trying to be more accepting of each other and finding common areas of interest—all will be important in keeping the peace.

ADVICE: Seek deeper emotional and spiritual values. Understand yourself better. Take periodic rests from worldly activities—find a quiet place within.

Far-Reaching Thoughts

Libra I's and Pisces I's together are often entranced by lofty ideals. When the pair can reach agreement, their relationship is capable of great things in the realm of abstract thought; when they are not, it is likely to be torn apart by internal struggle. In the zodiac, Libra I and Pisces I lie at a quincunx aspect to each other (150° apart), a position that often indicates an unstable partnership. Libra I's and Pisces I's are highly subjective, and fierce arguments over abstract concepts, the nature of justice being a favorite, may become the order of the day. Libra I's pride themselves on their precision and may look on Pisces I thinking as a bit wild or sloppy. Pisces I's, on the other hand, will often feel that Libra I's have missed the point completely or failed to grasp the essence of whatever is under discussion.

Love affairs and marriages tend toward the highly romantic, albeit changeable; both partners must make an effort to ground themselves in the here and now or risk losing contact with reality. Moreover, they are often unsettled by ideological, religious or spiritual differences. Since objectivity is lacking here, it may be necessary for them to back away from such topics if they are to achieve any stability. There is a shared tendency to become emotionally overwrought, leading to irritations, quarrels and endless misunderstandings.

Friendships, too, are best when kept light and entertaining, with few fixed responsibilities. Although they can be lasting, rivalries and adversarial relationships are perhaps equally common. Work relationships between these two are not recommended, except within the confines of a spiritual or religious organization with which they are in sympathy. In the family sphere, serious ideological and emotional differences will spark confrontations between Libra I's and Pisces I's, upsetting other relatives.

ADVICE: Ground yourself in practical activities. Be realistic. Don't get carried away by romantic ideas or ideals.

Comical Charm

An unusual mix results from the precise and direct Libra I energies and the more sensitive, diffuse ones of Pisces II's. When these react in the formation of their relationship, the result is magical and can exert a strange enchantment over those it touches. Pisces II's have a social side that balances their primary need for isolation, Libra I's a strong need for isolation to balance their tendency to be in the public eye. Thus each partner has strengths that attract the other and lay a firm foundation for sharing within the relationship. Difficulties arise when Libra I's put too much emphasis on spoken communication and Pisces II's on unspoken, but given time and the will to get along, partners can usually work out these differences amicably.

In love affairs, temperamental differences are pronounced but still reconcilable. Libra I's may prove overdemanding at times for Pisces II's, who wish to be left in peace. On the other hand, the inability of Pisces II's to articulate their thoughts can prove exasperating to Libra I's. Libra I–Pisces II marriages often suffer from indecision and procrastination; these relationships have a certain comical charm for family and friends but can ultimately prove highly debilitating.

Libra I–Pisces II friendships are often surprisingly relaxed in attitude. Humorous situations of all sorts attract these two, more often as observers than as participants. With their special psychological awareness of human frailties, the pair can gather funny material that will endlessly delight friends, family and colleagues.

Parent-child and boss-employee relationships usually feature Libra I's issuing the orders and Pisces II's trying to follow them. The problem here is that things seldom go right, either through Pisces II misinterpretation of Libra I directives or through Libra I rigidity and unreasonable expectations. Libra I parents are usually aware of the extreme sensitivity of their Pisces II offspring and are most successful when they remain patient, understanding and not overly demanding.

ADVICE: Be sensitive to each other's needs. Flexibility and extreme patience are needed. Find a balance between your public and private lives.

Miraculous Powers

This relationship is apt to involve itself heavily in a detailed examination of all aspects of life, focusing on the operations of chance, synchronicity, prophecy and extrasensory perception. In some ways the matchup could be described as a duel between an arch-skeptic and an arch-believer. Although this characterization is a bit extreme, there is a grain of truth to it. Libra I's often depend solely on their rational faculties and deny what they cannot apprehend through their senses. Pisces III's, on the other hand, happily put their faith in what cannot be seen, which has just as much reality to them; they also view everyday objects and events as being imbued with supernatural powers or significance and point up the inability, or unwillingness, of others to recognize the miraculous in the everyday.

In love affairs and marriages, Libra I's and Pisces III's can show great interest in discussing how they met and all the coincidences that led to their establishing a close bond. Not surprisingly, both partners value the unexpected, unpremeditated and spontaneous in their interactions, particularly in the sexual sphere. Family relationships and friendships often focus on exploring the unknown, perhaps through an interest in science fiction, perhaps through personal exploration. Libra I's may well be skeptical about indulging in this sort of activity at the outset, but in their relationships with Pisces III's their reluctant curiosity becomes an avidity for finding out more. The greater their initial resistance to such studies, the deeper their immersion in them later on (generally speaking), much to the delight of Pisces III's.

In work relationships, these two will take a special interest in letting things go as they will, without forcing them to happen—the elements of play, risk and fate enter powerfully into Libra I–Pisces III business transactions. They may not fully admit to it, but as fellow employees or colleagues these two are also interested in the psychological aspects of business, with special emphasis on the telepathic.

The Vantage Point

Although Libra II's devote a great deal of their time to family and professional groups, when paired they are apt to shut out as much of the world as possible and enjoy some relative isolation together. From this vantage point, their interest in other people is no less keen—they simply are absolved from any responsibility to interact. Nor do they feel any less need to share their observations of others' psychologies; indeed, this kind of interest can become the focus of their relationship. Friends and acquaintances may seek out this pair, either individually or as a unit, to confide in—an involvement that eventually may acquire a professional aura.

Love affairs between Libra II's tend to be romantic but, alas, also unrealistic. Perhaps not well suited to each other at all, Libra II's may be swept away on a magic carpet of euphoria that, unfortunately, may come back down to earth all too quickly. Basically, this can occur because both partners pursue what they want without giving much thought to what they need. They could well share in professional activities in the social-service area. It is most likely that family members will regularly consult these two for advice and insight. The Libra II tendency to be overstrict with their children may in fact be mitigated by their matchup, since they are often quite critical of each other's attitudes in this regard.

Friendships involving this combination can be a lot of fun if kept light. Partners should avoid depending heavily on each other for emotional support or demanding an inordinate amount of attention. Such relationships can certainly be the life of the party, but afterward this pair likely will provide the most insightful commentary during the postmortem.

Forming a business, or working for one, that deals with human services is quite possible for a pair of Libra II's. Making it work financially is another matter, however—this duo will be more successful as part of a team, the other members of which can supply the practical skills they lack.

ADVICE: Don't just stand back and watch—get personally involved with others. Try to be more realistic in matters of love. Insist on what you need.

THE WEEK OF THEATER
LIBRA III

Zealous Attention-Seeking

Libra II's and Libra III's seek to gain the attention of those around them. How they go about this, and for what purpose, is open to question. These two could easily compete with one another to be the star of the show; if clever, though, they will realize that their relationship can be the real headliner, if only they give up their own selfish desires and pitch in together. In fact, the combination of Libra II psychological insight and Libra III style and motivation make these two formidable when it comes to stealing the spotlight from others. But why do they need the focus to be on themselves? More highly evolved Libra II's and III's may see themselves acting in a larger social context, and choose to use their high visibility as a tool for pioneering efforts on behalf of others. With their fiery zeal for bettering the human condition and an ability to foster consensus, it is possible to find this pair involved in politics. In fact, the real gift of this relationship just may be its social consciousness, providing individuals already quite socially oriented on their own with a greater mission.

In love affairs and marriages there is the danger that partners will compete for one another's attention. Perversely, they may use their mutual need for attention as a weapon in internal conflicts, each ignoring the other in hopes of winning out. But there are no winners in this game. Ultimately the partners may have to seek out more attentive mates, usually signaling an end to the relationship.

In the family or work sphere, sibling or co-worker pairs may build up tremendous rivalries, which, curiously enough, do not tend to disrupt the home or workplace. Such competitive matchups prove interesting to those around them and, in fact, can benefit the group by raising the standard of the contribution made by this pair. The Libra II–Libra III relationship may count itself successful when its members are recognized for their joint contributions and achievements. Friends in this combination love entertaining and being entertained and will go out of their way to put on a show or take one in.

ADVICE: Don't waste energy playing games. Try to grow up a bit. Seeking attention only weakens you. Use your power constructively.

Play-Acting

This is one of the most theatrical combinations of the whole year. Play-acting is usually the focus of this relationship, whether one takes the partners as a couple or individually. Although few make it to the stage, television or film, Libra II's and Libra-Scorpios are caught up in playing the roles of everyday life, and playing them well. The awareness that "all the world's a stage" is what really sets this relationship apart, allowing it fully to embrace the various opportunities for role-playing that life has to offer. With their particular interest in the illusory aspects of existence, these two nevertheless manage to keep a firm grip on reality, and view the shenanigans in which others indulge with the clear eye of insiders who know what it is to fake it.

Such realists can enjoy romance together, but by no means fully, since both understand how much is put on and how little deeply felt. Such a relationship will rarely fall in love with love, but, rather, will acknowledge the comedy inherent in many romantic attitudes. Laughing at themselves is perhaps healthy—but should the partners carry this attitude too far, they may become cynical, losing all innocence and the capacity for awe. Marriages between these two are likely to be highly practical in nature. For these couples, parties, family affairs and quiet dinners with friends are enjoyable opportunities for the study of the many feints and twists of dressed-up human nature.

Professionally, this relationship could well represent the partners' own or another's products or services as sales representatives, executives or consultants. Particularly adept at meetings and presentations, this duo will know how to impress both physically and verbally. As friends and siblings, Libra II's and Libra-Scorpios love to play games of all types but must beware not to live life only on the surface and thereby trivialize its more serious aspects.

ADVICE: Jaded, cynical attitudes can be deadening. Stay alive in the moment—lose yourself occasionally in what you are doing. Drop the mask.

Power's Fatal Attraction

This relationship is fatally attracted to power. Its greatest challenge may be to put its considerable energies toward productive and favorable ends and to be critical of its own power drives—to learn how to limit them and perhaps eventually even to give them up. The struggle for power thus becomes the struggle to understand power, to be its master rather than its slave. Libra II's and Scorpio I's must never succumb to the lure of power for power's sake, for this is the greatest danger they will face. One of the most significant tasks for this relationship is to serve human values that emphasize fairness, kindness and, above all, love for one's fellows. Despite the people skills of Libra II's, they are clearly out of their depth here—often, power doesn't really interest them. In this game Scorpio I's hold all the cards.

Love and marital relationships will often be marred by the partners' ruthless ambition: loving interaction is difficult here, since more tender human emotions are considered expendable in the drive toward a specific social or financial goal. It is possible for friendships between Libra II's and Scorpio I's to be highly rewarding in terms of person development, and a great deal of fun, but such friendships will face hard decisions in moments of crisis, when the partners are forced to choose between loyalty to the relationship and their interests as individuals.

In business and family matters, this relationship naturally seeks to exert its control over others and to occupy a prominent position in the hierarchy of the group. Usually working in its own best interest, the Libra II–Scorpio I pair may sacrifice its own comforts and personal needs to give its all. But placing itself under stress and strain is exactly what this relationship should not do. In fact, being more self-indulgent may be good for these two, since possessions and a bit of luxury will ground them more in the physical plane.

ADVICE: Limit power drives. Try to be loving and kind. Beware of being swept away by ideologies and beliefs. Ground yourself in the here and now.

The Detached Observer

Taking everyday events and turning them into bits of drama is the specialty of this relationship. Thus the rising action, climax and inevitable denouement of life as lived by ordinary people is the partners' chief interest, but principally as observers and commentators rather than as participants. By putting themselves outside the sphere of human action, they sometimes accord themselves a kind of godlike status. They may also be tempted from time to time to influence the action around them, but usually by advising, motivating or even ordering others to act in a certain way. Here they resemble directors rather than actors in the drama of life.

One area in which these two do not hesitate to get involved, however, is in their own love affairs, marriages and friendships. Though dramatic, such relationships have little pretense—they are spontaneous, honest, and impassioned. Libra II's and Scorpio II's throw themselves into matters of the heart with little reservation but often lack the insight to fully comprehend what is happening to them. Too often, reality is overturned, as they follow an excessive, obsessive and perilous course.

Within business and family circles, the Libra II–Scorpio II duo works best when personal interactions between them are kept to a minimum. Here, observing and furthering life's action is essential to the success of their professional and familial involvements. In the latter sphere, they are sometimes seen as busybodies who should keep their noses out of other people's business, but in business their advice and motivation are usually appreciated and even commercially sought after.

ADVICE: Be more objective about yourself and less critical of others. Keep your opinions to yourself occasionally—not everyone needs your advice.

A Dependable Unit

The Libra II–Scorpio III combination can be strong both professionally and interpersonally, because it imparts stability to both partners. Libra II's are usually able to take orders from Scorpio III's, and Scorpio III's to give effective leadership and direction to the relationship. This arrangement usually obviates the problem of Libra II indecision, although Scorpio III's must be careful not to become too overbearing, for Libra II's also have a rebellious streak. The important thing here is that decisions be fair and equitable, and that the best interests of the relationship be served.

Romantic and marital interactions are likely to coalesce around an easygoing, relaxed outlook that encourages a stable mixture of independence and responsibility. In such an environment love and affection can flow easily. Should things get a bit too pleasant and relaxed, however, such relationships may become a means of escaping harsher realities. Partners have to beware of a tendency to isolate themselves and to be overly protective.

In parent-child and boss-employee matchups, Scorpio III's do far better in the dominant role. The only danger here is that they will wield too much influence and as a consequence dominate the lives of more passive and agreeable Libra II's, ultimately provoking resentment. As friends these two are quite capable of being a dependable unit within a larger social group, or possibly even the one that takes the lead in setting up and running organized activities. However, should Libra I and Scorpio III friends be interested only in themselves and perhaps a small social or family group, they can be quite happy and self-sufficient.

ADVICE: Beware of running away from problems. Keep in touch with what is going on. Preserve equality as much as possible. Stick to the plan.

Mood Reinforcement

These individuals have their own turf to defend, and their first meeting may be somewhat confrontational. In addition, both have dark tendencies that their relationship may trigger, for better or for worse.

They are apt to put considerable energy into working out certain deep feelings in an intense, highly charged manner. If one partner is on a high and the other depressed, the polarity is likely to increase, for it is difficult for a Libra II to pull a Scorpio-Sagittarius out of the depths—and vice versa. Yet both can fly high together or commiserate when blue, providing emotional reinforcement without exerting any pressure to change. When the partners' dark moods overlap, both of them can gain tremendous insights.

Love affairs between Libra II's and Scorpio-Sagittarians can be highly satisfying sexually and will continue to be pleasurable as long as few demands are made. The partners are capable of enjoying each other's company tremendously and love to be enchanted and entertained by each other. Extramarital involvements between Libra II's and Scorpio-Sagittarians, whether with each other or outside the relationship, are especially tempting to both partners. Marriages will generally prove too much for this combination, however, since the practical burdens of everyday life do not really suit their preference for the easy pursuit of pleasure.

Friendships and sibling matchups between pairs of the same sex are likely to be mutually respectful for the most part, but not without occasional flare-ups caused by overactive egos. Territorial needs and pride in their own work usually keep this pair from getting too close. In the professional sphere, the refined tastes of both partners can coalesce, producing a working partnership that may be successful in the areas of design, decoration, illustration or publishing. Financial acumen is not a strong suit here, however, and spendthrift tendencies will have to be carefully watched. Libra II's and Scorpio-Sagittarians usually work best as part of a team within a larger organization.

ADVICE: Learn from your depressions. Don't run from emotional confrontations. Being naughty seems harmless but can cause great pain for all.

Handle with Care

Inspiration and education are the themes that run through this relationship. Sagittarius I's often assume such roles in the lives of Libra II's, but Libra II's are no less an inspiration to their Sagittarius I partners. What is suggested here is an asexual or platonic relationship, such as those of teacher-student, close friends or intergenerational relatives. In light of the importance that such a relationship could assume in their lives, it is extremely important that the partners remain objective, in part because there exists here an easy physicality that could become sensual if boundaries are crossed. Obviously, this means that the combination may sometimes be fraught with psychological peril—"Handle with care" may well be the warning implicit here.

In platonic love affairs and friendships, the ideal that each partner symbolizes for the other can be extremely fragile, easily destroyed by even the hint of physical involvement. As long as emotions are kept in check, Libra II's and Sagittarius I's can maintain these ideals and learn a great deal about and from each other. Marriages between Libra II's and Sagittarius I's may be a bit lopsided, with Sagittarius I's more often adopting the master role and Libra II's appearing more as the student or the obedient one. This matchup will generally have to be brought into greater balance if hostility and resentment are to be avoided.

Overt teacher-student relationships can work out well here, with either Libra II's or Sagittarius I's in the instructor's role. Communication is free and easy, with the relationship itself often becoming something of a model or providing a valuable lesson to others. Family matchups are tricky and unavoidably flirtatious; truly affectionate feelings between close relatives may actually cause problems within the family. The whole question of trust is paramount here, and acting in an honorable and respectful way, particularly when age differences are pronounced, will be vitally important for psychological well-being.

ADVICE: Stay as objective as possible. Honor your commitments. Be conscious of the role you are playing, and act with sensitivity and awareness.

Well-Rounded

These two are likely to establish a deep emotional bond. The Libra II-Sagittarius II relationship is often highly intimate, and conducive to personal expression. It is often well rounded, with each partner offering something of great benefit to the other. Libra II's can be influential in bringing their Sagittarius II partners into a more meaningful relationship with society, and Sagittarius II's can encourage Libra II's to express their own individuality and to feel less compelled to please others. Their complementary strengths and intense rapport make this an unusually healthy and vibrant matchup. Proceeding from this basis, these two are able to place the relationship in a meaningful social context without compromising their fundamental beliefs.

No matter how perfunctory the introduction or how superficial the initial involvement, love affairs here can be very meaningful. This relationship continues to broaden and deepen, and to encourage self-actualization for both partners; these two evolve together, creating a bond that is difficult to break. It can be quite natural for marriage to be a further step for these lovers, but it should not be taken for granted that personal development will continue at such a steady pace after the knot is tied.

Family matchups and friendships between Libra II's and Sagittarius II's can be extremely close, marked by deep empathy and affection. But claiming attitudes may also surface here, with accompanying jealousies and dependencies. The challenge in such relationships is to maintain an open atmosphere that allows for individual expression, since Sagittarius II's, if denied this, will lose their most essential character trait and eventually become deeply frustrated.

Professional relationships between Libra II's and Sagittarius II's work best if confined to freelance and entrepreneurial endeavors where maximum independence is assured. Although obligations must be met, each partner should have well-defined areas of responsibility that will not be encroached upon by the other.

ADVICE: Maintain your individuality, and beware of claiming attitudes. Compromise just enough. Remember to encourage each other's personal and spiritual growth.

Grounded Skill and Feeling

This relationship focuses on balancing technical proficiency with an instinctive approach to creative endeavors. One of the more important decisions these two will make is whether to be competitors or to join forces in a common enterprise. While Libra II's can furnish the psychological awareness and attention to detail that Sagittarius III's lack, the Libra II tendency to procrastinate is countered by Sagittarius III ambition, drive and intuition. Generally these two do best when they sacrifice personal gain to the good of the relationship, joining forces to create something of lasting value. The Libra II–Sagittarius III relationship will rarely continue uninterrupted but will follow a more erratic off-again, on-again pattern.

Love affairs involving these two are usually more successful than marriages—unconditional commitment is seldom in the cards here. Both partners have a tendency to become involved romantically, emotionally or sexually with third parties, which can have the effect, briefly, of enriching their primary relationship with each other. At the same time, however, such involvements, unfortunately, do not enhance the longevity of the relationship. Friendships usually depend on the amount of time the partners are willing to invest, for their individual schedules tend to be hectic. Characteristically, these two will find small blocks of time when they can be alone and share thoughts and feelings without being interrupted. In the family sphere, Libra II–Sagittarius III sibling matchups can be quite volatile and competitive. Parent-child relationships can bring out the stricter and more detached side of both the Libra II and the Sagittarius III parent, fostering a judgmental and critical attitude toward their offspring. The principal challenge here will be encouraging feelings of acceptance and open channels of communication. Work relationships are best if somewhat detached, with each partner fulfilling his or her work quota and not asking for too much help from the other. Although such co-workers may display natural and relaxed attitudes toward each other, they should perhaps avoid too much personal contact. Much depends on whether these two are involved in the actual production of something or not.

ADVICE: Make some lasting decisions, pro or con; commitment is more important than you think. Don't miss an opportunity to join forces.

THE CUSP OF PROPHECY

Fever Pitch

This is a passionate and emotionally complex matchup. The partners' dark sides are activated here, bringing feelings to a fever pitch. Although there is a marked empathy between these two, the relationship can become a battleground, with conflicts arising from unacknowledged erotic fantasies or desires. Should this be a relationship that does not permit the expression of such intense feelings, frustration and animosity are the inevitable results. In this case it's best for these two to avoid each other. This is especially true for Libra II's, who are unused to this kind of scenario. Seeing the darker aspects of their natures at work could prove too great a shock.

Deep and lasting friendships, love affairs or marriages—perhaps even all three—can be in the cards for the Libra II–Sagittarius-Capricorn relationship. Psychological projections are so intense here that the boundaries of the partners' personalities are often blurred, making it impossible for either individual to form a clear idea of him- or herself without the other. Although each ultimately has the other's best interests in mind, this is no guarantee that they will act fairly or sensibly. For periods of time, a more platonic arrangement can work, giving partners a rest and a grain of objectivity. Their frustrations and fantasies may run out of hand, however, in the end plunging them back into a sexual relationship. The most difficult task for these two interpersonally will be establishing and observing their own boundaries. If this isn't possible, separation may be the only possible solution that guarantees the self-preservation of both.

The feeling of being unable to live either with or without each other comes to the fore in family matchups. Love-hate or, at the very least, like-dislike polarities are common here, creating an emotional seesaw that affects partners and relatives alike. Work relationships between Libra II's and Sagittarius-Capricorns are unlikely to achieve the stability necessary for building a career together.

ADVICE: Strive for objectivity, and consider your own survival—ask yourself if you're happy with things as they are. Meditate deeply, make a decision, then act.

Getting Off the Ground

The greatest challenge for this couple is to overcome a tendency to be uncommunicative. Should this block be great enough, it's unlikely the relationship will get off the ground. Assuming that it does, however, considerable energy will have to be expended to keep lines of communication open and operable. At heart, Capricorn I's may not really approve of Libra II's, seeing them as social and thus superficial creatures—not people to be taken seriously. Moreover, since Libra II's are likely to do what feels good and are not particularly bound by society's standards for moral behavior, their Capricorn I partners may condemn them as eccentric—Libra II's will not enjoy many aspects of a relationship that is uptight and judgmental.

Should this pair be physically attracted to one another, their relationship may still not go far beyond the early stages for the reasons above. Marriage can result only if Capricorn I's can be convinced of the seriousness of Libra II intentions. In reality, they might benefit substantially from the social savvy that Libra II's have to offer, while Libra II's could profit from Capricorn I financial and practical acumen. The relationship may supply both partners with a great deal of what they need, even if it's not exactly what they want.

Family relationships in this combination usually suffer from mutually disapproving attitudes. Both individuals will have to work very hard to accept one another as they are and to withhold judgment of their behavior. Friendships tend to be more understanding, with differences a source of interest and delight rather than condemnation.

At work, things proceed most smoothly when Libra II taste and psychological insight meld with Capricorn I leadership capabilities and hard-headed pragmatism. Energetic enterprises in which Libra II's handle design, buying, marketing or public relations while Capricorn I's deal with production, sales or money management can be highly successful.

ADVICE: What you need can prove more valuable than what you want. Work toward greater acceptance and a lessening of judgmental attitudes. Utilize differences.

A Decided Edge

Capricorn II's often occupy the dominant role in this combination. Libra II's may appreciate the relationship or not, but it may well arouse their rebelliousness. Astrologically, Libra II and Capricorn II lie in square aspect to each other (90° apart in the zodiac), and as such they are expected to disagree—these two will experience quite a bit of tension and friction. There is often a choice here: either the partners can fritter away such contentious energy in endless squabbling, or they can use it constructively, to move the relationship forward, possibly in social, creative, technical or commercial spheres.

Love affairs between these two have a decided edge to them. Sexual tension may be a prominent feature here, and can lead to either frustration or fulfillment. Outright emotional warfare is possible at times; the danger here is that an ever-expanding spiral of excitement will be necessary to the partners' satisfaction. Marriages tend to be highly ambitious, with both partners striving together for greater social prestige or recognition—a use of the tensions inherent in the combination to the partners' mutual advantage. Care must be taken to avoid applying this edge to child-rearing, however. Capricorn II's and Libra II's may become good friends, even if their relationship originated as a competitive or adversarial one. The relationship can find itself engaged in adventure and risk-taking activities—these two are magnetically drawn toward outright danger. In parent-child relationships where Capricorn II's have the dominant role, Libra II's will often be aroused to rebellion, but such situations do not inevitably escalate into open warfare. With understanding and, often, the intervention of a third family member, both partners can come to see the advantages of their getting along, and thus be able to settle differences rationally. In the professional sphere, the Libra II–Capricorn II combination will often aim for the top within its chosen field, achieving the highest levels of expertise and success. Personal disagreements and incompatibilities don't usually enter the picture, being put aside in favor of harmonious cooperation. When slowdowns and breakdowns occur, patience often wears thin, and the tensions underlying the relationship can be dramatically revealed.

ADVICE: Put tension and edginess to the best use possible. Limit the scope of arguments; don't reject the advice of a peacemaker. Take necessary precautions.

The Other Side of the Fence

This relationship is imbued with contrasts—its energy can shift from the known to the unknown, from the potential to the kinetic and, often, from the acceptable to the questionable. Harnessing such energy can make the relationship a powerful force for change in whatever social, family or professional context it finds itself. The Capricorn III tendency to dominate comes to the fore here, but only if Libra II's give their partners the chance to exercise it. Libra II's are quick on their feet, and their often radical stance can pose a real threat to more solid, sure and slower-thinking Capricorn III's. Yet the danger Capricorn III's face here is more subtly subversive than powerfully confrontational, since Libra II's may be influential in eroding their more conservative position, thereby freeing them to act.

Libra II's are likely to lead their Capricorn III partners through the labyrinths of love, introducing them to many earthly delights and physical pleasures. In this respect, Capricorn III's usually prove to be eager, enthusiastic students. Marriages between these two can be surprisingly stable, but also very broad-minded.

Libra II and Capricorn III relatives can have violent arguments over politics and social issues when their respective radical and conservative viewpoints clash. Such resistance to each other's ideas may continue for years, and will be viewed warily, but with some humor, by other family members. Libra II–Capricorn III friendships are less common than friendly rivalries or even serious enmities, since too often these individuals find themselves on different sides of the fence.

In the commercial sector, the Libra II–Capricorn III business partnership or co-worker matchup can be highly dynamic. But Capricorn III's may eventually resent having to shoulder the brunt of the hard work, since Libra II's are slippery customers when it comes to meeting fixed responsibilities and work quotas.

ADVICE: Equalize the work load. Present your views objectively, and respect the beliefs of others. Subversion can be positive but is a dangerous tool.

THE CUSP OF MYSTERY & IMAGINATION
CAPRICORN-AQUARIUS CUSP

A Hornet's Nest

This lively matchup is likely to lend its sparkling energy to any group of which it is a part. Because of its highly independent nature, however, the relationship may not be able to fulfill fixed responsibilities or meet rigid schedules, and does best in organizations where it is free to determine its own working schedule—within acceptable limits. These two can become extremely cantankerous and rebellious if treated unkindly or unfairly, or if they see an innocent third party receiving harsh treatment. There is a bit of the champion and protector of the downtrodden and disenfranchised here, for nothing will arouse these partners to fury more quickly than seeing someone deprived of his or her rights.

Love affairs between Libra II's and Capricorn-Aquarians develop as fast as a summer thunderstorm and may pass just as quickly. Quick, sharp responses betray the combination's emotional sensitivity. Generally, fiery sexual interactions lessen considerably in their intensity in marriages or longer-term commitments, which, in fact, may do a great deal to help stabilize this relationship.

In the family sphere, parent-child relationships of either variation will have to develop patience, especially because of a shared tendency to fly off the handle when faced with small irritations. Learning not to let the partners push each other's emotional buttons so easily is paramount to maintaining a modicum of peace and harmony. Friendships in this combination are often devoted to having fun and keeping it light. This duo generally steers away from causing problems for each other, but, if criticized or attacked by outsiders, like a disturbed hornet's nest they will give their opponents more than they bargained for.

Libra II–Capricorn-Aquarius work relationships are perhaps most successful when partners are self-employed and engaged in service-oriented endeavors, or even in the social services. Troubleshooting and consulting are specialties of this team, since they are especially quick in isolating problems and solving them.

ADVICE: Quiet down a bit—find a space for meditation and reflection. Don't react so quickly; develop objectivity and patience. Discharge responsibilities.

The Same Wavelength

There is an ease of communication that approaches the telepathic in this relationship. These partners are on the same wavelength; they are so closely aligned that the principal problem here may be their shared tendency to make unwarranted assumptions when anticipating each other's wishes. Furthermore, each may have the attitude that he or she knows what is best for the other in any given situation. Thus the relationship is an interesting combination of freedom and oppression, liberation and manipulation. Overall, the situation could be vastly improved if the partners were more firmly grounded and less engaged in mental gymnastics.

In love affairs, Libra II's and Aquarius I's often find each other highly desirable, and their passions are likely to run high. Possessiveness and jealousy are to be expected here, making noisy rows all too common. This usually proves to be healthy behavior, however—by clearing the air, the partners can for the most part avoid frustration. Both of these attractive individuals will be tempted to stray and will also be favored by more predatory types interested in a quick fling. When married, Libra II–Aquarius I couples are likely to attract a needy third party, often a friend, who will seek to instigate a love triangle. This may have disastrous effects on the primary relationship. Friendships in this combination are sometimes too close. If they are to remain healthy, the partners will have to take regular breaks from one another, so that they can further their development as individuals and also interact with others. Relationships that can observe moderation and pace themselves will avoid burnout and may remain intact for many years. Parent-child relationships in this combination can be outstanding, with affection, admiration, empathy and acceptance all in abundance. Two such volatile individuals may fight like cats and dogs, of course, either on occasion or regularly, but such confrontations largely serve to sharpen wits and will ultimately bring partners closer together. In the professional sphere, co-worker pairs work well together but must beware of being split over demands for individual recognition and advancement. These two will also generate a profusion of ideas, but few of them will be realized.

ADVICE: Give each other enough space. Beware of predators. You may not be as free as you think. Use your communicative gifts prudently.

A Merry Chase

These two are likely to lead each other on a merry chase. Free spirits not easily caught, each makes a worthy quarry for the other. This does not mean that an adversarial relationship is the theme here. Libra II's and Aquarius II's garner satisfaction from their unusual dance, which will often be a verbal one. Since Libra II and Aquarius II form a trine aspect to each other in the zodiac (lying 120° apart), their relationship is a pleasant and easy one. It is also highly original and versatile. Aquarius II's are especially elusive, and it is never easy for Libra II's to get them firmly in hand. Returning a sense of freedom to each other in the midst of a relationship will bring out the best in this duo.

Love affairs and marriages here are extremely complex matchups indeed. It will usually be impossible for the empathic Libra II–Aquarius II couple to lead a conventional life together, since their highly original personalities demand unusual alternatives. Distributing household chores, organizing working patterns, keeping financial records—all of these may be handled in an out-of-the-ordinary and somewhat unpredictable way. Generally these two follow their impulses, doing things on the spur of the moment. Children of such a couple may well prove the most responsible members of the family.

In the social and work spheres, Libra II's and Aquarius II's may be friends and co-workers, but their ability to stay in each other's presence for very long may be limited. If the partners are required to be constant in their attitudes and feelings, these relationships will inevitably feel the strain. Libra II–Aquarius II sibling or parent-child combinations lend fun and life to any family gathering. Ultraconservative and dour relatives can be made unbelievably uptight by this duo, which delights in provoking and ridiculing intolerant attitudes.

ADVICE: Strive for consistency. Stick to your plans—spontaneity is not always a desirable trait. Keep combative urges under control.

Learning to Be

This relationship is actively involved in a search for happiness—not an easy contentment, but an active and dynamic striving that is in itself fulfilling. The danger here is that a kind of nervous exhaustion may set in; for this determined pair, the means can become an end in itself. Libra II's can prove to be an inspirational force in the lives of Aquarius III's, helping to bring their unconscious desires more fully into the open and aiding them in the process of maturation. Aquarius III's are grateful for such a relationship, which acknowledges their worth as individuals and recognizes the significance of their efforts at growth. With all this striving, however, these two would do well to learn how to relax, to turn off all that mental clatter and simply be in the moment.

Love affairs in this combination are somewhat adoring. Both Libra II's and Aquarius III's regard their matchup as bordering on the sacred, and in their reverence for it they may fail to recognize problems when they arise. Should they be completely blind to the relationship's failings, they may experience a rude shock should it one day prove nonfunctional. Marriages between these two are more soberingly realistic, and less susceptible to profound disillusionment.

Family relationships and friendships here are chatty, and partners appreciate a good bit of gossip every now and then. This is a forgivable failing, however, when one considers how considerable their work load may be, at least for short periods of time—neither of them has the will to sustain a combined effort over the long haul. Workwise, Libra II and Aquarius III colleagues and business partners are likely to need a tremendous amount of variety; both bore easily and regularly change direction. A lack of intuition too often results in such a relationship wasting its energies in an effort to reach a goal it never aspired to in the first place. Consequently, more emphasis on practicalities, thorough planning and perseverance are needed if this duo is ever to achieve its stated objectives.

ADVICE: Stay on the path—don't be so easily sidetracked. Scale back your work efforts to a moderate level. Keep to your initial resolve if possible.

THE CUSP OF SENSITIVITY
AQUARIUS-PISCES CUSP

Reaching for the Stars

This is a relationship that reaches for the stars—perhaps an appropriate image for a matchup that begins in the physical realm and strives for the metaphysical. Highly ebullient, the Libra II–Aquarius-Pisces matchup is expansive in both plans and outlook and is rarely willing to compromise on even a single point. As long as the partners share the same perspective, things go well enough between them, even if worldly success isn't quickly forthcoming. But when cracks begin to appear in the relationship's ideological foundations, trouble can be expected. Recriminations, anger and resentment are all likely to rear their ugly heads.

Love affairs in this combination are highly idealistic, but also frank and sensual. Usually of great benefit to each other psychologically, the partners are often able to work through childhood problems and hang-ups through conscious role-playing, using each other to represent authority figures and others who caused difficulty in the past. As long as this process is undertaken with full awareness, the likelihood of healing is great. Marriage is generally the next step for a relationship as solid and unswerving in its commitment as this one.

Although Libra is an air sign and Aquarius-Pisces an air-water combination, the Libra II–Aquarius-Pisces relationship is ruled by fire, here symbolizing intuition and initiative. In work efforts these matchups do well when initiating projects and setting up new organizations; the partners are not always equally adept at maintaining them, however, and may leave others in charge while they go on to the next thing. Familial relationships in this combination often grow impatient and angry with other relatives who seek to restrict their efforts or rein in their idealism. As friends, Libra II's and Aquarius-Pisces are extremely optimistic, and as a result may not see trouble when it is coming their way.

ADVICE: Don't blind yourself to the truth. While following your dream, keep your feet on the ground. Be more patient and less intractable.

The Right Time

This can be one of those relationships where everything the partners touch seems to turn to gold. Working its own special brand of magic, this combination is especially adept at turning disadvantage into advantage, leaving observers with their mouths gaping in astonishment. Turning the miraculous into an everyday occurrence is possible here, but, as with any sleight-of-hand, the explanation may be surprisingly simple. These two are simply in tune with the workings of chance and are often fully open to things turning their way without being overly expectant or anxious about them doing so. This relationship has a feeling for kairos—that is, the right time to attempt something—and for the workings of synchronicity.

Such luck is no indication that these two will necessarily achieve easy success interpersonally. A lot of hard work is often required for Libra II's and Pisces I's to come to a deep understanding and acceptance of each other. Fortunately, they have a great deal in common, particularly their aesthetic sense, love of harmony and need for affection on a daily basis. In marriages they may not be demanding enough—as spouses they may be content to remain at the same social, financial and developmental level for years on end. Learning how to be more forceful in demanding the best for themselves will involve not only developing willpower but also learning to break the habit of procrastination.

It is in the professional sphere that this relationship may achieve its greatest success. The Libra II–Pisces I business matchup has a real talent for sensing the mood of the times and knowing what others want and need. Because of their nonthreatening approach, they are often able to inspire trust in others, who tend to believe what they say. Family relationships and friendships are sharing and partners are sympathetic to each others' needs.

ADVICE: Don't be satisfied merely with what comes your way. Work on building initiative and willpower—visualize what you want and go for it.

Eyeing the Future

This combination has a sixth sense when it comes to a knowledge of what might be lurking just around the corner. The relationship is especially interested in the future and usually very good at predicting it. An interest in science fiction, fantasy literature and utopian ideas is often present here. Libra II's add their knowledge of human behavior to the Pisces II store of technical, artistic and philosophical information, filling the relationship's data banks to the bursting point.

Lest this relationship be categorized as an exclusively intellectual one, it should be noted that it shows no less interest in the pleasures of the table and the bed, adding a strong element of sensuality to the matchup. Love affairs and marriages are highly satisfying, and the partners try to balance their theoretical and practical interests. Reading books on food is usually a prelude to cooking and eating, those on sex to lovemaking. Because Libra II and Pisces II form a quincunx aspect in the zodiac (they lie 150° apart), astrology forecasts some instability here. A heightened nervousness, worry or emotional insecurity is to be expected, but this often increases the partners' excitement, and the corresponding reward.

Libra II and Pisces II friends may quite possibly work together, but do not need to, since they are quite capable of amusing themselves in a wide variety of endeavors. These two can rely on each other in a pinch. Family members in this combination may experience problems getting chores done, and often ignore domestic problems that need attention.

In the professional sphere, this pair can form an outstanding working relationship. Although the partners' interests may already run in the same direction, the matchup is enhanced by their ability to get along, and to serve side by side on a daily basis. These two will do well in positions that require trend-spotting and forecasting skills, as well as in the area of researching and developing new products or techniques.

Down the Corridors of Time

The repercussions of the relationship between Libra II's and Pisces III's can echo down the corridors of time. Romantic and inspired to the extreme, this relationship also has intensely pragmatic aspects that allow for a certain magic in professional and other ties as well. But the partners can get carried away with each other, so that they neglect societal criticism and opposition. Overconfidence and in some cases a certain arrogance typifies this pair's attitude toward life, which may cause nagging problems in the long run, even though things seem to be going well for the present. The Libra II–Pisces III relationship can arouse jealousies and animosities, although it has many admirers.

Love affairs between Libra II's and Pisces III's can be ultraromantic. Giving their all for love, the partners seldom hold back emotionally or sexually. Such passionate relationships don't often lead to marriage, however, for they invariably lose that special spark, and either break off or continue on a more ordinary plane. As the partners age, they inevitably look back on their more active years with a mixture of nostalgia and regret.

Libra II and Pisces III friends and lovers are able to work together, often putting some of their inspirational energy into mutual business, artistic or social activities. Such efforts need not be big moneymakers; for the idealism of the matchup dictates working on projects that both partners truly believe in, heart and soul. Often impractical, this pair's schemes sound good at the outset but don't often come to fruition, and in retrospect seem almost too good for this world.

In the family sphere, parent-child matchups of either combination tend to be affectionate and empathic. Sensitivity to each other's moods and wishes can be a problem, since each feels the other's pain or distress so deeply. Both will have to strive for more objectivity, and in adolescence should work to develop their individuality, so that both of them may proceed along their respective paths without encumbrance.

ADVICE: Give each other enough breathing room—don't stunt individual growth and development. Don't be oversensitive to each other's feelings.

Ceaseless Repartee

This relationship is marked by a kind of instant recognition—Libra III's will know that they have met someone of like mind, with whom they can communicate openly and honestly. Yet most Libra III couples project a cool image, without much display of their feelings or talk about what is bothering them. This is often because they themselves do not know what is on their own minds, and in fact this relationship does not rate high in self-awareness. Libra III's are geared for action, so if the relationship is becalmed by the malaise of indecision it can truly suffer. Dealing with anxieties and depressions will be very difficult for this duo, since neither is likely to be able to drag the other out of a well of loneliness or despair.

Libra III lovers will have a difficult time of it, since their feelings will not always gel in the romantic and sexual spheres. Often out-of-synch, their interaction can suffer from misunderstandings, misplaced energies and mixed signals. If both partners accept the increased and fixed responsibilities of marriage, however, the relationship will benefit. These two can also make conscientious and dedicated parents.

Friendships here can be truly outstanding, as long as the level of responsibility and expectation is not unduly high. The ability of these two to have fun together is practically unlimited, and their quick minds and agile tongues engage easily in almost ceaseless repartee. Arguments will rarely get out of hand here, particularly if each party respects the other's viewpoint.

Family is not really Libra III's thing. Two relatives born in this week can liven up any gathering—too often, unfortunately, by not seeing eye to eye; their arguments and blowups can be extremely disruptive. In the workplace too, their dramatic shows of affect may not help get a project completed, proving more counterproductive than entertaining.

ADVICE: Be more contemplative. Get to know yourself better. Don't be afraid to show your true feelings. Your image is not so important.

THE CUSP OF DRAMA & CRITICISM
LIBRA-SCORPIO CUSP

A Quest for Power

The partners in this relationship must be careful about getting carried away by ambition and the quest for power; their combination often sacrifices sympathy, kindness and love for striving, domination and control. Since neither of them is willing to admit to vulnerability or weakness, their relationship is often characterized by a certain coolness, an avoidance of open emotion. Both partners are extremely aware of the outward impression they convey and are intent on having their relationship play a proper role in its social milieu. Ultimately, the thirst for power or control could become the partners' undoing.

Critical Libra-Scorpios may directly confront more dominant Libra III's, trying to bring them down a peg. Whether as lovers, friends or mates, these two will often engage in one-upmanship, trying to prove their verbal, intellectual or physical superiority. Battles may rage between them, but not vindictively; each wants more to surpass than to defeat or humiliate the other. Basically, in fact, each really just wants to be respected by the other, the goal being not to rule but simply to be treated as an equal. These two may feel great affection for each other at certain points in their relationship, but they may be afraid to show it, considering it a sign of weakness. Letting each other know that they care, then, is the challenge here. Partners who can show how they feel are displaying more self-confidence and assurance than partners who cannot.

Libra III–Libra-Scorpio parent-child matchups of either possible variation often do not work out because of excessive expectations. Both parents and children can try to push their partners beyond their potential, causing frustration and, eventually, the relationship's breakdown.

Work relationships may be obsessed with overcoming the opposition and rising to the top of the heap. These stressful efforts are fraught with perils for the pair, not the least danger being the blame and rejection that lie in store for the weaker and less successful partner. The preservation of true equality between partners, however, can contribute greatly to mutual advancement.

ADVICE: Mute your power drives. Cultivate sympathy and understanding. Let things go as they may. Give up childish urges to win at any cost.

SCORPIO I

The Elitist Position

Partaking equally of the Libra element of air (indicating thought) and the Scorpio element of water (indicating feelings), this pair tries to find a balance between intellectual and emotional expression but is usually weighted more toward the intellectual. Since Libra III's and Scorpio I's are often united by a discriminating and critical view of the world, their relationship may also focus on good taste, at least as they see it; part and parcel of this attitude may be a derisive or contemptuous attitude toward those with more common preferences. Thus this relationship risks leading its partners toward isolating themselves in an elitist position.

In love affairs, partners are unlikely to take each other to the deeper levels of desire. Although their sexual interaction can be intense, it is characteristically unemotional and a bit selfish, with both partners out for what they can get. Romance does not usually figure prominently either here or in marriage, which is often remarkably objective in its outlook.

Friendships are usually better off going their own way than striving to be at the center of a social group. These partners' highly individual, strong-willed attitudes succeed best when concentrating on specific areas of expertise in which Libra III feeling for the big picture and Scorpio I attentiveness to detail can dovetail.

Parent-child matchups in this combination can be quite stressful and demanding. Rejecting attitudes are likely to be prominent, and it may be many years before these two can really accept each other as they are. Interestingly, though, they don't much approve of anyone else, either, so in the end they favor each other by default. If they fail to put limits on their conflicts and disagreements, the relationship may reach a point of no return beyond which any reconciliation may be difficult or impossible. Similarly, boss-employee relationships in this combination are likely to be difficult; co-worker relationships are more successful, though the partners must beware of belittling their fellow employees, and of unduly asserting their superiority.

ADVICE: See things from another point of view. Don't raise yourself up too high above other people. Cultivate a few common tastes. Simple feelings will take you a long way.

SCORPIO II

For Better and for Worse

This relationship contains a powerful chemistry for establishing an uncompromising position—it often focuses on taking a stand, which it will fearlessly defend. It also has the capacity to win the hearts and minds of other people and is likely to find itself at the center of a social, family or professional group. The Libra III–Scorpio II relationship is unlikely to back down from any challenge from outside; these two will present a united front. Internally, however, the matchup may be bedeviled by disagreements and dissenting opinions from the start. Often such contrasts give it an intense dynamism, but they may also periodically threaten to break it asunder.

In matters of love, the outgoing qualities of Libra III's and the introverted tendencies of Scorpio II's can come into direct conflict. At first the relationship can thrive on such differences, but over time, this temperamental incompatibility may prove insurmountable. The Scorpio II may find the Libra III superficial and self-aggrandizing, while the Libra III may be unable to cope with the Scorpio II's moods and depressions. Marriage is a big step for this relationship and should be considered seriously before being attempted. Should such a marriage wind up on the rocks, the partners must be prepared for a painful breakup marked by agonizing on-again, off-again oscillations rather than any real finality. Friendships and same-sex sibling relationships in this combination can be very strong, both competitive and supportive. Against a common enemy, these two are a model of solidarity. When such a threat is absent, however, unity is likely to disappear in a flurry of squabbling. Rather than relying on parents or other friends to settle their disagreements, Libra III's and Scorpio II's generally insist on taking care of things themselves. These two can be an unbeatable professional team. Commercial endeavors bring out their best side—their differences fade, and the relationship assumes primary importance. Career recognition generally enhances rather than undermines unity, but at a certain point working partners may make a rational decision to go off on their own and try something new.

ADVICE: Assess your position objectively. Agree to disagree. Limit your responsibilities. Preserve unity in good times as well as bad.

Declaring a Truce

This matchup can be very deceptive: many will have the impression that Libra III's and Scorpio III's get along well, since their public persona is usually so positive. But this is often a facade. Their relationship is actually likely to be intense, conflicted and competitive. Although rarely shown in public, the degree of struggle here can be considerable, with each partner seeking to best the other, emotionally, mentally or physically. These two may be obsessively caught up with each other, so that their relationship sometimes threatens to engulf all other aspects of their lives. They may consequently need to spend long periods of time apart. When together, moreover, they may need to declare a formal truce.

Love affairs between Libra III's and Scorpio III's can be exciting but emotionally wrenching. When the tension becomes too great, these partners, whether separately or as a couple, have a tendency to seek solace in drink or drugs. Should the relationship itself become addictive, many years may be needed to work out the problems engendered. But it also happens that marriages between Libra III's and Scorpio III's reach a status quo, which, although neither inspiring nor even satisfactory from a psychological point of view, may have remarkable longevity.

Libra III's and Scorpio III's are more likely to become rivals than friends. Even when they are on the same side, outright hostility can flare up between them and may seriously impair any group effort of which they are a part. Sibling rivalries between these two are also common, with Libra III dominating tendencies meeting their match in the powerfully controlling streak of Scorpio III's. If compromise is not reached, the family's stability may be eroded. Perhaps the trickiest area for Libra III–Scorpio III interactions is the career sector. When pulling together, these two make a formidable combination, but should competitive urges arise, they can be split asunder in an instant. There is generally little loyalty or love between these two, but when they realize that it is in their best interest to cooperate, they may be able to get along.

ADVICE: Consider the good of the group, yet be honest about your feelings. Continuing at any cost isn't always the best thing. If possible, call a truce.

Eye on Each Other

The focus of this relationship is often learning one's craft as well as possible. Although competitive energies are part and parcel of the relationship, they are rarely destructive or out of control. In fact they usually serve to spur partners on to learn from each other and share what they know. Whether they serve together in the same organization or simply acknowledge each other as colleagues or relatives, these two will always keep an eye on each other, watching carefully for indications that may have personal meaning for themselves. This relationship is rarely the most important factor in the life of either partner, but it can bring about a sort of mutual education.

Love affairs between these two are often free and nonbinding. The tie will probably be temporary or passing; it will rarely get heavy or possessive. If it does lead to marriage, however, its relaxed nature may help it to establish itself firmly. Libra III–Scorpio-Sagittarius marriages often feature a considerable age difference between the partners. The older of the two may play the role of teacher, the younger that of apt and avid student. Some pain and grief is inevitable if the older member passes away, or if the younger finds it necessary to throw off the elder's influence and go off on his or her own.

Teacher-student relationships, in fact, whether in a one-on-one life encounter or formalized in a school or college, are strong in this combination. More often cast in the teacher's role, Scorpio-Sagittarians are able to pass on a great deal of philosophical, technical and professional wisdom to their Libra III students. In other career settings, Libra III's and Scorpio-Sagittarians are capable of working steadily side by side for years in the same organization. In friendships and sibling pairs, they are enriched by common experiences in which life is the teacher and the Libra III–Scorpio-Sagittarius relationship is the student. The meaningful bonds formed in this way usually continue intact through the years.

ADVICE: Beware of being too easily influenced. Maintain your individuality. Share as much as possible, and avoid competition. Remain sympathetic.

Beneficial Dependencies

This relationship is often a serious one, and, if so, neither partner will deny its importance, particularly if it occurs during the mature years, when it can be fully appreciated. The combination almost always involves some dependency, yet is in no way debilitating or addictive; in fact, it is strengthening, since each partner is likely to have a total (but objective) involvement with the other's needs in any time of crisis. Furthermore, when that demanding time has passed, the partners will feel free to engage in matters unrelated to each other's lives, although they will remain involved.

Love affairs between Libra III's and Sagittarius I's can be rewarding both physically and emotionally. Libra III indecision and Sagittarius I temper can create difficulties, and impatience may break out when the relationship is under stress, but the understanding and commitment found in this pair will generally overcome such problems. Clashes between these strong-willed individuals are inevitable, but often result in a renewed sense of purpose. The greatest challenge for love affairs and marriages often lies in the spiritual realm, since the relationship may involve a certain gap or lack that can only be filled by selfless service and belief in a higher power.

Marriages and work relationships are favored here. Libra III and Sagittarius I usually share moral beliefs, and thus proceed with a common underlying sense of what behavior is correct and what is not. Ignoring or neglecting this mutually understood code will not be tolerated, and the penalties meted out will usually be severe, even running to the termination of the relationship itself. When attacked from outside, on the other hand, the relationship will not only defend itself admirably but will often mete out severe punishment to the aggressor. Work and family matchups in this combination are often money- and career-oriented to the exclusion of all else. Although they can be commercially profitable, it is vitally important for the partners to develop human values, particularly by cultivating kindness and consideration.

ADVICE: Lower your stress level. Find time to meditate and relax. Quiet your busy mind. Acknowledge a higher power. Develop more patience.

Letting It All Hang Out

The Libra III–Sagittarius II matchup tends to indulge in flamboyant gestures and colorful language, whether negative or positive in attitude—it lets it all hang out. Critical of snobbism and pseudosophistication, this pair can pour scorn and abuse on those who demand exclusive treatment. Yet it may itself be an example of what it condemns, since it often has little sympathy with the needs of the common man, and in fact can be quite selfish and standoffish. Hypocrisy in this and in other areas can be a problem for the relationship, which involves a certain lack of self-awareness.

Love affairs and marriages between these two can be exuberant and fun. Able to get physical without shame or guilt, Libra III's and Sagittarius II's can give themselves wholeheartedly to each other. On the other hand, their unserious attitudes may eventually take them down a trail that leads nowhere, resulting in bewilderment and disillusionment. If this relationship wants to survive, it is essential that it question itself a little, examining its motives and making firm resolves about its behavior.

In family relationships and friendships, both Libra III's and Sagittarius II's may too easily get involved in other people's business. Quick to condemn, as a pair they may be self-righteous, winding up overaggressive and hasty in their judgments. On the other hand, the relationship's tremendous energy and positive spirit can invigorate many projects that have gotten stuck and would otherwise proceed no further.

Work relationships in this combination may find the Libra III impatient with the Sagittarius II's unusual ways of doing things. Furthermore, Sagittarius II's may find Libra III's much too bossy. Unless both partners have their own undisputed areas of business, then, so that they only occasionally have to interact, career matchups are not recommended.

ADVICE: Don't be so quick to condemn. Get to know yourself better. Make firm decisions and stick to them. Give your life more direction and better purpose.

Hearts on Their Sleeves

Attraction and desire play strong roles in this relationship; both partners tend to wear their hearts on their sleeves, and make no bones about liking each other. Still, the question remains as to how deeply these powerful individuals want to get involved, since both are equally unlikely to let themselves be swept away by a passion that will dominate their lives (or at least so they think). In consequence, the relationship may focus on keeping feelings under control, particularly in front of other people. Although the partners may express their emotions in private, in company they will maintain a cooler facade, shrinking from the public acknowledgment of the relationship's meaning that would help to seal its permanence. Commitment, clearly, is an important issue here. Perhaps just because both Libra III's and Sagittarius III's can generally be taken at their word, solemnly dedicating themselves to each other doesn't come easily.

Love affairs here can be tumultuous. This may cause problems: if the partners cannot strictly compartmentalize their strong feelings for each other, their professional, family and social lives will be profoundly affected. They can also expect to experience the full gamut of emotions, which, however, may not always survive their bouts of feeling intact. After a time, in fact, the relationship is likely to show unmistakable signs of wear and tear. Should they marry, this couple must learn moderation and compromise.

Friendships may be more settled, yet also less understanding and flexible. Each partner has high expectations of the other, and disappointment can be severe. Parent-child and sibling matchups in this combination are often empathic, particularly when the partners are of the opposite sex. Protective and understanding, these two may turn to their relationship for solace from life's difficulties.

Two powerhouses like these will rarely see eye to eye in the workplace. Both demand a lot of attention, and both seek to dominate any organization of which they are a part. Perhaps the best that can be done with these two in a work group is to keep them apart; separately, both will have skills to contribute.

ADVICE: Try to relax. Don't take things so seriously. Back off a bit from the leadership stance. Give others a chance. Even out emotions.

October 11–18

THE WEEK OF THEATER
LIBRA III

Blast Off!

This relationship is united by a bond of energy, steady in its intensity, unfailing in its production. Like a turbine running on a river's dammed-up power, it can be counted upon to deliver without letup. The chemistry here is interesting: the relationship often forms when Sagittarius-Capricorns pick out their most reliable ally, formidable adversary or apt student as the target of their formidably laserlike powers of concentration. When the Libra III catches fire, the entire relationship ignites, taking off for its destination like a rocket ship. Certain things are clear from the outset: first of all, the correct flight path must be keyed in to the guidance system right at the start. Second, the relationship must be tough enough to stand the enormous gravitational stress it will encounter.

To follow this analogy a little longer: love affairs between these two are most stressful upon takeoff and landing—that is, when beginning and ending. During flight, they need only an occasional thrust of power to continue effortlessly on course. Sagittarius-Capricorns will like the fact that once the relationship is launched, it only needs low-maintenance energy from them to keep it going. Libra III's too will be happy not having to make decisions, solve problems or alleviate emergencies. In this way, marriages in this combination can enjoy many pleasant years, although they may have stormy beginnings before their patterns are established. The fear of the relationship's ending, however, can be considerable, and the actual rumblings of breakup can be terrifying. At such points, the partners will tend to hang on, refusing to believe that the trip is over.

Friendships, family relationships and career matchups follow a similar route. Parent-child combinations may have a rough time of it in childhood, then suddenly gel in late adolescence and early adulthood. Friendships and working relationships must likewise get over initial dislikes and irritations before continuing on course.

ADVICE: Get over the rough spots. Conquer your fear of failure. Don't expect too much—take it as it comes. Meet emergencies intelligently.

Discarding the Outworn

This relationship has an unusual way of doing things; its partners will often be found reacting against outworn styles, ideologies or beliefs, and trying to substitute something more meaningful in their place. Within its circle of friends or family, this pair is likely to be a force for change. Although Capricorn I's tend toward the conservative, they will appreciate the relationship for giving them the space to voice some of their more far-out thoughts. Libra III's, for their part, will enjoy having a strong partner on whom to lean occasionally, as well as the grand drama created by the relationship's rebelliousness.

Love affairs and marriages between Libra III's and Capricorn I's are usually of the responsible sort. Yet these partners will not hesitate to fly in the face of tradition rather than compromise their belief in their relationship, or knuckle under to society's demands. If the relationship is a love affair, then, it can easily be a secret or illicit one, although both partners will usually treat any third party involved with as much consideration as possible. Should the lovers marry, they are apt to work out their own special arrangement, which, although not always easily comprehensible to the outside world, works well enough for them. Such marriages generally work for the common good rather than following their own selfish interests.

As co-workers, this pair may fail to achieve its maximum impact if it spends too much of its energy on fighting bosses and opposing the status quo. Companies and other organizations may finally give up on a team in this combination as more trouble than it's worth. Libra III-Capricorn I siblings tend to rebel against parents and other family figures, usually for reasons more ideological than personal. As friends, pairs in this combination have no problem standing up for themselves against authority. Should either party feel dominated or controlled by the other, however, they may fall into frequent disagreements with each other.

ADVICE: Try to make less trouble for others. Learn the value of diplomacy and compromise. Try to bear what other people are saying to you.

THE WEEK OF DETERMINATION
CAPRICORN II

A Tad Misleading

This relationship may perhaps mislead its partners a bit in giving them the feeling of having a lot more freedom than they really do or should. Both partners may be guilty of overweening pride, and thus be at times a trifle arrogant; keeping an eye on reality, and refusing to get carried away by self-importance, are therefore crucial for them. Both Libra III's and Capricorn II's can be strong, self-confident and ambitious individuals, and when they pair up, the relationship that results may synergistically intensify these tendencies and blow their egos all out of proportion. Particularly important to this pair, then, will be an awareness of other people's feelings, and an understanding of the boundaries and limitations that they should not overstep. On the other side of the coin, they will be strongly united by common bonds.

In love affairs, friendships and marriages, neither Libra III's nor Capricorn II's are always able to tolerate the other partner's need to go off alone for a spell. Neither is overly hungry for attention, but there is a limit to the degree to which they can take their relationship for granted—a time will come when they will have to give it some serious input. Both of them must make the effort to break their busy schedules and make time for shared vacations, hobbies and entertainment. Showing care through a thoughtful gift, flowers or a candlelight dinner will do wonders to blow new life into this relationship.

As co-workers, Libra III's and Capricorn II's are capable of sustained effort and high-quality work. There is a tendency, however, for both partners to go their own way—they don't always listen to each other. When one of these two works for the other, whichever of the two is the boss must be careful to treat the employee with respect, never compromising his or her dignity. Likewise, in parent-child relationships in this combination, serious problems can arise if the child is either babied or treated too much like an adult. Kindness works better than sternness here.

ADVICE: Don't kid yourself. Give your partner the proper time and effort. Keep the channels of communication open. Put your ambition on a tight rein.

THE WEEK OF DOMINANCE
CAPRICORN III

Keeping Their Own Individuality

The focus of this relationship may well be independence of thought, manner and speech. Keenly interested in the average person, this pair sometimes sees itself as a staunch protector of the disenfranchised—an image that can, in fact, be true, particularly when the partners are young, a period when their relationship is often marked by quite radical philosophical viewpoints. With advancing age, however, they will forsake or modify many of their ideals in a more conservative direction, a tendency particularly noticeable in Capricorn III's. As the years go by, moreover, they may begin to close off to the world, even while remaining just as open with each other.

Although Capricorn III's generally need to be the boss in most relationships, here that overpowering drive is muted a bit. Nor do powerful Libra III's need to take the helm, as long as they aren't prevented from forwarding their ideas and translating them into action. Capricorn III and Libra III form a square aspect in the zodiac (where they lie 90° apart), a position that can sometimes cause friction and stress, but in this case such irritants most often give the relationship a forward push. The Capricorn III–Libra III combination has a tendency toward procrastination, but its slight impatience can periodically give it a shove, ideally in the right direction.

Love affairs and marriages in this combination are not always completely stable. They may from time to time be rocked by dissension, with the partners stubbornly refusing to give in on most issues. Although these two do have the ability to express love and sympathy, their greater need seems to be keeping their own individuality, so that they will often make a point of not compromising, or will make up only after the argument has subsided. That both partners can be brutally honest may make things better in the long run but is extremely trying in the short term.

Friends and siblings of the same sex are particularly close. Work relationships in this combination do best when the two parties are co-workers rather than business partners or boss-employee pairs.

ADVICE: Soften your stance. Learn the value of diplomacy and compromise. Don't abandon your ideals. Minimize stress whenever possible.

THE CUSP OF MYSTERY & IMAGINATION
CAPRICORN-AQUARIUS CUSP

January 17–22

A Stimulus Requirement

This couple is attracted to innovative ideas and endeavors. Wordplay and witty or caustic repartee are typical here, but this constant verbal or mental activity can strain the relationship. Capricorn-Aquarians love to dream up novel projects, which Libra III's wait in the wings to implement; yet the relationship can be stymied by Capricorn-Aquarius temper, which can stupefy Libra III's, rendering them inactive. They, for their part, may detract from the relationship by simply refusing to see the Capricorn-Aquarius point of view. Given the relationship's emphasis on the mental rather than the physical or emotional, it may not be strong enough to sustain such dynamic interaction.

Romances and marriages in this combination search endlessly for change. Both Libra III's and Capricorn-Aquarians bore easily and require a lot of stimulus—which isn't always for the best, for overstimulation can bring frazzled nerves and, eventually, collapse. Learning to avoid excess, and to be content with moderate activity and interest, is vital to the relationship's health.

Friendships in this combination easily form a mutual-admiration society and often don't run deep. In fact, although these two will enjoy each other's company during good times, they may be unavailable to each other in times of stress or illness. Capricorn-Aquarius parents will probably find their Libra III children highly entertaining but can also be hard on them, seeing them as not really serious about making something of themselves. Libra III parents, on the other hand, can be protective and supportive of their imaginative Capricorn-Aquarian children. In the professional world, this matchup has enough charisma for an army—it can talk anyone into anything. It could do well in public relations, sales or marketing, whether in a freelance or a corporate setting. It could also prosper running a small, aggressive enterprise, but Libra III's and Capricorn-Aquarians should watch the books: they can both be good at making money but are even better at spending it freely, which can make a hash of financial planning.

ADVICE: Find the middle way. Avoid extremes. Scale back your need for stimulation. Find a quiet place within. Seek spiritual values.

Atmospheric Electricity

This one-of-a-kind relationship impresses by its uniqueness. Although it can be enormously original and productive, however, it can equally well be quirky and difficult to reach. Whether it takes a positive tack or immerses itself in its own peculiarities depends not so much on the partners' talents and abilities as on their attitude, and also on when they meet. Should they get together after an experience of rejection and disappointment, for example, they may adopt a to-hell-with-it attitude and escape into a mutually protective relationship. But if they meet when young and unspoiled, they may try to set the world on fire with their own brand of idealism.

In love affairs, Libra III's can be fascinated by their free-spirited Aquarius I partners, who, for their part, may rely heavily on Libra III's for support and direction. Passions can run high here, since the relationship brings out the temperamental aspects of both partners, guaranteeing an electric atmosphere for a good deal of the time. For Libra III's, the relationship will bring out their enjoyment of the full range of their own mental powers; for Aquarius I's, it will emphasize their more sensual side. Marriages are unlikely to have much permanence in the conventional sense but may offer interesting possibilities if the partners are open to them.

In friendships and sibling relationships, creativity appears less in what this relationship produces than in what it embodies. The partners are likely to put all their energy into the relationship itself, which becomes their creative focus. Where others would work on a house, car or educational program, these two may invest time, energy and money in building something solid between them that can survive over the long haul. Disillusionment can hit such idealism like a sledgehammer. Work and business relationships between Libra III's and Aquarius I's can be highly successful artistically but may go bust unless built on a firm financial foundation. These two often want to form their own business but find they need the security that only a larger organization can offer.

ADVICE: Back off a bit—you may be trying too hard. Seek the creative solutions that will be your legacy. Beware of setting yourself up for disappointment.

Casting Fate to the Wind

This highly ambitious combination may go for the top, whether or not the partners' expectations are realistic. The devil-may-care attitude that may prevail here will seem irresponsible to some people but may just show a lot of trust in the workings of chance or destiny. The relationship may encourage its partners to feel they have little to lose and a great deal to gain by casting their fate to the wind. It will allow Libra III's to relax, which they sorely need to do, and will give Aquarius II's the opportunity to get their teeth into substantial projects with the potential to advance their interests. Both partners will want to give their all to a relationship that shows such promise.

Friendships, love affairs and marriages are generally concerned with something greater than pleasure or physical satisfaction: they usually have some sense of purpose, even if the goal is not immediately clear. Over the years, they will eventually reveal their true meaning, which can come as a surprise to the partners but may fulfill a vague feeling they have had all along. Other Libra III and Aquarius II friends and lovers will be quite content with what they have, and have no idea of attaining anything else—yet even here, sudden changes probably lie in wait.

Whether they be competitors or colleagues, rivals or allies, as a professional pair Libra III's and Aquarius II's are a study in contrasts, with Aquarius II's usually proving the more unpredictable of the two. Usually well suited to each other, this pair makes a fascinating study for fellow co-workers. If it appears at the executive level of a company or social organization, progressive change is to be expected. In the family, Libra III–Aquarius II siblings of the same sex can be overdemanding, expecting more from parents and relatives than they can give.

ADVICE: Don't ask more from others than you are prepared to give yourself. Leaving everything up to fate may be taking the easy way out.

THE WEEK OF ACCEPTANCE
AQUARIUS III

An Open-Door Policy

This relationship carries with it a unique brand of generosity, whether of feelings or of finances, and an inherent optimism. Committed to honesty and openness, Libra III's and Aquarius III's will find it difficult to hide things from each other, not so much out of a need to reveal the truth, or a moral imperative, but simply because they prefer it that way. This is partly because their relationship doesn't fixate on details but tries to understand the larger picture, so that any one detail, or secret, may not have that much importance. Although both Libra and Aquarius are air signs, the relationship between them is ruled by fire, which, in this case, indicates following intuition and not holding back.

Generous and spontaneous though the relationship may ultimately be, love, marriage and sibling matchups will put these attitudes to the test. The partners being only human, they may feel jealousy, competition and possessiveness in relation to each other, but they will strive to overcome and let go of such responses, and are usually successful. The feelings between them are seldom of the heavy sort that lead to depressions or power struggles, and should the relationship be a love affair, this can be a great relief for both partners after quite different experiences with other people. They will enjoy this matchup, then. Even so, they may be unwilling to invest what it takes to make a long-lasting relationship possible.

Friendships in this combination are usually less successful than acquaintanceships or other, more casual kinds of companionships. There is an easy trine aspect between Libra III and Aquarius III, which lie 120° apart in the zodiac; in general, then, this duo prefers the casual approach. As co-workers in professional relationships, Libra III's and Aquarius III's may get into trouble when they expect their colleagues or rivals to be as up front as they are. A certain naïveté in the relationship can be counterproductive or worse in the business world.

ADVICE: Let up in your intensity. Be more forgiving and forgetting. Let the good times roll. Don't be uptight, it's only money. Power isn't everything.

Across Space and Time

This highly romantic relationship will often go like a house on fire at the start. Few would predict these two would even like each other, but subtle magnetic feelings draw them together irresistibly. It is one of those relationships in which the partners seem to call out to each other silently across the boundaries of space and time. They may be fated to meet, and once they are in each other's company there seems to be no force in the universe strong enough to keep them apart.

Although fully committed, however, such relationships don't always have staying power. Disappointment and disillusionment will follow any separation or breakup, for which no preparation is generally possible: to this starry-eyed duo, the future stretches out unendingly, replete with all the joys life has to offer. External resistance may be easy for such a pair to handle in the early stages, but the relationship may be worn down over time by a dedicated, purposeful opponent.

As friends, this pair can be mutually protective and extremely understanding of each other's needs. Even so, the requirements of their careers and family life are usually so great that the relationship will show signs of strain over the lack of time being available for it. In the family, Libra III parents may be too demanding and critical of their ultrasensitive Aquarius-Pisces offspring, in whose lives they may occupy an overly dominant role that can continue on into adulthood. Liberation from such attitudes will be difficult.

In the work sphere, co-worker and boss-employee relationships in this combination are not usually destined to succeed, at least not without a struggle. Libra III's are likely to appear overdominant to Aquarius-Pisces, who have their own brand of ambition to express; meanwhile, Aquarius-Pisces may be much too defensive and secretive for Libra III tastes.

ADVICE: Hang in there. Try to see things as they are. Get tough or risk going under. Don't turn a blind eye toward aggressors. Kindness has limits.

Inherent Wisdom

The Libra III–Pisces I relationship has a certain inherent wisdom about it—it often seems to sense where its best interests lie. These two can touch each other's lives at a deep level, and often assume some sort of responsibility for each other. At its best, then, the relationship can be faithful and unified, with the partners sooner or later realizing that their greatest advantage lies in staying together and working for the common good. Unfortunately, this realization may not be forthcoming: one of the partners may break off the relationship in a fit of impatience, or after meeting another person with whom he or she is more totally absorbed.

Love affairs here are somewhat unpredictable, since these two are often preoccupied with their own interests, which can call them away at any moment. When together, though, they have a passionate, sensual time of it. Libra III–Pisces I lovers should seriously consider the further step of marriage, which could well lend greater unity and permanence to their relationship. When meeting a new and interesting person, the partners should share this friendship, introducing the new figure into their social and family circle.

As friends, Libra III's and Pisces I's may be fascinated by gambling, playing the stock market, figuring out odds—by activities, in other words that depend not only on predicting the future but also on backing up one's beliefs with action. Work relationships in this combination can be highly imaginative and productive. Whether collaborating on business, artistic or social projects, both partners will use their strengths—Libra III's to lead, Pisces I's to give spiritual inspiration. Sibling combinations, particularly of the opposite sex, may silently resolve to further the family's interests when young and preserve them when older.

Years of Work

This combination often focuses on forging a strong bond of empathy. Emotional understanding is not immediately forthcoming between Libra III's and Pisces II's, and their relationship usually needs many years of work to build trust and acceptance. It is also troubled by a tendency to take the easy way out—to withdraw or even give up during times of crisis. Although the relationship can be extremely productive and successful, dealing with personal problems is not really its forte.

In love affairs, Pisces II's can become inaccessible just when Libra III's need them most. (In sex particularly, Libra III's can make demands that are too heavy for Pisces II's to meet.) In turn, Libra III's may be unable to handle the emotional needs of Pisces II's or to give them the attention they require. Despite such ups and downs, however, Libra III's and Pisces II's do have a certain magic that could enable them to get along remarkably well. If they can work out certain compromises and adjust to each other in these and other areas, they could even attempt marriage. If not, they had better forget about it.

In parent-child relationships where the Libra III is the parent, there are often tremendous gaps between what the Pisces II child needs and what the Libra III is prepared to provide. A Pisces II in a relationship with a more distant Libra III relative, who can give more freely on a less regular basis, may do much better, with fewer disappointments and frustrated expectations.

Libra III's and Pisces II's often combine friendship with work. As a matter of fact, it may be necessary for them to have a close personal relationship in order to work together well. This can mean spending a lot of time together, perhaps even living and working under the same roof. Between uninterrupted work sessions, it is best for these couples to schedule periods of time apart.

ADVICE: Scale back needs and demands. Don't expect too much. Compromise is crucial to continuing. Don't lose patience; the goal is worthwhile.

Answering the Question

Who is the boss here? The question touches many areas of this relationship. It isn't that there are invariably power struggles between these two, however, but only that the question must be answered. Determining who plays the dominant role at certain times or in certain circumstances is important, since both of these partners will usually respect and follow whichever of them takes the lead. As a matter of fact, the best situation possible is often when this pair itself assumes a commanding role in a group or organization, demanding that Libra III's and Pisces III's share the reins of power equally.

In the zodiac, Libra III and Pisces III lie quincunx to each other (150° apart), which can reinforce a tendency to instability in their love affairs and marriages. And in fact indecision may plague the relationship, with both partners unable to make up their minds on the direction in which they want the relationship to continue, or whether it is to end. In friendships, it can happen that neither party is interested in taking the lead or exerting real power over the other, and this can deprive the relationship of direction, so that it drifts. To get it back on track, either one of its partners may have to make some firm decisions, and carry them through.

Professional and family matchups are often very successful. Giving direction to the group may be a specialty of this pair, whether as executives or siblings. Boss-employee and parent-child matchups in this combination can also be successful if the employees and children, again whether Libra III or Pisces III, are agreeable to their boss or parent's approach. The danger may be that the authority figure exerts an undue influence on those dependent on them for direction, and thus comes to dominate their lives and stunt their individual initiative. The principal challenge for the boss or parent, again of either sign, may be to encourage their employees or children to take more initiative and think for themselves.

ADVICE: Don't be afraid to take the lead. Direction is needed—you may have to supply it. Strengthen your will to avoid indecision.

Letting Go

Libra-Scorpios are not easy people to get along with, and when two of them get together, an extremely complex relationship can result. Demanding and particular, they will find it difficult to live together. If this relationship is to succeed, then, it must feature agreements on matters of, for example, taste—furnishing, design, color. Domestic questions like these can become a whole world of controversy. Add to them others like what diet to follow, where to settle or how to set up financial or tax structures, and this relationship may demand hours, days, even years in endless pro-and-con discussions before any subject is settled.

Some topics can be much easier to deal with. Being open to social gatherings and regular visits from friends is seldom a problem; nor is an endless variety of intellectual discussion and debate. In the latter respect, Libra-Scorpios can be a wonderful match for each other—stimulating, engrossing and perhaps more strongly driven by either purely conscious or purely unconscious impulses than most.

Love affairs, marriages and friendships between Libra-Scorpios will often feature the same head-heart split that these two grapple with as individuals. Two Libra-Scorpios on the same mental or emotional wavelength have a chance to reach the heights together, but when the feelings of one butt up against the thoughts of the other, consternation and chaos will reign. Arguments can be severe and constant but will rarely result in the kind of irreparable damage that will lead to separation or breakup, since most fights and cross words will be taken with a grain of salt. The other side of Libra-Scorpio intensity is an extreme kind of relaxation and conviviality, in which all is forgotten. Although Libra-Scorpio pairs often are not faithful in the conventional sense, they can be extremely loyal to each other, devoting themselves to each other completely. Sibling and co-worker combinations can be very close and understanding of each other and can get along well on a daily basis.

ADVICE: Let things be boring sometimes. Learn to relax. Try to find the middle ground between your head and your heart. Let things go without discussion.

Hot Debate

This can be a productive matchup, replete with good feeling, or it can fritter its time away in debates and arguments. Part of the problem here is deciding who will take control or make the major decisions; it is often impossible for these two to come to a mutual agreement, and if any situation is to be resolved, one partner must take a leadership role. It is at this point that power struggles usually surface, sometimes resulting in a no-win situation where things just wind up staying the way they are. Actually, both partners may prefer it that way, since they secretly enjoy the debate and stimulation that would be eliminated by agreement or strong leadership. This relationship is often paradoxical: it seems to involve strong-minded individuals who know what they want, yet they are beset by indecision, and by fuzzy, even irrational thinking. Beneath their daily interactions lies a streak of perversity that sometimes threatens to subvert all their constructive efforts. This self-destructive tendency undercuts many Libra-Scorpio–Scorpio I endeavors. If, however, the pair can devise a way of reaching agreement, such as giving up their power struggles, they may find they get along quite well.

Love affairs and marriages in this combination can be lively, even hectic and stressful. Sexual interaction goes either like a house on fire or not at all—an extreme reflected elsewhere as well. Sympathy and understanding, for example, can alternate with coldness and incomprehension, leaving both partners uncertain, frustrated and bewildered.

Friendships and parent-child relationships in this combination can be very affectionate—these two often seem to have eyes only for each other. In fact, they can sometimes make others in the vicinity feel left out, a problem of which they themselves may be blissfully unaware. This is rather unusual behavior for two individuals who value attentiveness and conscious awareness. At work, Libra-Scorpios and Scorpio I's can make an excellent combination. Objectivity triumphs and personal differences are prevented from interfering, as both partners concentrate on the materials at hand and the goals to be achieved.

ADVICE: Stand back and take a look at yourself. Be aware of the forces driving you. Decide to end self-destructive behavior. Strengthen your willpower.

Buildup of Intensity

The Libra-Scorpio–Scorpio II relationship features a gradual buildup of intensity that is both its strength and its weakness. The relationship can focus on developing deeply nurturing bonds of trust and honor, but once these begin to materialize, the stakes go up—the partners expect more, judge more and forgive less, so that the relationship doesn't always last long enough for such bonds to emerge fully. Although they can have great times together, these two can eventually get on each other's nerves or become frustrated with each other, necessitating time apart now and then. Bitterness and vituperation can be the unhappy accompaniment of breakups here.

Love affairs often include strong sexual expression that can continue unabated throughout marriages of quite long standing. The difficulties likely to drive these two apart are usually not physical but emotional: what begins as a simple argument or disagreement can build to a terrifying crescendo. Too many of these scenes finally end in mutual rejection. The partners should be extremely careful to nip them in the bud and never, under any circumstances, ignore their importance or let them get out of control.

In friendships, Scorpio II's often make demands that Libra-Scorpios find hard to meet. Libra-Scorpios, for their part, have a talent for biting disapproval that may be more than Scorpio II's can handle; stung to the quick, Scorpio II's are likely to withdraw their affection, retreating into a world of hurt and self-pity. Sibling relationships in this combination, particularly when the two are of the same sex, have an unrelenting intensity about them that makes it difficult for the partners to relax and have fun in an easy way. The relationship too often involves guilt and blame, particularly if parental disagreements turn up the tension. Objectively, Libra-Scorpios and Scorpio II's can be well suited to each other, with shared talents and interests. Emotional incompatibilities, however, usually prevent work relationships between these two from becoming successful.

ADVICE: Let up the pressure a bit. Beware of feeling sorry for yourself. Try to be a little more emotionally understanding.

Pruning and Cultivating

This combination, like wine, often gets better over time. There is a limit, however, to how long its maturation will go on if it gets too little attention—the relationship has a tendency to stagnate, and then to start fraying around the edges. It needs care and hard work to keep moving in the right direction. These two have an innate talent for tending to their relationships, but unfortunately, in this case, they can be blindsided and may just leave this one alone. To survive, then, the relationship needs good diagnosticians, and, indeed, the matchup's focus is often the understanding of its own mechanics.

Love affairs and marriages usually find the partners taking an all-consuming interest in each other. This is not the same thing, of course, as paying attention to the relationship itself, which may be sorely in need. Partners can get obsessive about each other, perhaps even jealous and controlling, without realizing that this behavior itself may loosen the relationship's bonds rather than strengthen them. Learning to back off, give each other space and work objectively on improving the relationship, much as one would prune and cultivate a plant, will produce noticeable drops in tension and forestall problems.

Parent-child and boss-employee relationships generally work out better when it is the Scorpio III in the role of parent or boss. In both the family and the commercial spheres, however, sibling and co-worker matchups are usually more successful, since these partners do better on a more equal footing. As friends, Libra-Scorpios can give excellent advice to their Scorpio III companions, who, in turn, can supply important lessons in how to build willpower and consistency. Should the two meet as students, they will probably be absorbed and united more by a common interest, as the years pass, than by their personal feelings for each other.

ADVICE: Don't take things for granted. Regular maintenance is needed. Things won't get better by themselves. Be your own best diagnostician.

A Fragile Balance

This relationship can be unexpectedly emotional for both partners. These characters view themselves, and each other, as pretty cool customers, so they may be amazed at the feelings engendered in them by the other person's presence. Another surprise element here is the shadow qualities or dark side of the partners' psyches that are likely to emerge. Grappling with these could prove emotionally tumultuous. Indeed, emotion may become the focus of this sensitive and complex relationship. The partners will find themselves unconsciously fascinated by the depth of their feelings for each other and may seek to restrict other relationships and even their careers in order to spend more time alone together. Libra-Scorpios will be attracted to Scorpio-Sagittarius incisiveness, taste and feeling for power, while Scorpio-Sagittarians will admire Libra-Scorpio mental ability and, often, physical appearance.

Love affairs here can be long-lived and fulfilling. The sexual relationship usually develops more fully over time, and blends well with feelings of friendliness and respect. Animosity and competition are usually minimal here, and lovemaking is usually complementary rather than competitive or dominating. This can prove a great relief to both partners, who are often engaged in power struggles in other areas of their lives. Marriage, however, is not always a good idea here, since fixed commitments and heavy responsibilities may disturb the fragile balance of emotions between these lovers. Friends and siblings in this combination find their relationship more supportive as the years go by. As schoolmates, they may be competitive, trying to dominate each other academically, socially or in sports, despite any age difference. Fighting for the attention of shared friends is especially common. The combination requires the maturity of adulthood to bring the partners into a more meaningful and productive relationship.

This matchup can make an effective team of co-workers or business partners, the Libra-Scorpio often providing the imagination and fantasy and the Scorpio-Sagittarius the shrewd insight necessary for success.

ADVICE: You may be neglecting certain responsibilities. Mute competitive drives. Seek peace and harmony. Don't disturb what is going well.

Fits of Temper

Little is held back in this relationship. It sweeps its partners away in a whirlwind of exciting confrontations, both physical and verbal, that allow little room for objective thought or detachment. The relationship values natural behavior and honesty highly, yet it may not be very sharing—these partners are capable of living at quite close quarters together without having a whole lot to do with each other. Tensions will be eased if each has his or her own inviolable space, completely beyond the jurisdiction or watchful eye of the other partner. The problem here is that both Libra-Scorpios and Sagittarius I's have a lot to say about each other's habits. It may sometimes be hard for them to back off, or to mute their criticism or concern.

In matters of love, this relationship is often unstable and incendiary. Fits of temper or passion are likely to burst loose at almost any moment; harmony and emotional balance are hard to maintain. Furthermore, although Libra-Scorpios will be relieved to be able to be honest with their Sagittarius I partner (who, in turn, will benefit from—without always enjoying—Libra-Scorpio powers of observation), this may also mean that these two may not really be interested in keeping things artificially cool or polite. Marriage may help to channel the relationship's wild energies in the right direction. Having children can also bring it a bit more calm, although those children will often feel seismic tremors threatening to break loose beneath the surface of their parents' relationship.

Parent-child relationships, in fact, can have their own intensity, and can feature serious and long-lasting struggles, with like and dislike, love and hate, respect and disrespect alternating with bewildering speed. The bond is a deep one, however. Friendship between these two can also be characterized by volatility, but shared activities may provide at least a modicum of stability. Work relationships between Libra-Scorpios and Sagittarius I's are not recommended—extreme differences in temperament often emerge.

BORIS KARLOFF (11/23/1887)

Lugosi and Karloff have never been surpassed as horror-film actors. Karloff got his big break as the monster in Frankenstein (1931), a role that Lugosi turned down while filming Dracula (1931). They later appeared together in many movies, forming the most macabre and awesome duo in film. Karloff was considered the better actor, Lugosi the stronger screen personality.

Capturing Hearts

This relationship is often competitive, sometimes in each partner's desire for the attention of a mutual friend, lover or family member. Both individuals here exert all their charm to capture the heart of this third party. In a very subtle way, it is not the other person they are especially interested in, but each other; this vying for affection is a subtle mechanism that they use to work out certain problems of which they are usually quite unaware. It behooves both partners, then, to concentrate more on their own relationship and try to come to grips with it.

Love affairs and marriages in this combination can be both affectionate and passionate but are too often caught up in emotional triangles. The third person is often a friend who spends a great deal of time with one partner or the other. In psychological terms, this person may in fact represent a figure from the relevant partner's childhood—a person who withheld approval and love. Libra-Scorpios and Sagittarius II's will go to great lengths to gain the affection of such a figure but will rarely go so far as to endanger their own relationship.

Friends and siblings in this combination will likewise be very competitive, seeking the attention of other friends or of parents. Sagittarius II's will have a tendency to retreat into their own private world and nurse slights and hurts, their Libra-Scorpio partners meanwhile showing little concern for their feelings. In the professional sphere, Sagittarius II talent and imagination can meld with Libra-Scorpio purposefulness, but too often both partners prefer to go their own way and develop their own approach. Their working relationship does best, then, when they can consult and advise each other as colleagues and are not placed in a fixed position as co-workers.

ADVICE: Deepen your understanding. Eliminate competition whenever possible. Try to be honest about your feelings. Games can hurt others.

A Penchant for Excess

The combination of these strong-willed individuals is likely to involve clashes; they usually have enough respect for each other's strength, however, to avoid direct confrontations. Furthermore, their relationship may well allow them to put their prodigious energies in the service of a common cause, and this can alleviate their personal difficulties. Libra-Scorpios have a way of bringing out the insecurities of seemingly impervious Sagittarius III's, who may come to depend on Libra-Scorpio intellect and insight to tell them what needs to be done, on both the personal and the professional front. Sagittarius III's, who are more than a little prone to self-deception, may also come to value Libra-Scorpio honesty highly in the long run.

Marriages and career partnerships can be one and the same for Libra-Scorpios and Sagittarius III's; the combination is exceptionally strong in putting ideas into practice and realizing goals that others would find unattainable. Neither partner is likely to be awed by difficulty—in fact, this highly energetic relationship thrives on problems, which often draw the partners closer together emotionally. Love affairs between Libra-Scorpios and Sagittarius III's are usually brief and subject to burnout, since a penchant for excess here is difficult to control.

Sagittarius III's may not have enough time to spend with their Libra-Scorpio friends but will rarely forget them. This is fortunate, since Libra-Scorpios can sometimes have a strong need for their Sagittarius III friends' moral support and financial help. Nevertheless, this relationship does best when not tied down to fixed commitments or responsibilities.

Parent-child matchups in this combination find Libra-Scorpios proud of their Sagittarius III offspring but unable to control or perhaps even to guide them. Sagittarius III's may be inspiring role models for Libra-Scorpio children but are often too occupied with career questions to give them enough attention.

ADVICE: Take more time out to have fun together. Acknowledge specific needs for one another. Moderate your energies a bit. Prolong pleasure.

Resistance to Outdated Concepts

In some ways this is a matchup between the conscious and the unconscious: Libra-Scorpios are particularly strong in the conscious sphere, rating high in everything to do with logic, critical awareness, thought and speech, while Sagittarius-Capricorns are masters of the hidden realms that have to do with intuition and the deep, unconscious worlds of sleep, silence and the imagination. At first these two may not be attracted to each other or get along, but they may ultimately meld their talents into a complementary whole, far greater than the sum of its parts. Libra-Scorpios are ruled by the elements of air and water (symbolizing thought and feeling), while Sagittarius-Capricorns are a fire-earth combination (representing intuition and sensation). Together, then, they encompass all four elements—a powerful union. Inherent in this matchup, however, is a resistance to old-fashioned or outdated concepts, fueling the desire to overturn tradition, staid concepts of form and any type of formal structure.

Working relationships are perhaps best for these two, Libra-Scorpios contributing their intense concentration and language skills, Sagittarius-Capricorns lending powerfully persuasive and magnetic energies. This duo could run a company well, or cooperate as heads of its different departments. The connection is not tension free, quick and incisive Libra-Scorpio energies often being pitted against the slower-moving but deeper energies of Sagittarius-Capricorn—which usually triumph in the long run, through resolve and sheer stubbornness. Libra-Scorpios and Sagittarius-Capricorns are seldom well suited for friendships, love affairs and marriages—their temperamental differences generally prove too great. Sagittarius-Capricorns can certainly be physically attractive to Libra-Scorpios, but Libra-Scorpios are nevertheless likely to wound their Sagittarius-Capricorn partners through their fickle tastes and their inability to remain faithful—they demand a kind of freedom that Sagittarius-Capricorns are not prepared to give them. Family members in this combination are likely to confront each other directly and not so pleasantly. They can make daily life difficult, and so may need the option of privacy from each other.

ADVICE: Reconcile your differences. Realize the strength of your combination and work actively to support it. Minimize confrontation. Make peace.

Unattainable Ideal

For different reasons, this pair may erroneously see each other as the force of change that will bring them freedom from something or someone. The consequences of this idea are usually disastrous. First, of course, as a basic principle it can never be true, since people can only free themselves. Second, this pair is usually looking for freedom as an ideal, which, as such, is bound to be unattainable. This is how the relationship starts out. It generally ends up as an all-consuming battle consisting of many skirmishes revolving around the theme of freedom. Libra-Scorpios are apt to desire Capricorn I's in the belief that their solidity will be beneficial; unconsciously they are hoping to be freed from their own dark side, which is something they are none too comfortable with. Capricorn I's, meanwhile, are looking for the exotic—that combination of passion and refinement that Libra-Scorpios manifest but are hardly aware they possess—to free them from their structured, traditional lives. This combination carries its share of frustration. Capricorn I's may feel out of control in their relationships with Libra-Scorpios, who seem to run through their fingers like water; and Libra-Scorpios, in turn, may tire of fixed Capricorn I attitudes, which they can find confining and, ultimately, dull. The best scenario here is for the Capricorn I to become the fixed point around which the Libra-Scorpio revolves, free, to an extent, but still bound within certain limits.

Love affairs between these two can become an exercise in futility. Marriages work out better, since Libra-Scorpios often enjoy busying themselves with tasteful domestic pursuits while Capricorn I's handle practical matters. Friendships and sibling relationships in this combination are likely to suffer from endless strife, especially if Capricorn I's try to dominate their Libra-Scorpio partners. The other side of the coin, however, is protection, which Capricorn I's can offer in abundance and which Libra-Scorpios may welcome, despite their independent stance. In business, the Libra-Scorpio–Capricorn I matchup will usually function best if the two are co-workers in a large organization.

ADVICE: Appreciate what you have. Don't ask for the impossible. Respect boundaries of privacy. Think carefully before making a commitment.

Uncompromising Sovereignty

Since this matchup is likely to be volatile, having an explosive quality and a focus on independent action, it needs a great deal of care and diplomacy. Capricorn II's are extremely sensitive to criticism, so Libra-Scorpios need to tread carefully if the relationship is to survive. Unfortunately, this combination is not always completely realistic in its viewpoint, and it may bring itself down through a refusal to recognize its own weaknesses and limitations. Wise partners realize the difficulties facing a relationship that entails so much unwillingness to compromise sovereignty, and usually join forces in making the relationship itself a strongly independent one. In this way they are sometimes able to achieve more unrestricted expression together than either of them would be able to achieve alone.

Libra-Scorpios and Capricorn II's do particularly well in a work setup that combines partnership and friendship. A hard-driving and dynamic team, they may rebel against restrictions that they see as repressive to the human spirit. Making money is usually less important to them than fighting for ideals and freedom of thought; in consequence, they will do best in social, political or religious endeavors in which they truly believe and to which they can give themselves wholeheartedly.

Love affairs and marriages may likewise be built around idealistic pursuits in which mutual admiration and personal honor play an important role. Neither Libra-Scorpios nor Capricorn II's care much about what others think of their relationship. Self-sustaining and loyal, both partners tend to hang in for the duration.

In the family sphere, Libra-Scorpio-Capricorn II pairs may find themselves at odds with other relatives. Well aware of tradition but not always in agreement with it, they have their own ideas on how things should be done. The partners in this relationship often believe that those who are not their allies must be their enemies—to them, failing to share their enthusiasm is as great a sin as opposing them.

ADVICE: Develop diplomacy and a spirit of compromise. Don't shut others out just because they don't agree. Take the time to explain yourself.

A Bewildering Turnaround

Many difficulties arise in this often tortuous relationship. These two seem locked in a struggle to be honest with each other and to relate in a meaningful way, but at certain points in their lives their relationship can suffer breakdowns in communication that cannot be remedied, even if communication is what they want. Time is generally required before channels can be opened again, but when and how this will happen is usually dictated by circumstances outside the partners' control.

Successful love affairs are rare for this combination. Libra-Scorpios don't usually like the Capricorn III brand of control, nor do Capricorn III's always appreciate Libra-Scorpio sarcasm and biting wit. In marriages, outright power struggles can emerge, with each partner, sadly, trying to best the other. When children are involved, this pair can act in a most undignified way. It can also happen, however, that their offspring challenge them to behave more maturely.

When family members share this combination, and particularly when they are of the same sex, competition and antagonism may rule from childhood on. After a stormy adolescence, however, Libra-Scorpio-Capricorn III pairs who have been pitted against each other earlier on may slowly drift back together again. Friendships in this combination can be on again and off again, at times even manifesting antagonisms that border on real hostility. Yet sudden reversals are possible in which the partners find themselves friends again, in a bewildering turnaround.

Work relationships between Libra-Scorpios and Capricorn III's are prone to develop special, extremely personal modes of communication that are difficult for a third party to decipher. Whether using facial expressions, speech inflections or even silence to signal their approval or disapproval, they may communicate on their own wavelength. Such communication is often the real secret behind the success of their work together.

ADVICE: Try to see the big picture. Don't give up your struggle to be more open and sharing. Give the other person a break. Forgive and forget.

Sure to Ignite

Sparks fly in this matchup, and something is sure to ignite—these two cusp people have a highly stimulating effect on each other. If their energies are well directed, their relationship can go to the heights. But the tension of these energies can also be so great that anything can happen—a stimulating situation, but one that could prove difficult as an ongoing state of being. Libra-Scorpio and Capricorn-Aquarius lie square to each other in the zodiac (they are 90° apart), usually a stressful position, but this particular relationship can benefit from friction, which manifests here as impulse and excitement. Highly original, it sees things differently from most others and is usually not afraid to let everyone know it.

This matchup is ruled by the element of fire, which can make its sexual relationships torrid, even scorchingly intense. But love affairs will inevitably have their share of arguments, which it is important to limit in scope—a psychological sprinkler-system designed to quench the flames is a vitally important self-regulatory mechanism. Should the relationship move on to marriage, it may cool down a bit but may also acquire a little more maturity and wisdom. The partners must be careful to take regular breaks from each other and not to let their careers wreak havoc on their personal lives.

Friendships in this combination are likely to incorporate unusual, even bizarre activities. Here the critical attitudes of Libra-Scorpios may clash with and inhibit the more natural approach of Capricorn-Aquarians. Even so, there is a synergy between the dramatic tendencies of both partners, bringing forth a vivid, colorful energy that friends and family alike will find arresting.

In general, both Libra-Scorpios and Capricorn-Aquarians do well when given the chance to be on an equal footing—they do not expect to take orders from each other. In the family and work spheres, then, sibling and co-worker matchups are usually more successful than parent-child or boss-employee duos.

ADVICE: Learn to regulate your passions. Beware of violent impulses. Cultivate kind and loving attitudes. Direct energies constructively.

Temptations Along the Way

This relationship does best when kept light and easy. Its orientation is primarily mental, which does not, however, rule out a satisfactory and pleasurable physical side. The element of change plays an important role in this matchup and, although necessary, may undercut its stability. Aquarius I's are at the very least worthy opponents for Libra-Scorpio wit and wordplay, but the energy of this relationship is rarely used up in idle chatter; for this active combination, life would have little meaning without new challenges.

Love affairs and marriages are often devoted to sports, travel and culture. It is in these and other areas that this duo is likely to find the kinds of complexities and difficulties it must grapple with and, eventually, overcome. The combination tends to be high-strung, and the many temptations that offer themselves to each individual along the way can increase its natural nervousness and upset its balance and harmony. Infidelity is not the only danger area; almost any interesting byway can prove temporarily debilitating to these two. As parents, they tend to get much too involved with their children, and must concentrate on maintaining distance, objectivity and wisdom.

As friends, Libra-Scorpios and Aquarius I's don't always have the seriousness and commitment necessary to form a deep relationship. As occasional companions and acquaintances, however, or as sports partners, they can pass the time pleasantly enough, with little conflict. Co-workers in this combination can serve a company long and well. At one time or another it will certainly occur to this pair to start their own company together, but the relationship usually lacks the grit and determination necessary to stick it out over the long haul. Parent-child matchups of either combination can be great fun, but too often the element of maturity is lacking here. This is particularly clear when the partners vie with each other to give a more youthful impression.

Serial Duplication

The focus of this relationship is often a desire to engage in a series of far-reaching projects. Once this couple gets a taste of success in a given area, they will usually try to duplicate it again and again. Finding a working formula is crucial to their plans, then, and if one is not forthcoming they may appear a bit rootless or lost. In a strange way, it doesn't really matter what activity they pursue in these types of projects. What is important is the replication of one good project.

Marriages, love affairs and friendships can become the basis for successful commercial or artistic enterprises. The kind of total involvement required by such activities may permeate every area of the partners' lives, so that they run the risk of becoming obsessively possessive of each other. Because they may be convinced that they cannot do without each other, they sometimes become desperate over their partner's absence, or extremely jealous should the partner direct any attention elsewhere. If tension, stress or pressures from their projects build to an intensity that threatens their relationship, they should have the good sense to back off, slow down or perhaps give up these projects altogether; such a decision may enable them to develop the more personal side of their relationship and to get to know each other better.

Sibling pairs here often engage in club, school or sports activities together, structuring their relationship around shared weekly or monthly activities that they both enjoy. Likewise, co-workers in this combination enjoy corporate work rhythms—the schedules and quotas that must be met, or the large and successive projects of which they can be a meaningful part.

Fantasy Needs

This combination is likely to get out of touch with reality pretty easily. Illusions of all sorts fascinate the relationship, particularly when they fulfill its partners' own fantasy needs. Such a couple must take care not to see only what they want to see and hear only what they want to hear. Although they may enjoy themselves together a good deal of the time, incorporating romance, play and creativity into their activities, they risk forming unhealthy habits or dependencies involving drink, drugs or sex and love. One might say that the couple's susceptibility to such activities is greater than most because of the particular nature of the combination's psychological makeup.

Libra-Scorpio-Aquarius III love affairs are often highly romantic and feature many magical moments. Falling in love with love is always a possibility here, but these partners generally feel compatible and comfortable with each other, and their solid mutual liking and appreciation for each other combats any dreamy fantasies. Should they fall out of love, they are capable of becoming fast friends in a relationship that has its own sort of romance, usually platonic in nature. Whether lovers or friends, this pair may admire each other to the point of worship. They are usually unaware that their attachment to the other person is simply a psychological projection of their own wishes for themselves—of their own idealized self. Such projections may imply a low self-image on the part of one or both partners.

Marriages and work relationships between these two may force a greater sense of reality on them, which is good in some ways and bad in others: the need to deal with daily responsibilities will lessen the magic but also the illusions of the matchup. Greater psychological health may be found in marriage, then, than in other Libra-Scorpio-Aquarius III relationships. Parent-child matchups in this combination may see Libra-Scorpio parents being overly demanding of their Aquarius III children, who may, for their part, be too easily dominated by their Libra-Scorpio parents.

ADVICE: Be aware of your weakness for illusions. Try to keep a hold on reality. Attaining psychological health does not mean enjoying yourself less.

THE CUSP OF SENSITIVITY
AQUARIUS-PISCES CUSP

A Good Fit

These two can fit together as easily as hand and glove. Libra-Scorpio and Aquarius-Pisces are usually quite different from each other, but they are in trine aspect in the zodiac (120° apart), a position usually implying natural and free-flowing energies. As easy as the relationship may be, though, it often engages in difficult or even impossible tasks. Interestingly, this is an example of a relationship that gives its partners something they lack individually—in this case, vision and the pragmatism to realize it. Having a goal or objective is inevitable here, with the partners often constituting a formidable combination that can arouse not only wonder but antagonisms and jealousies in the outside world. Not one to compromise, this matchup does things on its own terms. It is often able to touch the deepest emotional areas in other people, who instinctively realize that even if they are opposed to it, it represents the wave of the future.

Without a cause to devote themselves to, love affairs and marriages can show wide differences of opinion, which may lead to struggle, despite the ease with which these two communicate. Although the sensuality between them can be pronounced, Libra-Scorpios may get on the nerves of more sensitive Aquarius-Pisces, who, in turn, may try to force Libra-Scorpios to mute their outgoing side. As a result, frustrations can build up on both sides. The key to success here is for the partners to show more interest in the relationship itself, approaching it with the same fervor they would grant more idealistic or objective pursuits. In the family sphere, sibling pairs, particularly of the same sex, are usually competitive but also mutually supportive.

Friendships and work relationships can be outstanding, and often overlap. When placed in the service of a cause, whether social, commercial or artistic, the relationship can be rebellious against outworn tastes and ideals. An element of the prophetic accompanies this attitude; the matchup has a pretty good idea what it plans to substitute for the status quo.

ADVICE: Don't take your relationship for granted. Don't get carried away by ideals. Keep your feet on the ground. Learn to inspire others without arousing envy.

Mutual Appreciation

An unusually close relationship can develop here, in which empathic feelings predominate. Although the partners are very different temperamentally, with Libra-Scorpio more head oriented and Pisces I's more heart oriented, they can usually forge their strengths into an effective operating unit. The key to the relationship, and often its focus, is the partners' ability to appreciate each other's talents and skills. Should emotional disappointment surface here, both partners are likely to be deeply hurt, but Pisces I's will usually be affected on a deeper level.

Friendships and love affairs in this combination are warm and sympathetic. Most often these two pose no threat to each other, either physically or psychically. Yet small problems can arise when Pisces I's feel rushed or pushed by their energetic Libra-Scorpio partners. The chemistry here is often less passionate than understanding and affectionate. Libra-Scorpios may sometimes end a love affair with a Pisces I because they tire of it, finding it not dynamic enough for them; it can also be the Pisces I's who withdraw, out of fear of deeper involvement with their Libra-Scorpio partner. Friendships that turn into love affairs often have a better prognosis, since the partners will have fewer illusions about what they are getting into.

Marriages here are usually sensuous and relaxed. Libra-Scorpios, particularly, will appreciate this, as a foil to their often hectic professional schedules. The emphasis is on domestic tranquillity, which neither partner will usually want to disturb or upset.

Sibling and co-worker matchups in this combination can be mutually supportive and understanding, assuming that Libra-Scorpios don't get too bossy. Should Pisces I's feel hurt or rejected, they can retreat behind a wall of silent frustration, rather than coming out and telling their partner what they really think. Rarely will such combinations be particularly dynamic or ambitious in their orientation.

ADVICE: Push yourself a bit. Express the very best you have to offer. Beware of sinking into a rut. Keep awake to the present moment.

Evident Inequalities

This combination emphasizes rulership and can seem abrasive to those who come in contact with it—a problem attributable to the Libra-Scorpio, who usually assumes the dominant role. If the relationship is not tempered by the sensitivity, understanding and more mild-mannered, unassuming air of Pisces II, in fact, it may not be viable. This important role of the Pisces II should be recognized but, unfortunately, more often goes unappreciated, leaving this partner feeling mistreated from time to time by the Libra-Scorpio. In extreme cases the relationship can have a sadomasochistic flavor. Both partners must be careful, then, not to settle into fixed roles in which the Pisces II's suffer at the hands of their more aggressive partners.

Inequalities like these may occur in marriage, work and family relationships but are not always obvious. The determining factors, surprisingly enough, are usually the attitudes not of the dominant Libra-Scorpios but of the quieter Pisces II's: should these personalities suffer from low self-esteem, or regressively replay old tapes from childhood, they may end up pushing their partner to act more aggressively, for their psychological expectations will cast the Libra-Scorpio as an oppressive authority figure from the Pisces II's youth. If the couple can go without such expectations, however, it is likely to work out a satisfactory and healthy relationship, in which Pisces II sensitivity has a salutary effect on Libra-Scorpios, tending to bring them into closer contact with their own emotions.

The success of love affairs in this combination, on the other hand, depends more on the Libra-Scorpios, and on their willingness to dive to the depths of feeling with their Pisces II partners. Should they hold back, or aim for more superficial sorts of satisfaction, Pisces II's will grow restive and dissatisfied. Friendships may be quite satisfied with less involvement, both partners being content to enjoy having fun together. But the relationship may be relatively ineffectual at handling heavy depressions, should these arise.

ADVICE: Drop expectations. Stay flexible and open. Try to go emotionally deeper. Encourage health through self-understanding.

Not by the Straight and Narrow

This can be a successful relationship right across the board, with the partners integrating their talents and abilities into a coherent and cohesive unit. This is not to imply, however, that they proceed by the straight and narrow: the Libra-Scorpio–Pisces III combination is unconventional and has its own peculiar methods of maintaining stability. The emotional level is exalted here, and this pair shares a deep understanding of it, not only to the benefit of their relationship but also to charm other people. Their expressions of feeling may seem strange, but they come from a very deep place and prompt an unusual degree of acceptance from others. The Pisces III tends to be the relationship's star, with the Libra-Scorpio partner serving as advisor, student, co-worker, assistant or just plain admirer. Although these charismatic Pisces III's are quite capable of standing on their own, they benefit tremendously from the support of their keenly perceptive Libra-Scorpio partners.

In love affairs and marriages, intimacy between these two can be very rewarding, both physically and emotionally. Libra-Scorpios enjoy this relationship because it lets them relax, Pisces III's because they like the attention of their intense, mentally challenging partners. Since both individuals have a strong need to develop their own clan, having children together may be the cement that holds the relationship together over the years. Libra-Scorpio–Pisces III friendships may have an outlandish side, with the partners flaunting the relationship's unusual aspects and obviously enjoying the shock they engender in others.

Family and work relationships usually function most naturally as parent-child and boss-employee matchups with the Pisces III in the top spot. These personalities can be sympathetic and understanding toward their Libra-Scorpio offspring or employees, without being in any way condescending.

ADVICE: If others find you too aggressive, you will engender resistance. Tone down your image. Deepen your spiritual bond. Be less self-conscious.

THE WEEK OF INTENSITY

Compromises for Sanity

This intense matchup cries out for relief—how can these two possibly live under the same roof or work side by side? The key to the relationship's success may be a concerted effort by the partners to manage their defining characteristic: their intensity. They will periodically have to call a truce or give some priority to relaxation. In certain areas at certain times, their unstoppable energies will meld efficiently. At other times the partners can easily work to their own detriment, even careening out of control. They both occasionally need to let up in their attentiveness to detail and to try to see the larger picture. A recurring problem here is a tendency to fixate on an unpleasant event in the past, an absorbing one in the present or a dreaded one in the future, and to be unable to let go of it.

Sexually the relationship can be obsessive. Sometimes more concerned with performance and technical criteria than with enjoyment and pleasure, Scorpio I couples can plague each other with checklists. "Did you?" "Didn't you?" These are the kinds of questions that the lovers might ask, or at least think about, each time. Each of them can take it as their responsibility alone to bring satisfaction to the other, and when this doesn't happen they can assume it is their fault. Guilty, frustrated feelings often result. Marriages are likely to be no less demanding sexually. A tight ship is similarly the rule in domestic areas and finance, but here certain compromises can be worked out for the sake of sanity.

Friendships in this combination are likely to have an aggressiveness best worked out in sports, competitive games, fitness training or martial arts. In the family, a Scorpio I parent can be competitive with a Scorpio I child, whether for the attention of another family member or simply to gain physical or mental ascendancy. It can be a bad idea for two Scorpio I's to work in the same office or small group, since the tension of their energy can easily spread to other co-workers.

ADVICE: Take a break from other people's demands. Empty your mind. Let yourself be bored occasionally. Work on accepting what fate dishes out.

Wary Circling

These two are often magnetically attracted physically. Although Scorpio is a water sign, their relationship is ruled by earth, here representing grounded, practical, sensuous energies. Encounters between these two indicate their belief that it can be fatal to underestimate one's opponent: warily circling each other, they are usually highly suspicious of each other on first meeting. Yet although they will never forget their first encounter, they may later become fast friends or lovers. From the outside this matchup can seem light and breezy; few would suspect its true nature—heavy and momentous. Scorpio I's and II's can actually have a lot to learn from each other, a mutual education they acquire through the experiences they go through together.

This learning experience is nowhere more evident than in the realms of sex and money. In these fields, whether as lovers or business partners, even the most naive Scorpio I's and II's will follow a crash course together, receiving a full education and probably even a graduate degree in record time. The chemistry here is such that without reading books, or even a whole lot of prior experience, the partners quickly develop an extraordinary appreciation of power and how it works. Their marriages must have a rock-solid material base for them to be truly satisfied and fulfilled. Once that foundation has been laid, the couple must be dedicated to maintaining it—something they are usually capable of doing—if their relationship is to grow and prosper.

Friendships manifest less interest in power than other relationships in this combination, and in fact these two may give up their concern with the material realm in favor of more spiritual goals. If this process involves a renunciation of practical values, it can be extremely painful for both parties. In the family, Scorpio I and Scorpio II relatives can get locked in titanic struggles over inheritances, property and cash, arguments that ultimately symbolize a thirst for parental or sibling love that has been withheld.

ADVICE: Don't neglect the spiritual side of life. Acquisition can be the first lesson but nonattachment will be the final one. Don't be too stubborn to listen.

Ancient Roots

The roots of this relationship go deep. Whether these two are involved socially, emotionally or financially, one feels that their ties are inevitable, fated. Like and dislike are not the important motives here; free choice isn't really involved. Usually thrown together in serendipitous situations, the partners slowly come to realize that their fortunes are inextricably linked. Oddly enough, mutual understanding is often difficult for them, as if they had come from different planets. Over the years, however, they usually discover their common origins, and this process of self-discovery can become the focus of their relationship.

Love affairs are slow to develop—it can take years for these two to get together and more for them to begin to know each other. But exploring the meaning of their relationship together will lead each of them further on their own path of self-realization. In marriage, similarly, agonizing or at the very least painstaking processes must be undergone before the partners finally agree to tie the knot, but once they do so they rarely look back. Absolute commitment is the keynote here. Infidelities or even flirtations will not be tolerated.

Family relationships and friendships can become the basis for career connections, and vice versa. The point is that neither of these two trusts easily, so that they may need a firm commitment in one area of life before they can set up a relationship in another. They can be extremely close mouthed about what they do and will view any disclosure of inside information as a betrayal. Their strong moral codes may come to govern almost every area of their lives—yet they are not incapable of acting for amoral ends or staging power plays. They must at some point decide whether their relationship has achieved a choke hold over them against which they need to rebel, for the sake of preserving their individuality.

ADVICE: Encourage freedom of choice whenever possible. Don't tie yourself down to repressive commitments. Follow your intuitions and your heart.

Throwing a Switch

This formidable combination can boast a tremendously natural ease and openness when it's on. When it's off—well, a deadly silence reigns. This stark polarity makes the pairing quite a dangerous one, fraught with perils that neither partner is likely to grasp fully until, quite suddenly, the switch turns to the off position. When this happens, family and friends can be truly shocked by the finality of the process; bringing the relationship back to life is difficult, sometimes impossible. Yet when these two meet they are apt to be overjoyed to find a kindred spirit. Both are deep, somewhat eccentric individuals who usually choose the road less traveled. Both can also be intense, wary and critical. There is no middle ground between them.

Love affairs between Scorpio I's and Scorpio-Sagittarians are characterized by an intensity of feeling combined with a tough, no-nonsense orientation. Romantic feelings seldom prevail here, nor are they particularly desired. Having a realistic view of their relationship, the partners have little difficulty voicing their opinions, desires and dissatisfactions. They may need time to take the step of marriage, but once the decision is made, things proceed quite naturally and successfully. Should problems emerge, though, the warning signs will probably be clear to both partners. Both of them are secretive in nature, and they may keep their own plans to themselves; then, quite suddenly, the switch is thrown and the relationship is over.

Not only in romances and marriages but also in rivalries and friendships, Scorpio I's tend either to be loose cannons or to set the parameters, while Scorpio-Sagittarians adjust as best they can. Ultimately, however, it is often the Scorpio-Sagittarius who turns off and out, deciding to make a change. Straightforward enmities and rivalries in this combination can go on for years, bringing out the best and worst in both partners. Sometimes, though rarely, these relationships survive a period of blackout, inaction or hibernation and then start up again with unbridled intensity. Co-worker and sibling relationships can also be quite natural, warm and supportive, then can suddenly subside with little warning.

ADVICE: Give each other a fair chance. Beware of ultimatums. Finality may be irreversible. Be as honest as possible. Be sure of your intentions.

Wheeling and Parrying

Scorpio I's and Sagittarius I's often need each other more than they will admit. Their relationship presents a magnetic, even charismatic exterior that can make them the center of attention in their social or family group. Strongly protective, their matchup will present a united front against the world when threatened. When they are alone, however, these two rarely see eye to eye and may seek to best each other at every turn. Highly competitive in the verbal, physical and mental spheres, the relationship is a classic study in attack and defense, with Sagittarius I's deftly wheeling and delivering lightning strokes and Scorpio I's astutely parrying them and going on the counterattack.

Love affairs and marriages in this combination are a bit enigmatic, although the partners can make charming and welcoming friends once they have their own thing together. It is rather obvious to others when it is time to leave them alone, for the degree of confrontation and combat between them is usually all too apparent. Getting things out in the open is a remarkably healthy trait in this relationship, but the pair must put limits on their emotional outbursts, which can turn ugly and destructive.

Friends and siblings of the same sex have complex, paradoxical relationships. It is sometimes difficult to tell whether they are close or distant, sympathetic or cold, allies or enemies. Perhaps it is their very confidence in their unity that permits them to have such sharp disagreements, since they both know in their hearts that their relationship is ultimately unassailable and will withstand practically anything. Battering each other becomes a way of toughening and strengthening the relationship. These two can express genuine affection in a variety of subtle ways, including sarcasm, irony and downright insult, which makes the relationship difficult for others to read. Work relationships here are not at all recommended; the partners' disagreements over how to do things will too often prove paralyzing.

ADVICE: There are limits to your strength. Don't be so sure of survival. Tone down the rhetoric. Mute competitiveness. Control outbursts.

Plugged In

When these two plug in to each other their energy can be overwhelming. It is usually the Sagittarius II who serves as the theoretical brain behind their endeavors, the Scorpio I as the force of implementation. The matchup feels natural to both partners, and indeed a melding of biological, social and economic connections between them is not uncommon. But the highly individualistic methods of Sagittarius II's can arouse the disapproval of Scorpio I's, who for their part have a habit of a picky attention to detail that may get on their partner's nerves. Life is not a bed of roses between these two, then; there is an underlying tension between the expansive, optimistic view of Sagittarius II's and the more concentrated and critical approach of Scorpio I's.

Romantic involvements do not immediately suggest themselves here—the chemistry is usually wrong in the sexual sphere, so that love affairs are unlikely to go deep. But marriages and family and business or career matchups can be engrossing and highly productive. They also often overlap. Power is usually the cement that holds these relationships together, providing an explanation for why business partners may become relatives and vice versa: although both partners could continue on their way independent of each other, they seem to sense or to believe that their matchup is much more powerful than their own individual efforts could ever be. In this they are generally correct. These two can embark on projects of mammoth proportions, usually following a regular progression from one stepping stone to the next. Their relationship has a real feeling for the long line, and its vision is likely to sustain it over many years, sometimes a whole lifetime.

Friendships, on the other hand, are a bit complex and problematic. Contrasting tastes and temperaments prove stimulating, and indeed these two can have great times together, but their differences may ultimately prove too divisive or alienating.

Lively Debunking

Whatever these two do together in public, they are likely to do with a twinkle in their eye. Vivacious, provocative and oriented toward critical thinking, as a couple they specialize in stripping away false facades and telling it like it is. They can usually get away with their debunking without arousing too much antagonism, chiefly through their ability to let other people laugh at them. But they always risk causing serious problems with people who are not at all amused by what they do. They are feisty and will rarely back down from a challenge, but they should be aware when the challenge is actually emanating from them.

In love affairs, marriages and friendships, light banter is usually the order of the day. Care should be taken that this does not escalate into open warfare and to remember the importance of quiet displays of affection. The relationship may appear alternately thorny and cuddly, empathic and incompatible, depending on the partners' moods and circumstances. Irritations quickly surface when one partner rubs the other the wrong way. These relationships can go on for years, whether they are predominantly positive or negative, since like two old flintstones this lively pair just go on striking sparks.

In family matchups, particularly parent-child combinations, these two are more often than not the motor that powers the group and spurs it to action. Although they may not get along that well, their contentious energies keep the family on its toes and guard against dullness and complacency. At work, colleagues in this combination can bring projects toward a grinding halt when their emotions go haywire. In all of these areas the relationship has a tendency to rebelliousness. This will wear thin as the partners age and, one hopes, mature, a process that will sooner or later demand some softening of their attitudes (except in the most hard-core cases). Finally getting the point that they are just plain making things more difficult for themselves, these two might decide to kick back and mellow out.

ADVICE: Chill out. Keep it light. Growing up is inevitable. Maturity demands more common sense. Don't make things more difficult than they already are.

THE CUSP OF PROPHECY
SAGITTARIUS-CAPRICORN CUSP

Room to Breathe

This relationship emphasizes matters of the mind—critical thinking, verbal agility, conversation. This is lucky because on their own these two are quite weighty, perhaps even depressive; their ability to bring out each other's lighter side is a blessing. This is not to say that the relationship is easy. Using their intellects to solve emotional problems is a formidable task for this pair, but it sometimes seems the only way open to them. They may both be interested in clearing the air, but their good intentions are not always enough. They will have to work hard and tackle complex emotional confrontations before they can breathe free. These two can often spend hours trying to figure out solutions to the relationship's problems. Unfortunately, concomitant worry and anxiety may play roles as well. If freedom is to be attained here, it will not be without a struggle.

In love affairs and marriages, the partners' belief in their ability to think problems through often runs up against a brick wall, creating considerable frustration. The relationship's theme of freeing itself from problems may mean that the partners will eventually free themselves of each other. As friends, Scorpio I's and Sagittarius-Capricorns can be loyal to each other and available in times of need. A lighter mood may periodically appear in the relationship, but it should not be forced. Parent-child relationships of either possible variation will usually find Scorpio I's trying to establish a direct emotional connection and Sagittarius-Capricorns backing off. To open avenues of communication (probably the crying need of this relationship in any sector), the partners will have to exercise great sensitivity and understanding, as well as a willingness to try different approaches. Creating a relaxed atmosphere through mutual cooperation is of course best.

At work, as long as both partners can agree on a protocol or method and stick to it, and as long as they are spared too much verbal interaction, the job will get done. Reasonable or even routine projects of short duration are probably the best choices for them, at least until they establish a working rhythm.

ADVICE: Trying hard can sometimes be counterproductive. Let go of tensions and negative expectations. Avoid laying on guilt or shame.

Cultivating Openness

This combination focuses on cultivating flexibility and openness. The partners will learn how to air significant differences of opinion without harming their relationship. When things are going well between them, they can go very well indeed, but this may presuppose a need on the part of one or both personalities, so that one partner gives in to the other's wishes. Should either partner feel the urge to exert their individuality, the matchup can be rocked to its foundations, since these two often have extremely different attitudes. The good times or mutual reassurance they can share is no guarantee of the relationship's underlying stability or health. Providing the freedom within the relationship for differences in individual style is the key to success.

Whether frustrating or satisfying—they can be both—love affairs usually show a high level of emotional involvement, sometimes tortuously so. They are seldom taken up with power struggles, since for the most part these lovers are both doing their best and have no interest in controlling or injuring their partner. Yet injury often occurs, and it is sometimes best for the lovers to back off, give up their physical contact and try to be good friends. In marriages and work relationships, serious, responsible but also optimistic attitudes are usually the rule, with both partners giving their all for the common cause. With a modicum of effort, these can be excellent unions. Parent-child matchups often manifest serious power struggles when children begin to think for themselves, whether the child is Scorpio I or Capricorn I. Both personalities are extremely stubborn in either role, and adolescent conflicts are likely to resound around the neighborhood, the impact perhaps reminding listeners of the crash produced when an irresistible force meets an immovable object.

Friendships are quite possible between these two, but so are enmities. Should the pair find themselves on opposite sides of the ideological or social fence, or be engaged in business, love or sport competitions, neither can expect that the other will either give quarter or offer to capitulate.

ADVICE: Create an open forum. Try to sense the needs of the moment. Don't create artificial barriers. Encourage individual expression.

CAPRICORN II

Seeing Eye to Eye

The communication level in this relationship is extremely high—the partners work out their own short-hand. This unfortunately doesn't always mean they understand each other. One thing they usually have going for them is their admiration for each other's skills and talents; one thing they usually have going against them is their difficulty in seeing eye to eye on almost any subject. Disagreements, arguments, even pitched battles, can flare with the suddenness of spontaneous combustion. Yet the partners often have little difficulty understanding each other, and what they have to communicate comes through loud and clear. These two strong-willed people are not necessarily meant to get along. If they are determined to work out their differences, however, they can build a stable and supportive relationship.

Love affairs between Scorpio I's and Capricorn II's are often strong in the sexual sphere. Perhaps both partners have a secret hankering for romance, although they might not want to admit it—they generally present a tough, no-nonsense persona, repressing all signs of weakness in each other's company. Neither partner may see the need for marriage, and indeed their relationship is usually quite complete without it. Ambition, both in the social and the professional sense, is something they share, and in pursuing it they are likely to spend quite some time apart. Although they may both have their own field of professional expertise, they are quite sensitive about which of them receives the greater acknowledgment from other people or is viewed as more successful, especially when they are together socially. Work relationships in this combination are likely to be professional, demanding and unforgiving. Should either partner produce shoddy work or slow down some, they are likely to hear about it immediately. Although somewhat tense at work, they are quite capable of tying one on during their free time, but working hard and playing hard without some letup can eventually lead to breakdown. Siblings in this combination, particularly of opposite sexes, sometimes measure their achievements against each other, and if so they are capable of competing at the cost of all else.

ADVICE: Find enough time to relax. Let up a bit in your demands. Competition doesn't help your personal life. Don't be afraid of vulnerability.

Continuous Vigilance

The energy of this highly original relationship is spirited and all-consuming, but strong antagonisms are likely to emerge here. The strongest feelings between Scorpio I's and Capricorn III's often emerge in confrontations in which each partner tries to damage the other's reputation or to challenge the other's position within a family or professional or social group. Yet the relationship can lose its adversarial quality if both partners belong to the same group, and mutual defense against a common threat can become the important issue. Even at their best, however, the partners tend to be very wary of each other, as is clear from the kind of continuous vigilance they maintain on each other.

Love affairs in this combination can be torrid in their emotional intensity but will also feature power struggles and will rarely bring deep fulfillment. The inevitable emergence of negative feelings also augurs poorly for marriage, unless the spouses show a special willingness to cooperate and work out differences. Friendships will have their own strange values and may or may not involve conflicts. They sometimes also manifest as rather tame and disappointing, as though confrontation were an ever-present fear.

At work and in the family, conflicts will inevitably emerge in boss-employee and parent-child matchups of either possible variety, but responsible behavior will engender respect on both sides. The strong point about these relationships is that they are without ambiguity—both partners know full well where the other stands and what to expect if rules are broken or limits exceeded. Professional matchups and rivalries here may emerge as battles between Scorpio I quick intelligence and Capricorn III willpower. Capricorn III's will resist being unseated from their dominant position, but Scorpio I's are capable of applying many subtle pressures to get their way, knowing that a full-scale frontal assault might succeed only in arousing greater resistance.

ADVICE: Seek mutual benefits. Keep destructive impulses from getting out of control; repair may be difficult later on. Use your good sense.

THE CUSP OF MYSTERY & IMAGINATION
CAPRICORN-AQUARIUS CUSP

Riotous Ridicule

The focus of this relationship can be a search for the strange, bizarre, out-of-the-way or oddball elements of experience. Each partner has a terrific sense of humor, and these can gel well, while also providing a devastatingly effective weapon against adversaries. This pair is particularly good at using ridicule to the discomfiture of others, but shows its health in being able to laugh at itself as well. If the relationship fosters extroverted and riotous behavior, the other side of the coin is its activation of the partners' dark sides. They can be violent on occasion, not just verbally but physically, and this can later arouse mutual regret or guilt.

Love affairs and marriages in this combination are quite lively and rarely dull. Both partners give full rein to dramatic displays of feeling. (Too often, however, they are just putting on a show.) The deepest expressions of emotion can emerge in the sexual sphere, which is inventive and puts few activities off limits. There is a crying need here for stability and consistency, since the relationship is quite capable of going completely off track, or at the very least off the deep end.

Amusing, entertaining and adventuresome, friendships here can be outstanding. Here the partners are rarely interested in pursuing the sure thing; their attitude is that there is little to lose and lots to gain by such behavior. It is also possible for them to engage in business endeavors together, or to become involved in social, religious or educational pursuits. They will have to take care that these involvements do not become engrossing to the point where they exclude other important aspects of life. Sibling pairs in this combination may be continuously getting into trouble and mischief. This behavior is usually restricted to childhood or adolescence, but there is always the danger that it will lay the groundwork for asocial or even sociopathic behavior in adulthood.

ADVICE: Know when to stop. Setting limits beforehand may be a good idea. Be more considerate of the feelings of others. Keep violence in check.

Wider Horizons

This relationship often searches out wider horizons and larger-scale venues for its activities. The vision of its partners together is far broader than that of either alone; a big-picture approach is the hallmark of this matchup. There is usually a dynamic chemistry between these two, since Aquarius I and Scorpio I form a square aspect to each other in the zodiac (they are 90° apart), which provides tremendous energy and forward momentum, though also some friction and stress. Stability is seldom a problem here unless psychological strain or breakdowns in communication produce anxiety. It is usually Aquarius I's who take the lead, showing their partners another way of approaching life. Once Scorpio I's get the idea, however, they are more than able to hold up their end of the relationship.

In love affairs, Scorpio I's may show a penchant for influencing the relationship too strongly for their freedom-loving Aquarius I mates, who, no matter how strong the physical attraction or how compelling the emotional involvement, may back off in the face of controlling and claiming behavior. The Scorpio I need for the deeper side of life could remain unsatisfied if Aquarius I's insist on holding back or refuse to acknowledge the extent of their own emotions. Neither partner is likely to be too open or vulnerable with the other, and the relationship may suffer from a lack of sharing. If so, marriages are not especially recommended.

Pairs of friends and of siblings in this combination often indulge their physical side in sports and fitness activities, preferring high-speed, high-energy workouts. One-on-one as opposed to team endeavors are more likely to spur them to better their own personal best. Work relationships between Scorpio I's and Aquarius I's can be large or even mammoth in ambition and achievement. They tend to have an element of idealism, but the partners are usually realistic enough to know beforehand whether or not their plans have a chance of success. Frankness and forthrightness contribute significantly to clearing the air and preventing the buildup of resentments through misunderstanding.

ADVICE: Promote sharing. Holding back can hurt you in the long run. Don't neglect smaller projects or daily chores. Be honest about your emotions.

A Broad Spectrum of Admirers

This extremely charismatic relationship can be magnetic in attracting a broad spectrum of admirers, followers and hangers-on. There is in fact something extreme about the matchup, in terms of what it brings out not only in its partners but in their admirers. The danger here is that because these two attract a kind of edgy adulation, they start to believe it themselves, which induces all kinds of inappropriate behavior in them. Getting rid of an entourage can be harder than it seems, which the couple should perhaps think about before encouraging one in the first place. Within the relationship itself, these partners sometimes find themselves needing their partner's attention and approval, with Scorpio I's tending to be slightly the more dependent of the two. Aquarius II's have a relaxed approach that seems to yield great rewards in exchange for little effort. They are not big on suffering and generally figure the easiest way is the best. A little wary of this, Scorpio I's usually take the more difficult path, which has more meaning for them.

In love affairs, friendships and marriages, Scorpio I's may resent what they view as superficiality on their partner's part. To Aquarius II's, however, Scorpio I's seem no more profound than they are, just a bit more dedicated to cultivating pain. The relationship may not furnish the kind of understanding that Scorpio I's so desperately require but can often provide the kind of relaxation that they equally need. Passions seldom run high here, but both partners enjoy the relationship's steady sensuousness. Should these pleasures turn cloying, they may well seek temporary escape from each other in a more exciting and less certain direction.

Strong differences of opinion are common in career and family pairings. Generally speaking, Scorpio I's tend to be the more idealistic and egalitarian of the pair, Aquarius II's the more pragmatic and elitist. Excesses and extremes of thought and behavior are likely to polarize these two and also to set them in competition for the attention of colleagues or relatives.

ADVICE: Exert more willpower. Direction is needed. Attention is not everything. Learn to do without. Build up your moral strength and decisiveness.

Exploring the Shadow Side

The often turbulent chemistry in this relationship can force both partners to explore their shadow side. The confrontation with this shadow is the relationship's principal challenge and focus; it is often painful and difficult, but if the partners have the guts to hang in there, they have the potential to make excellent progress in their own personal development. The impetus for this self-exploration usually comes from Aquarius III's. They might appear to be dominated by their Scorpio I partners, and they are indeed at the very least wary of them, being afraid of their criticism and their aggression. Yet it is only the overt decision-making that Aquarius III's leave up to Scorpio I's, preferring to call the shots in a subtle way. This is demonstrated by the fact that Scorpio I's will rarely make a move without consulting their partner and asking for advice.

Love affairs are apt to be highly stressful. In order for them to last, Aquarius III's will have to show great patience with their Scorpio I partners. Both partners will enjoy the relationship's physicality, since this is one area where their dark side can be granted freer expression without accompanying disruption. They will learn a great deal from their emotional interactions, but it may still be necessary for the Aquarius III to continue to pretend that the Scorpio I is the boss. This attitude can continue into marriage. Here, however, Aquarius III's will usually take the lead openly, at least as far as dealing with children is concerned.

In friendships and in sibling and working relationships, Scorpio I's and Aquarius III's usually become not more dependent on but more independent of each other. The health of these relationships becomes apparent when their members move on to create new matchups with other people, carrying with them the valuable knowledge they have gained of themselves with each other. Self-actualizing, such relationships raise their partners to new levels of awareness and performance.

ADVICE: Hang in there. Minimize turbulence. Awareness is of mutual benefit. The dark side is not to be feared. Make friends with internal enemies.

THE CUSP OF SENSITIVITY
AQUARIUS-PISCES CUSP

The Trustworthy Mirror

This relationship manifests as a bedrock of trust and understanding, a place the partners can turn to for thoughtful advice, empathy and support. Here they are called upon to be trustworthy mirrors of each other's feelings, reflecting them back to be viewed. With great gentleness, Scorpio I's will strive to bring Aquarius-Pisces' feelings out into the open and to help dissolve the defenses they have built up over the years. Aquarius-Pisces, meanwhile, are among the few individuals with the patience and insight to help Scorpio I's dig deeper into themselves. This personal dynamic would seem to have little connection with the efficient team these two can make in their careers, yet even worldly pursuits depend on a core of understanding at their base. These two often have an instinctual knowledge of how things work in their common field, and their joint mastery of technique can put many a successful enterprise on its feet.

In friendship, love and marriage, this combination can involve a strong empathic bond that provides mutual protection and support. Although love and understanding are usually present, passion may be curiously absent. As rewarding as these relationships can be, Scorpio I's may grow bored and long for greater intensity. Should they look elsewhere, or actually stray, Aquarius-Pisces could retreat behind their protective wall, resolving never to give away their heart so readily again. In the family, parent-child relationships in this combination can be sensitive and deeply empathic.

Work relationships between these two can be productive. It matters little which person is the boss and which the assistant, or even which has the higher position as co-workers within a hierarchy; this relationship is not about the exercise of power. It is rather about each partner's acute sensitivity to what the other is feeling—this is what makes their close cooperation and instant communication possible. There is no guarantee, however, that they will have the desire to develop their capabilities fully and dare to fail, for too often they are content to reach a reasonable position and stay there.

ADVICE: Empathy may not be enough. Push yourself a bit more to achieve the very best you are capable of, in all areas. Strive for peak experiences.

The Rules

This pair is united by a search for the underlying rules that govern human behavior and natural phenomena. Their relationship brings out their philosophical and serious sides, but this does not mean they are incapable of having fun together. The focus here is on a respect for tradition, a concomitant desire to do things properly and a solid pragmatism that lends support to any project. Scorpio I's appear the more practical, scientific and factual of the pair, Pisces I's more theoretical, metaphysical and dreamy. Whether they actually work together or not, Scorpio I's and Pisces I's often eventually come to respect each other's ideas.

The physical attraction between these two can be pronounced, and highly sensual interactions usually result. Since Pisces I and Scorpio I lie in trine aspect to each other (120° apart in the zodiac), astrology predicts an easy, pleasurable interaction between them, and as lovers these two may indeed give themselves over to the unbridled pursuit of pleasure. The need here is for self-understanding. If the partners are unable to gain psychological awareness, they are likely to feel helpless when struck by depression, anxiety or grief. Their relationship can be prone to obsession or addiction, both of which seem to serve the dual purpose of providing pleasure and preventing pain, but eventually lead to breakdowns. Serious thought should be given to such matters before taking the step of marriage.

It is in the sphere of career and friendship that the philosophical aspects of the relationship are most clearly revealed. Responsibility of thought, rather than of action, is crucial here, for each partner will follow high intellectual and moral principles in their activities, whether as professional or leisure-time partners. Family matchups, too, make serious demands and require great understanding and trust if natural jealousies and differences of opinion are to be surmounted.

ADVICE: Connect emotion and intellect. Look for thoughtfulness in love. Be open to other points of view. Jealousy can prove divisive.

THE WEEK OF THE LONER

Ambiguous Fog

This is by no means an ordinary matchup—in fact, it is a highly complex relationship, at times extraordinarily close, at others barely viable. The reason for this is the depth of the partners' emotional involvement, which is usually pronounced, so that if either of them takes offense or feels neglected or unfairly treated by the other, communication breakdowns and withdrawals are to be expected. The relationship shows such enormous sensitivity that day-to-day interactions are more likely to be governed by feelings and moods than by reason.

Objectivity is difficult to achieve in the areas of love and friendship, which are apt to be intertwined. Since each of these personalities is extremely private and secretive, their ability to share at a deep level in this relationship raises serious issues of trust. Any breach of the relationship's personal code could be viewed as a serious betrayal. Furthermore, Scorpio I's and Pisces II's usually become overdependent on each other emotionally, which they realize only when they are deprived of each other's company, through separation or breakup. Together they inevitably face the problem of how to maintain their individuality and keep themselves from getting lost in an amorphous and ambiguous emotional fog.

The competitive aspects of the combination emerge in family, career and marital settings. It is particularly important that each partner's individual worth be recognized, no matter how successful they may be as a pair. Difficulties arise when Pisces II's feel that Scorpio I's are being aggressive and controlling, or when Scorpio I's find their Pisces II partners vague, misleading or uncommunicative. Working and living together on a daily basis may be difficult for these two given their emotional volatility and temperamental differences. If they can concentrate on the job at hand, they can complete small projects of limited scope, but they should think carefully before taking on a project of larger scale.

ADVICE: Strive for objectivity. Don't be so unforgiving. As close as you are, you may still not truly understand each other. Try to give greater definition to your feelings.

Several Metamorphoses

Once the partners in this relationship set their minds on achieving something, they are unlikely to give up until they reach their goal. But making up their minds in the first place can be a problem. Scorpio I's can be hard to please, and their elaborate precision is likely to drive Pisces III's crazy. They obsess on details that Pisces III's are more than willing to overlook, being more interested in getting the show on the road. Although Scorpio and Pisces are water signs, their relationship is ruled by earth, which means that it emphasizes solidity, purpose and responsibility.

Scorpio I–Pisces III love affairs can be sexually intense but also claiming. Their involvements are hard for them to get any distance from, or, if necessary, to dissolve, without intense pain. These relationships can last for years but can also go through a number of metamorphoses, including a more platonic phase that resembles a close friendship. They could also survive a long period spent geographically apart. Marriages in this combination usually last for life, since the couple's emotional, financial and social involvements are characteristically too binding to be easily broken. These relationships can prove mutually advantageous, since both partners take an equal share in work efforts and in reaping their rewards.

Family and work involvements can overlap, so that they favor businesses and occupations in which the partners' family has a history dating back a few generations. It is not uncommon for Scorpio I parents and Pisces III children to learn a great deal from each other professionally and to share all decisions of a business nature. When these two are friends, on the other hand, they are best off keeping their personal relationship apart from their business and family involvements. These friendships tend to be private in nature and are deliberately kept that way to avoid both prying eyes (looking in) and alluring prospects (looking out)—for they tend to isolate themselves unduly from the world or else to occupy an elitist or exclusive social position.

ADVICE: Don't get hung up on details. Keep the big picture in mind. Be open to the influence of others. If changes are necessary, don't oppose them.

THE WEEK OF DEPTH
SCORPIO II

Well-Nigh Unassailable

This would appear to be an unavoidably heavy matchup but does not have to be. Although both of these partners may play a commanding role in their relationships with other people, in their own relationship they can be surprisingly undemanding. This is because they respect each other's power and little need to impress someone they consider at least as powerful—and as dangerous—as themselves with an aggressive or threatening stance. Their relationship, then, is often stable, self-assured and, at least as far as attacks from outside are concerned, well-nigh unassailable.

True, in times of emotional frustration these two can sink to all-time depressive lows together, and it will be hard for them to drag each other out of their mutual funk. Love affairs and marriages thus afflicted can experience great pain and suffering. The partners are no strangers to such phenomena, however, and will often manage to live with these difficulties for years, hanging in there without quitting and sometimes even overcoming or simply outlasting their problems. Third parties who make the mistake of trying to intrude, perhaps feeling that they can make one of the lovers happier, may get a double sting from this Scorpionic duo before they depart wiser.

Scorpio II's may be a bit too wary and suspicious of each other to make good business partners. Not so much conflict as a kind of quiet paranoia may keep them from trusting each other enough to allow the kind of freedom either of them will need to conclude business deals and work on developing products or marketing strategies. As siblings and friends, they will serve to toughen each other up and will also often protect each other from outside threat, for example from parents. Jealousy and competitiveness may be a problem for them, however, in relation to a common lover, parent or friend. Still, Scorpio II's know how to put such considerations aside in favor of preserving their own relationship.

ADVICE: Nip depressions in the bud when possible. Beware of competition and jealousies. Loyalty can also be repressive. Don't hold on to your pain.

A Materialistic Haze

This relationship can be remarkably easygoing and natural. Its freedom from conflict and stress, however, can become a problem if the partners slip into a self-satisfied and materialistic haze in which they neither attain nor, sometimes, even desire any kind of personal or spiritual development. Scorpio II's may want the relationship to offer a fuller emotional palette and can show signs of impatience or frustration if it does not. Scorpio III's may prefer to be left alone and not reminded of whatever is lacking from the relationship, since they may be quite satisfied with things as they are.

Both love affairs and marriages between these two can be quite satisfying and long-lasting. The partners are generally thoughtful and considerate, loyal and hardworking. Love affairs usually acquire greater meaning when they develop into permanent living situations or marriages, and children can be a special blessing. Both partners can make attentive and nurturing parents, but they should be careful not to be overprotective, stifling their children's more creative or spiritual side. And when these children reach adolescence, they may put their Scorpio II–Scorpio III parents through the ordeal of facing a rebellion against the materialistic aspects of family life, depending on their individual makeup.

Members of the same sex may find themselves either friends or enemies, or, in the case of career connections, either colleagues or competitors. In all cases, the pairing has a certain ease about it, and rivalries can be carried on without resort to underhanded methods or cruelty; but this is not to say that the combat is any less fierce, since for both these personalities victory is the only possibility. Colleagues, co-workers and business partners in this combination must prevent their power drives as a pair from making them turn ruthless or unfairly take advantage of a situation that holds out the promise of advancement or profit. In family settings, relatives in this combination may be polite enough but often harbor secret animosities and grudges toward each other.

ADVICE: Work harder on self-actualization. Don't neglect the spiritual side of life. Victory is less important than you think. Bring feelings out into the open.

Style Over Substance

This relationship generally puts more emphasis on the way something is done than on what it is that is done—in short, it ranks style over substance. Manners, etiquette, convention and protocol are all necessary issues here. Some would argue that a relationship like this one is false, superficial or based on illusory values, but it is truer to say that it is concerned with style and with doing things in an elegant way. Conversations between Scorpio II's and Scorpio-Sagittarians can be so beguiling and seductive that it is difficult to remember afterward what was said. There is certainly an element of game-playing in all this, but it usually doesn't hurt anyone and the partners rarely kid themselves about what is really going on.

Love affairs and marriages are not especially recommended here. These partners have trouble expressing their real feelings, and when they do manage it, open warfare often results. Friendships in this combination are potentially a lot more successful, and in fact spouses and lovers who give up their physical relationship and become friends sometimes experience a marked relief from tension and can eventually enjoy and develop themselves much more productively. As a pair, these friends are likely to occupy a central position within a group; those around them are likely to rely on them for their strength and dependability.

In business and other professional endeavors in which both partners have an interest, they can work out contracts and deals with little pain and great profit on both sides—as long as they are happy to benefit mutually. Since both of them are capable of a lot of trickery between the lines, however, reading the fine print, at the very least, is strongly advised. Boss-employee relationships of either combination can work out satisfactorily with little blame or guilt. Likewise, parent-child relationships can be mutually respectful and relatively free of conflict.

ADVICE: Your style is great—beef up your substance. Don't get carried away by illusion. Stick to your word. Remember that others depend on you.

An Exothermic Reaction

The air of calculation in this relationship indicates forethought and purpose. With each other, both of these partners are able to be sure of what they want and are willing to make the necessary sacrifices to get it. The result is the potential for great achievement. Scorpio II's and Sagittarius I's can be strongly attracted to each other; some type of partnership between them is quite common. Yet their chemistry is exothermic, meaning that the heat of their reaction isn't always put to good use. Unless they can focus some of this energy on goals of a higher, more spiritual nature, they risk a damaging kind of implosion. Sagittarius I's can awaken the sleeping energies of Scorpio II's, who in turn can ground the wilder and more flighty tendencies of Sagittarius I's.

Love affairs here are usually intense at the start, but feelings can sharply and quickly fall off. Like a lighting rod, Scorpio II's pull Sagittarius I fire from the sky. That energy is easily lost, but if it can be contained it will provide a driving current. This is a matchup that can rarely survive on romance or sexuality alone—it needs concrete goals. The project of building a family, career or lifestyle may well be what these personalities want, and marriage will often supply it. Their relationship can drive them both on willy-nilly, and in the process both of them might undergo a metamorphosis, or at the very least a significant change in their personalities.

Career, family ties and friendships are often related in this matchup. A Scorpio II can be a strongly controlling force whose guidance Sagittarius I's may be open to accepting. In business, Scorpio II's often handle the finances while Sagittarius I's give the partnership its dynamic public persona. Problems arise in these areas when too much is demanded of either partner, for versatility is seldom a strength here. Stricter separation of business and pleasure, career and home, and social and personal aspects of life may have to be maintained for the sake of sanity and stability.

ADVICE: Don't expect too much. Make solid contributions that really count. Beware of using each other selfishly. Keep your eye on the object.

Expressing Disapproval

This can be an agreeable enough relationship, but it isn't necessarily a reliable one. It often focuses on expressing its disapproval of established mores, and it can even outright rebel. As a pair, these two are unable to accept the status quo. Their matchup is always trying to implement new values and ideas in place of old but is not invariably successful, since its internal cohesion is somewhat weak. When the partners are not facing any kind of external threat, for example, they tend to turn on each other, engaging in fierce disagreements or simply drifting apart. Furthermore, Scorpio II's have controlling impulses while Sagittarius II's need freedom and sometimes find their partner in this combination downright repressive. In extreme cases they will be forced to revolt against Scorpio II authority.

In love affairs and marriages these two will usually do things their own way, despite the disapproval of their family and friends. These relationships are rarely conventional, but the couple's antisocial attitudes can boomerang on them and also on any children they might have. Learning diplomacy and compromise will be extremely important for them, since their tendency to arouse antagonism in others can become a serious problem.

In friendships, Scorpio II's will encourage the introspective side of Sagittarius II's, so that the relationship may become an exercise in self-realization. It will also be quite physically active—this pair can be strongly oriented toward sports or exercise, a beneficial direction for relatively sedentary Scorpio II's. Siblings in this combination can affect each other favorably but must take care not to let their competitive and combative urges run out of hand. The matchup may not work out so well in the commercial sphere, since financially prudent Scorpio II's will probably disapprove of the loose Sagittarius II approach to money, and conflict is likely to result.

ADVICE: Calm your rebellious urges. Be more patient and accepting. Innovation can be implemented quietly. Encourage personal and spiritual growth.

Structuring Freedom

These two generate so much energy that there is no way their relationship can contain it. Energy like this is stimulating, exciting and a source of creative fuel, but it also demands the freedom to follow as many avenues of advance as possible. The relationship, then, should focus on creating freedom and latitude between its partners. It should be structured freely enough to allow them the space they need; if it is not, power struggles can easily emerge between them. These two may have a tendency to poke themselves into each other's affairs and in general to breathe down each other's necks. Paradoxically, in order to guarantee the maximum freedom to them both, they may have to agree upon and observe a set of fixed rules.

Open lines of communication are essential here; love affairs will certainly suffer without them, no matter how gratifying these affairs might be physically. Sagittarius III's will find smoldering Scorpio II passion highly pleasurable but may not enjoy the periodic depressions and resentments that accompany it. Scorpio II's sometimes feel neglected in this relationship but are usually self-sufficient enough to handle it. Marriages can be successful as long as the spouses agree on rules that they can observe strictly. They will not tolerate being dependent on each other financially, so the best situation will be for both of them to have their own income, or, if they do hold money in common, for those sums to be well enough budgeted that they can be spent without either partner having to ask the other's permission.

In the family, the Sagittarius III child's need for freedom may not be at all what controlling Scorpio II parents have in mind, and the relationship can be stormy. Scorpio II children may have to seek other role-models if their Sagittarius III parent is gone too much of the time. Friendships and co-worker matchups in this combination can work only if they focus on responsibility to a common activity or project, rather than on a mutual emotional need. Too often, temperamental differences eventually lead to alienation.

ADVICE: Take the time for comprehensive discussion and planning. Freedom will not materialize by itself. Lighten up whenever possible, and relax.

Lively Interchange

This matchup provides its partners with that elusive commodity: freedom from themselves. Weighty, perhaps even overserious individually, these personalities enjoy lighter, freer and more interesting times when they are together, yet do so without sacrificing their awareness of the deeper side of life. The energy here encourages self-reliance, but the partners can also share ideal, even ecstatic experiences and tend to learn quite a bit as well. For such profound individuals as Scorpio II's and Sagittarius-Capricorns, this pairing could be a once-in-a-lifetime experience, no matter what type of relationship it governs.

Love affairs and marriages here are likely to be quite passionate but lighthearted as well. Strongly sexual, the pair are also sometimes quite playful, which helps them on many levels. Nor are they lacking socially; they will delight in social occasions of all kinds, even while preferring those that are mentally broadening. Together they will love to observe the foibles of others but not in a mean-spirited way—they have a strong compassionate streak. The sense of freedom that is important to both of these personalities will not prevent their love affairs from becoming marriages as long as these affairs are structured properly. If they are not, the partners might still part as friends; in fact, the relationship's strengths—its wit, its relaxing quality, its orientation toward philosophical pursuits in the arts and sciences—mean that continuing a friendship after a love affair is very likely. The partners will be unwilling to give up what the relationship has to offer.

Conflict can be expected in the areas of work and family. Both of these individuals are prone to be dominant in their field. They are unlikely to share power comfortably, and neither is apt to give in to the other's wishes. The same strengths that appear in love affairs will cut the tension at crucial moments, but it is always best if each of these partners has his or her own clear sphere of influence. They value character and integrity and will rarely use underhanded methods to achieve their aims.

ADVICE: Be sure not to become a circle of two. Focus on the need for freedom; don't assume it exists, and make allowances for it. Limit domineering tendencies.

Dropping the Hot Potato

This relationship emphasizes conversation, mental agility and innovative thought. As long as Scorpio II's and Capricorn I's can get along (something that is in no way guaranteed), they can come up with surprisingly original ideas. But all the theorizing in the world is of little interest to these pragmatic thinkers unless it can be put into practice—and ultimately unless it can succeed. Scorpio II's and Capricorn I's will not hesitate to drop ideas, or for that matter people, like a hot potato if they are not working out. In fact, the relationship generally tends to be a bit hard, abrupt and cold. It will be important for this pair to develop a more human, kind and accepting face.

Love affairs and friendships allow normally conservative partners to give vent to a wilder and more flexible side of their makeup. They will not be at all threatened by each other in these relationships and are likely to let it all hang out, not only in the sense of being emotionally expressive but also of being honest. Scorpio II's and Capricorn I's together will see flattery as poison. It is vitally important for them, whether as lovers or as friends, to share their objective evaluations with each other so that they can achieve quantifiable improvement.

Family matchups in this combination are often damaged by serious power struggles. As spouses Scorpio II's and Capricorn I's pursue their social and financial goals with unrelenting purpose and vigor, and as business partners and work colleagues they have a similarly tough, no-nonsense approach. Strong in the spheres of money and power, they make it their business to be successful and will not take no for an answer. Indeed, their relationship has a coercive quality, often using the fist-in-the-velvet-glove approach and making it quite clear what is in store for people who do not agree to their "reasonable" offers. Personal differences will rarely be allowed to intrude in professional matters here.

ADVICE: Work on getting along. Don't be ashamed to show sympathy. Lacking kindness is nothing to be proud of. Develop more human qualities.

THE WEEK OF DETERMINATION
CAPRICORN II

Lending Credence to Normalcy

These two can get so obsessed with doing things in an unusual way that they often only make things hard for themselves. Their relationship can handicap itself, then, through its own idiosyncrasies. Not that these personalities really want to be different; on the contrary, as individuals they are often quite conservative and struggle to embody ideals that would lend credence to the idea of their normalcy. Try as they may, though, they are unlikely to shake off the peculiarities that their relationship engenders, and that will often come to govern their lives.

Fate can play a deciding role in this relationship. Whether tragically or comically, seriously or ridiculously, carefully or chaotically, the partners pursue a course that in retrospect seems predetermined yet that is very much directed by the vagaries of chance. No matter how much they seem to be in control of their destiny, the opposite is usually the case. Whether in their careers or in their love lives, the outcome of any project in which they are involved will most often be unexpected. Their work relationships and marriages are usually ambitious in nature, and success seems to be the only alternative they consider. Yet by not even admitting the possibility of failure and refusing to see any warning signs, the relationship may foster the very outcome it fears the most.

Friendships between these two are often protective and close. In fact, building a private kingdom to which few are granted admittance may become a way of life for them. Both exclusive and secretive, these friendships create their own highly original rules, which may be somewhat at variance with the rules of society but work well enough within this personal context. In family relationships, negative self-fulfilling prophecies are more often the rule than the exception; the partners' statements can reflect deep fears and insecurities, all hiding under a cloak of bravado. Both parents and children may be prone to such pronouncements about themselves or each other.

ADVICE: Be more realistic about yourself. Beware of negative expectations. Slowly build a solid base of self-confidence. Accept your fate.

Relieving Bottlenecks

This powerfully confrontational matchup expends a considerable amount of mental energy on finding the best way to reconcile its differences. When these efforts are successful, they can result in greater understanding; when they are not, instability and disorder threaten. The relationship, then, will try to bring Scorpio II's and Capricorn III's closer and to open avenues of communication between them. Both partners can be recalcitrant when a third party attempts to mediate between them; they seem to need to work out their problems by themselves, under the relationship's umbrella. They will both feel enormous satisfaction when they hammer out an agreement but also disappointment and sadness if they break off their negotiations in anger—an outcome that always looms.

Love affairs between Scorpio II's and Capricorn III's can be physically passionate but often have difficulty reaching a deeper emotional understanding. Both of them tend to keep their true feelings to themselves, and their relationship will encounter bottlenecks of repression. Working through these roadblocks to a freer and easier sort of expression is often the crying need here. Sometimes neither partner is fully aware of this, however, and it may take the advice of a friend, or, in some cases, psychological counseling, to alert them to the problem. Even so, marriages between these two can be enduring. Both partners are likely to be faithful and devoted spouses. As friends and as rivals, Scorpio II's and Capricorn III's sit on a pendulum that can swing in either direction. Their negative and their positive feelings for each other are often equal in these relationships, so that they may alternately like and dislike each other, in cycles of a certain regularity. They should try, however, to limit the scope of any arguments they might have, for these are liable to escalate rapidly to a point of no return. An equally harmful alternative is for them to hammer down their negative feelings inside, which can produce frustration and depression. Parent-child and boss-employee matchups in this combination can often successfully reach a level of increased respect and understanding as the years go by.

ADVICE: Don't give up on your quest for understanding. Put limits on disagreement. Beware of repression. Open avenues of communication.

CAPRICORN-AQUARIUS CUSP

January 17–22

Kiss and Make Up

This relationship causes its partners to look at the big picture but also to be optimistic. They can even get carried away by their waves of expectation. Not only can Scorpio II's and Capricorn-Aquarians have great times together, they can bring large-scale projects to fruition—as long as emotional flare-ups between them don't sabotage all their efforts and leave their projects in smoking ruin. This is emphasized by the fact that the relationship is governed by fire, an element indicating creativity and positive energy but also, lest we forget, capable of raging out of control and causing great destruction.

Love and family relationships can be especially volatile. Lovers and even parent-child pairs in this combination might love each other deeply but can still have trouble maintaining consistency and stability in their daily life together. Particularly when Capricorn-Aquarians are in the dominant role, Scorpio II's have a way of triggering their anger and setting off explosions of feeling, which often lead to unhappiness and bitterness. The partners may well be able to kiss and make up; in fact, they often do. But while Scorpio II's might be able to forgive what has happened, they will never really forget it and will be much more on their guard in the future.

Marriages and work relationships in this combination have their ups and downs. True, some projects reach a satisfactory conclusion, but many more never get off the ground. In the end, coming out with new ideas may become a tiring and even agonizing process for this pair as they develop a record of past disappointments. Having fewer expectations, trying to limit ideas and pursue only the workable ones, and muting optimism will help the relationship to be more realistic and perhaps more successful.

Friendships are best kept separate from business and social endeavors; as friends these two are capable of having such great times together that it seems a shame to spoil things by taking on increased responsibilities or developing more serious intentions.

Nothing Short of Amazing

When these two combine their energies the results can be nothing short of miraculous. Indeed, the chemistry here is somewhat unfathomable, for the partners themselves have difficulty figuring out how two such completely different approaches can yield such wonderful results. Aquarius I's don't always understand Scorpio II's that well, seeing them as people who always do things the hard way. Meanwhile, Scorpio II's are usually amazed when an Aquarius I does something in half the time it would have taken them, but they remain a little suspicious of their partner's methods. These two should not delve too deeply into such mysteries, since things often work best when their underlying mechanisms stay hidden.

Love affairs here can be highly romantic. Scorpio II's are usually solidly in control of these relationships, but since they generally find their Aquarius I lovers thoroughly captivating and charming, they can easily be manipulated, and their dominance is not oppressive. Should the romance lead to marriage, Scorpio II's may find their spouse troublingly flighty and unable to share their own serious approach to things. But few personalities in the year can take their minds off their career worries when they get home after a hard day's work as easily as fun-loving Aquarius I's. In fact, if Aquarius I's tire of Scorpio II's heaviness and seek excitement elsewhere, their depressions could reach all-time lows.

Youthful friendships and sibling relationships are drawn toward the supernatural—they love horror stories, science fiction and fantasy. Exploring the dark side of human experience, both on screen and off, is common here. The partners must beware of indulging in activities that can be harmful or frightening to other people, particularly those much younger or much older than they. Scorpio II's and Aquarius I's can produce fantastic results in the professional sphere but are too often divided by ideological differences. Keeping their opinions to themselves may be a prerequisite to getting the job done.

The Eternal Flame

The great temperamental differences between these two personalities will often arouse friction within the relationship. These tensions, however, are highly provocative, producing a dynamic at once challenging and seductive. Scorpio II and Aquarius II lie square to each other in the zodiac (they are 90° apart), which can cause all sorts of difficulties, but it also ensures that dull moments will be few. Aquarius II's will be pleased to have their emotions stirred so deeply but are also apt to be disturbed by their partner's intrusions. Scorpio II's will love the relationship's passion, even though they won't always take this partner too seriously. Actually the matchup as a whole is best taken with a grain of salt and a twinkle in the eye, a healthy way to avoid its otherwise inevitable tension and frustration.

In love affairs, smoldering desires can stir up all sorts of passionate feelings. If this fiery matchup ever dies down, its embers can quickly be rekindled to white heat. Marriages, too, tend to hold something in reserve—something to keep them from burning out. Even after spending long periods apart, when these two are together again they will feel an almost immediate warmth, as if lit by an eternal flame.

Friendships in this combination tend to engage in banter bordering on outright insult—the partners often have great fun trying to one-up each other or have the last word. Actually, serious competition and jealousy sometimes emerge here, but the partners are usually well aware of how quickly such feelings can be aroused and rarely let their relationship turn hostile.

In domestic and professional settings, Aquarius II's have a relaxed approach that will often captivate Scorpio II's, who, however, can nevertheless be extremely demanding and critical, disapproving of the very attitudes that attracted them in the first place. Aquarius II children and employees may consequently see their Scorpio II parents and bosses as having a dark, brooding intensity that serves no useful purpose.

ADVICE: Beware of playing with fire. Your jokes may be taken seriously. Take the time to be clear about what you mean. Let up, relax.

Sharing Emotional Experiences

Empathic feelings provide the predominant energy in this relationship. But although sharing deep emotional experiences may ultimately be a positive experience for these two, in the short run they will run into a lot of rough spots, since neither of them much cares for exposing themselves. A pattern of closeness followed by distancing would be no surprise here. Still, Aquarius III's are quite capable of giving Scorpio II's the kind of understanding they crave, and indeed the relationship draws out not only the more accepting qualities of Aquarius III's but also their curiosity about their emotionally complex partners. It's true that Scorpio II's are also likely to activate the dark side of Aquarius III's, but this can ultimately lead them into passionate involvements and a good dose of self-analysis and confrontation.

Love affairs and marriages between these partners are often rewarding and pleasurable. Scorpio II's will be roused to new heights of passion by provocative and unreserved Aquarius III sensuality. Aquarius III's are deeply touched by their partner's total commitment; they tend to tire easily in love and marriage, but their Scorpio II partner will provide them with an almost inexhaustible palette of sensuous delights to pick from. As parents these two can make a dedicated couple. Having quite different points of view, they also provide their children with a real choice when it comes to voicing complaints and airing worries.

Co-workers and siblings in this combination rarely isolate themselves from their fellow employees and family members; they enjoy establishing social ties. This means that their relationship can become the central focus of their group and that they often act as advisors and mediators for other people. As friends, they can find many exciting activities to be involved in while rarely if ever losing sight of or taking for granted their own empathic bond. Tragic scenes may result, however, if both of them are romantically drawn to a third person and ultimately have to make an impossible decision against their own friendship.

ADVICE: Beware of dangerous escapes. Confrontation is important here—don't run out on it. Don't throw away what is most valuable to you.

THE CUSP OF SENSITIVITY
AQUARIUS-PISCES CUSP

Serious Ethical Issues

The question of which or whose rules to play by is addressed with great seriousness in this relationship, which is likely to be taken up with ethical problems or with putting ideals into practice. The greatest source of conflict here will be the issue of whose moral code to follow. Scorpio II's usually have the more refined sense of right and wrong, but they don't always articulate it consciously, and their moral indignation can manifest in destructive ways. They are usually right, but other people rarely admit it. Aquarius-Pisces, meanwhile, have a looser sense of honor, and the role of fantasy in their makeup should never be underestimated. It is crucial for this pair to agree on the structure their relationship is to follow. This will be a difficult task at best, since as individuals both of these personalities are prone to living on the very edge of the subconscious most of the time. The tyrannical quality in their relationship, in fact, is a result of this internal projection.

Love affairs and friendships seek to satisfy the more social side of these partners. Aquarius-Pisces secretly long for a strong figure to take the lead and draw them out socially. Once they are out in public, in fact, it may be hard for more reclusive Scorpio II's to get them to go home again, resulting in strange conflicts over the balance between social and personal interaction. Aquarius-Pisces must learn to be sensitive to the darker moods of Scorpio II's and to know when to back off and leave them alone. In marriages the stress will be on proper behavior and following the rules of good conduct. These rules should be explicitly stated if misunderstandings, accusations and conflicts are to be avoided and the marriage is not to be stormy. Sibling relationships in this combination, prone as they are to following the rules of the larger family unit, can be close and sympathetic.

In the professional sphere, these two seek a fulfillment beyond mere financial gain. To feel comfortable with their very likely success, they need a strong moral purpose.

ADVICE: Don't expect others to sympathize with your views. Beware of turning others off with your fervor. Don't be so strict.

THE WEEK OF SPIRIT
PISCES I

Heaven or Hell?

This classic matchup seems to have been made in heaven—or perhaps in hell. In either case it is irresistible and often unconventional. The pair can achieve considerable professional success, but this is certainly no guarantee of the consistency or stability of their personal relationship. Scorpio II's are notoriously hard to reach, especially in their darker moods, and although Pisces I's understand them as well as anyone, their needs and demands will often prove too much for their partner in this combination to handle. Aggressive as they are, they will not find Pisces I's pushovers by any means; this couple's battles will be long and hard fought. Based squarely on feeling, the relationship will usually have a dual focus: working out emotional problems and putting the tremendous energy that the relationship releases in the service of a professional endeavor, whether in business or the arts.

Scorpio II's and Pisces I's in love can get too close. Swallowed up by their relationship, they may have to struggle to maintain their own identities; their private world is likely to be exclusive, shutting out everyone else. It is tempting to think they have been involved in previous lifetimes, so familiar and complex is their interaction. Emotional problems between these two often seem insoluble, yet they will rarely give up on them and can in fact make a lot of progress in working them out. Drugs and sex, however, are likely to be all-too-ready escapes in this exhausting process. Marriages are not recommended here unless the spouses are willing to commit themselves to a lot of serious psychological investigation.

Professionally this matchup can be one of the most successful in the entire year. Family members, friends and spouses or lovers often have interrelated careers or actually become business partners or co-workers. The crucial issue is how they will relate to each other personally. The decision may have to be made to limit their contact on the job, since their chaotic energies could prove disruptive to the project and to those around them.

ADVICE: Take a break from each other occasionally. Follow the constructive path. Don't get sidetracked from your real purpose in life.

THE WEEK OF THE LONER
PISCES II

The Coveted Goal

This is a highly seductive combination, and not just physically. Attraction and desire play a large role here, but the relationship's magnetism works not only between the partners themselves but between them as a pair and a goal they covet, whether social, financial or family oriented. The relationship brings out its partners' most determined sides, enabling them to achieve together what they might not achieve alone. Usually, though, this is more to the benefit of the Pisces II. Scorpio II and Pisces II are positioned trine to each other in the zodiac (120° apart), which here suggests an easy, sensuous orientation. Relationships in this combination can be very tightly knit. In some ways, in fact, they are indissoluble, since their watery nature is already so fluid. Yet they have another side as well, an earthy one, which is intensely practical and responsible. At times conflicts can arise between these two sides, with one pulling toward relaxation and procrastination, the other toward action and effort.

Love affairs here can be highly secretive. Family members and friends may think they know what goes on in private between Scorpio II's and Pisces II's, but they are usually wrong. Much of the relationship's psychological import is often hidden from the lovers themselves, who may not be terribly interested in self-analysis. Marriages might prove more successful than love affairs, since they would satisfy the need of both partners to take on responsibilities. Strong business or career ties could be the cement holding the whole thing together.

In the family, Scorpio II–Pisces II relatives can be highly controlling, claiming and demanding of attention. Friendships work out best when grounded by a common interest. Hobbies, sports and fitness activities, entertainment and adventure can lure these two away from other pressing duties and become the dominant focus in their lives. Co-workers in this combination often work side by side for years in relative harmony, with a steady output and little fuss.

ADVICE: Decide where your priorities lie. Make up your mind and act. Find an outlet for your responsible side. Don't get muddled or mired down.

Powers of Persuasion

Once these partners make up their minds about something, they are likely to get their way. Powers of persuasion are enormous in this relationship, so much so that people are liable to believe almost anything these two say. The result is that they have a tremendous moral responsibility not to betray the trust of those who follow them. Of course, it may not be so easy for Scorpio II's and Pisces III's to reach agreement or even to meet in the first place. Should they encounter each other later in life, they may deeply regret not having met sooner.

Love affairs are likely to be more soulful than romantic. An element of sorrow or pain may pervade these relationships, for they carry with them an awareness of the travails of life. Happiness here has a slightly bittersweet quality, being suffused with the belief that although life is not a bed of roses, things most often turn out for the best. In marriages, a spirit of resignation will carry the spouses through some pretty rough spots.

Professional and career matchups in this combination can be very successful and will rely heavily on the couple's persuasiveness. It is of crucial importance that the products or services they offer be sound and reliable, and even then they may have trouble living up to their reputation. Truth to tell, it is often not the Scorpio II's and Pisces III's who are blowing their trumpet but their consumers and clients, who in their enthusiasm often exaggerate things out of all proportion.

As siblings and friends these two may prefer to keep to themselves rather than play a strongly social role. Increased reflectiveness and spirituality often manifest here with age and maturity; after a stormy adolescence, the pair may slowly begin to develop meditative powers and to ponder the meaning of life.

ADVICE: Watch what you say. Don't give other people the wrong idea. Your persuasiveness can backfire. Don't exaggerate. Let your actions speak for themselves.

THE WEEK OF CHARM

Giving Ground

Although Scorpio III's tend to be strong individuals, this relationship may be somewhat ineffective, for both of them want to be boss. As a result, they can easily find themselves pitted against each other, as competitors, rivals or enemies. The solution is for one of them to give ground, leaving the top spot to the other, or else for them both to compromise, de-escalating their power struggles and perhaps agreeing to a lower but equal footing within their group. This will be hard for them to do, for their relationship tends to bring out their aggression and fighting spirit. But the alternative is to wind up doing nothing or to settle fearfully for less than the best, since any initiative seems to arouse resistance.

Love affairs and marriages between these two are not unheard of but rarely work out. The Scorpio III tendency toward secrecy—these personalities like to hide their emotions behind smoke screens—is amplified here. In the absence of having any clue as to what the other person is thinking or feeling, the partners will have to try to interpret each other's behavior and will usually end up inferring devious motives and duplicity. The lack of empathy and the level of suspicion here bodes ill. Should one or both partners be only out for what they can get, the days of the relationship will be numbered, since a Scorpio III will rarely tolerate being treated this way (even when they are acting this way themselves).

Friendships in this combination have similar auspices—they are possible but not that common—and parent-child combinations rarely work well, since Scorpio III's will insist on both giving orders and refusing to obey them. On the other hand, competition and challenge often bring out the best in Scorpio III's who find themselves on different sides of the fence. Their rivalry seldom involves personal dislike or hatred; in fact, they may have the greatest respect and in some cases admiration for each other. Rarely, however, do they voluntarily come to work for the same company or successfully start a business together.

ADVICE: Try compromising a bit. Limit combative tendencies. If your rival demands respect, show it. Don't be afraid of success.

THE CUSP OF REVOLUTION
 SCORPIO-SAGITTARIUS CUSP

Sidestepping Clashes

Scorpio III dominance and Scorpio-Sagittarius rebellion would appear to be headed for a clash, but in fact the chemistry of this combination is most often highly auspicious and can be beneficial for both partners, emphasizing solidity, stability and open avenues of communication. As partners these two are able to harness their considerable energies in the service of a cause or organization, and the dynamic of their matchup is often much greater than the sum of their forces as individuals. On the other hand, the effects of their union, although favorable for the partners themselves, can have unfavorable consequences for others, so that the pair must be prepared to encounter animosity and stiff resistance.

Love affairs between Scorpio III's and Scorpio-Sagittarians can be hard to resist, even if one of the partners is already involved in a perhaps happy primary relationship. Great care must be taken in starting up such affairs, however, for self-destructive tendencies of which neither partner is at all aware may be at work here. The pleasure of the pairing can be great, but so can the pain, and in fact quite an agonizing scenario can emerge for everyone involved. Marriages usually involve a cast-iron commitment; these spouses will deal with any infidelity in an extremely unforgiving way.

Parent-child relationships in either possible variation may be power-oriented, with parents projecting their own wishes and desires onto their offspring. Rebellion is less the problem here than its opposite, that is, submission and even worship of the parent, particularly when the Scorpio III is the parent and the Scorpio-Sagittarius the child. This can usually be worked out only when children achieve recognition in their own right, and on their own terms, as adults. Friendships and working relationships in this combination are usually highly rewarding on the personal level, but if they lack adequate interest and challenge, frustration is sure to result.

ADVICE: Try to listen to other people. Beware of arousing animosities. Cultivate flexibility and openness. You may be sabotaging yourself. Be watchful.

THE WEEK OF INDEPENDENCE
 SAGITTARIUS I

A Combined Assault

There are two distinct possibilities in this relationship: the first is that the partners will waste their time in rebelliousness (usually a scenario that sees Scorpio III's trying vainly to boss Sagittarius I's around); the second, more meaningfully, has them combining their talents in an all-out joint assault on closed minds and reactionary attitudes. The latter alternative, of course, will give them a constructive outlet for their considerable creativity and will also bring them closer on a personal level. But they may have to deal with the first possibility first, since the early days or months of their relationship may be extremely stormy. Scorpio III's and Sagittarius I's sometimes take an instant dislike to each other, but it is usually more likely for them to eye each other suspiciously and wait until they know each other better before getting involved.

In both love affairs and parent-child matchups, Scorpio III's will often try to control their partner in this combination, usually to little avail. Their attempts, however, are bound to raise the temperature of Sagittarius I's, with the result that they either flee or fight. Scorpio III's can be tough customers in battle, and Sagittarius I's for their part usually refuse to admit defeat. There can be love between these two, but it is seldom of the completely unconditional sort; both partners will usually hold back from giving their all, even when they seem to have given their hearts away. Subtle permutations on this theme may have the effect, however, of binding the partners ever tighter.

Marriages and working relationships often witness the pair going on the attack. This is a fearful prospect indeed, and any who arouse their ire will be unlikely to make the mistake a second time. In both marriage and work, the relationship usually represents the family or organization's best interests and tries to advance itself economically and socially. If greater opportunity would accrue were a marriage to unite the interests of business partners, both partners might actively pursue such a bond.

ADVICE: Find a creative outlet for your aggression. Beware of being ruled by blind ambition. Tend to matters of feeling. Give love unconditionally.

SCORPIO III

December 3–10

THE WEEK OF THE ORIGINATOR
SAGITTARIUS II

Immediate Activation

These two have the effect of freeing up each other's latent energies. The relationship is a liberating one, then, providing its partners with an atmosphere in which their creativity can bloom and flourish. Yet by emphasizing freedom of thought and action, the relationship sometimes allows these two to get bogged down in periods of frustration or despair in their lives and activities, periods when they feel as though, despite the options available to them, they can proceed no further. At these times they can feel horribly unappreciated and misunderstood. Should one of these funks mark the occasion of their serendipitous first meeting, however, they will often reactivate each other's energies immediately and be swept away by their newly formed relationship.

Love affairs in this combination can be extremely exciting. The partners sometimes meet at a point in their lives when they have just about given up hope of ever meeting that right person. The joy of their encounters can be intense, but if the partners let it blind them to reality, they might ultimately wind up adding their new relationship to a list of past failures. Proceeding on to marriage is recommended only if much soul-searching has been done. Allowing time to pass before tying the knot will let the partners grow closer while also putting their relationship to the test.

Sibling relationships and friendships in this combination can work out, but acute differences of temperament will often send feelings on a roller-coaster ride—stability is not the strong point here. Still, the relationship can often lift its partners' expressiveness to new heights. At work, this pair makes a good collaborative combination, with Scorpio III handling money and practical matters and Sagittarius II dealing with public relations and generating new ideas. Problems can arise if Scorpio III's find Sagittarius II proposals too wild, or if Sagittarius II's grow impatient with what they view as their partner's stick-in-the-mud attitudes.

ADVICE: Look before you leap. Relief can fog your vision. Take the time to test your first impressions. Even out emotional highs and lows.

Integrity's Stance

Integrity and its nature—what constitutes it, what causes it—will likely be the areas of focus in this combination. These questions arise with respect both to personal interactions between these two and to their interactions as a pair with the outside world. They will often attack each other's integrity, be it artistic, political, moral or philosophical. In part this is simply because their basic attitudes differ drastically. Scorpio III's have a selfish side and are not above using other people for their own gain. But when push comes to shove, they have a strange kind of integrity all their own and are not without compassion. Their Sagittarius III partners, meanwhile, talk big and think high-mindedly but don't necessarily live what they say. These strong individuals would do well to concentrate on preserving the integrity of their relationship rather than critiquing each other's moral stands or those of other people.

As lovers these two are unlikely to give their all for romance—they are much too sensible. They will allow themselves the pleasure of falling in love but not the illusion of believing in it. By always keeping one foot on the ground, they can guarantee their relationship's stability without seriously compromising its passion. Marriages can work well here, although their harmony is constantly threatened by power struggles. Spouses should not make social appointments without consulting each other first.

Friendships usually work best when Scorpio II's and Sagittarius III's see each other only occasionally. They are usually far too busy with their own lives to sacrifice much for their relationship—yet they can always count on each other in times of need. Parent-child relationships in this combination can be well balanced, with both partners respecting each other's power. When serious differences of opinion arise, especially in adolescence and young adulthood, either the parent or the child must have the sense to limit the scope of their arguments, since irreparable damage can occur between these two when their passions spiral out of hand. As co-workers, Scorpio III's and Sagittarius III's do best when they have equal say and status.

ADVICE: Give enough to make things worthwhile. Avoid power struggles by promoting equality. Develop your social side. Let go occasionally.

THE CUSP OF PROPHECY
SAGITTARIUS-CAPRICORN CUSP

Perpetual Innovation

This relationship focuses not only on dreaming up new ideas and methods of communication but on how best to disseminate such ideas. As a pair, Scorpio III's and Sagittarius-Capricorns are never happier than when starting up new endeavors. This is not to imply that they are poor at sticking to their projects; in fact, their maintenance skills can also be outstanding. Perhaps, however, this is because they often look on maintenance as an opportunity not only to keep things running smoothly but also to start up countless new projects, perhaps spin-offs of the original. Once they begin a project together, it can become self-perpetuating and practically never-ending.

Marriage and career are often interwoven in this relationship. Since both of these personalities totally involve themselves in anything they do, they are comfortable with a relationship that gives them the opportunity to spend most of their time together, or working on related projects. The condition of their home is likely to reflect their business attitude and vice versa, so that by examining the state of either, one can make a good guess about the other. The relationship is often dominated by drives toward power, status and money. Care should be taken to balance such drives with an ethical, religious or spiritual orientation. The children of such a marriage should not be brought up to believe they are any better than anyone else.

Love affairs between Scorpio III's and Sagittarius-Capricorns can be intense, but if they lack the focus of a common goal, they are likely to burn out quickly or simply fade away due to lack of interest. Friendships and sibling matchups in this combination can be a bit dark-sided—the pair are likely to enjoy horror films and books, tales of the supernatural and science fiction. Obsessive interest in such subjects could have a deleterious effect on the partners' psychological stability and could also isolate them from people around them who simply do not understand.

ADVICE: Beware of obsessive tendencies. Take a break occasionally. Find a quiet place within. Reexamine your values. Beware of dark-sided attractions.

December 26–January 2

THE WEEK OF THE RULER
CAPRICORN I

The Art of Living

This is one of the most creative matchups in the year. Inspiration is its keynote: these two tend to inspire each other and can often share a unique vision, be it artistic, social or humanistic. Scorpio III's and Capricorn I's are dedicated and serious people, but as a pair they are able to indulge their lighter side and have great fun together. Problems can arise as to who is the star, but for the most part both partners take pride in each other's work and feel no need to struggle with each other for the limelight. Not only are joint endeavors favored here, but both partners can be spurred on to greater achievement in their own projects or fields. As individuals their activities are often quite different, even opposite, in nature, and a goal they work toward together is likely to be in no way a simple mixture of their strengths and interests but something utterly itself.

Some couples in this combination put all their effort into their lifestyle, rather than into a specific creative pursuit. The art of living is the highest end for them. Love affairs, marriages and friendships with such an outlook can be highly original in respect to domicile, decoration, dress, travel and entertainment. Sexual intensity or sensuousness might well be strong here, but the relationship's energy can equally be expressed in other areas. All of life may be a passionate experience for these couples, one to which they will be almost completely dedicated. Unfortunately, such attitudes can meet with resistance, resentment and, often, incomprehension from other people. Work relationships between Scorpio III's and Capricorn I's are best kept informal and spontaneous. That way both partners can tend to their own work, joining forces only when inspired to do so. Fixed co-worker positions or boss-employee matchups are not recommended here. Family matchups are something of an exception to the rule in this combination, being usually too fixed in their orientation to allow much freedom of expression or thought. Relatives will have to work hard to drop stereotypes or expectations that inhibit spontaneous expression.

ADVICE: Avoid making rules. Restrictions will hamper your expression. If other people don't understand you, that's their problem. Don't compromise your beliefs.

Uncompromising Crusaders

This outspoken relationship will not hesitate to give its all for a cause, regardless of the consequences. Yet Scorpio III's and Capricorn II's are rarely a foolhardy pair and are unlikely to incur risk unless it is absolutely unavoidable. Their attitude is that the job will get done, either the hard way or the easy way—the choice is up to their opponents. In most cases the real threat to this relationship comes not from within but from without. Through the uncompromising nature of their beliefs, and their refusal to let up in their demands, the couple can arouse enmities and even lifelong hatreds. These crusaders are generally motivated by feelings of fairness and equality and stand on the side of the disadvantaged and dispossessed.

In love affairs, friendships and marriages, the partners' personal lives may suffer from their commitment to other activities. They will have to learn to say no and to be really more selfish with their time if love is to develop or survive between them. Devoting their time elsewhere, they may not even realize their relationship is foundering. At a certain point, however, a turnaround may occur, as lovers, friends and spouses realize that their relationship has challenging horizons of its own and that personal discovery can be as exciting and rewarding as large-scale group endeavors.

Work and professional relationships are most effective when they emerge in the fields of human services, communications or teaching. Scorpio III administrative ability gels well with driving Capricorn II ambition; these partners can lend any organization structure and purpose, respectively. In the family, pairs of relatives in this combination sometimes work no less hard for the good of the group, but their presence is often less than welcome at family gatherings, and the emotions they arouse can prove highly disturbing. They will have to learn something about tact and diplomacy if they are to make constructive contributions.

ADVICE: Keep some time for yourself. Inward challenges are at least as exciting as outward ones. Love and personal respect are also worth fighting for.

The convention established the women's rights cause as an organized movement.

CAPRICORN III

No Holds Barred

This relationship can shape up as a battle of the giants, complete with titan-sized egos and tempers that flare out of control. Whether physically large or small, both Scorpio III's and Capricorn III's are big personalities who just have to be the boss in most situations, which makes them likely to clash resoundingly—nor is either of them likely to back off. Scorpio III's use very subtle methods to achieve victory, while Capricorn III's are more likely just to refuse to get out of the way. It will obviously be necessary for this relationship to establish boundaries and guidelines in its behavior and to find a way to avoid direct confrontation.

Love affairs and friendships of this type, however, are sometimes unusually passive. It is almost as if the two partners' energies canceled each other out. Thus we may find them giving up the idea of dominance altogether and behaving curiously meekly with each other. The problem here will be self-motivation, particularly when it comes to the effort to forward personal and spiritual development. Should lovers marry, they may overestimate themselves and fail to live each other's promises and expectations.

Parent-child combinations will usually engage in full-force power struggles. The sad fact is that these two usually have no choice but to battle it out, sometimes for years, until one partner emerges the clear victor. A strong realization that there can be no winner here can eventually bring such conflicts to a halt. In the professional world, Scorpio III's and Capricorn III's working for rival groups or organizations may engage in outright war, with no holds barred. If they serve on the same team or run a business together, these two must be careful not to let their aggressive energies run out of control and stampede the opposition—if they do, clients and customers will often run, too. Attending to smaller projects one at a time and not getting carried away with unrealistic, large-scale projects that overestimate the pair's capabilities may help to avoid embarrassing failures.

ADVICE: Bury the hatchet. Look for subtler ways to advance your cause. Find common advantages. Get to know yourself a bit better.

CAPRICORN-AQUARIUS CUSP

Overoptimism

This matchup can carry both partners away on a flight of romance, yet has the ability to raise the red flag when there are problems. Electric Capricorn-Aquarius energy and Scorpio III seductiveness coalesce in an exciting and pleasurable relationship. These two will exhibit an eclectic and airy style. As a pair, they will be interested in many different intellectual pursuits, always maintaining a hopeful, optimistic and even enthusiastic outlook. For two such serious individuals this is really something. There is the danger, however, that in their optimism they might ignore deeper problems, which will accordingly fester and grow larger, perhaps even becoming irreparable. A typical issue is that while Scorpio III's are usually the more realistic, practical and financially sensible of the two, and are more than willing to shoulder responsibility, they may be angered by Capricorn-Aquarian's refusal to do a fair share of the work. Capricorn-Aquarians in turn can grow tired of Scorpio III nagging. They might consent to be more dedicated, if somewhat resentfully, or they might just turn off, becoming even more lax in their attitudes.

Love affairs can peak quickly in the bedroom, then fall off in their intensity over a period of months. When the thrill is gone, the relationship may have little left to sustain it emotionally. The partners sometimes marry for other-than-romantic reasons, particularly money, power or social prestige. These marriages are likely to be quite complex, and their unraveling, should it occur, will take longer than that of more ephemeral love affairs.

Friendships in this combination are usually dedicated to the pursuit of fun. Weighty Scorpio III's will appreciate the relationship for offering them diversions from other, more demanding areas of their lives but may ultimately tire of its superficiality. Capricorn-Aquarians will enjoy Scorpio III reliability but in the long run could find this partner a bit repetitive and dull. Work relationships in this combination are seldom successful when they serve large companies but do a bit better when they are freelance or entrepreneurial in nature. Both partners do best when they take things as they come.

ADVICE: Be more realistic, but not calculating. There is more to life than money. Cultivate your cultural and spiritual interests. Self-development is key.

THE WEEK OF GENIUS

Trying to Comprehend

This relationship is fateful, perhaps karmic. The partners may sometimes get the strange feeling that they are being driven by forces beyond their control. Trying to understand the deeper aspects of their relationship is crucial for them if they are to have some measure of control over the events spinning wildly about them. The contrast between the more-serious energies of Scorpio III's and the lighter ones of Aquarius I's is marked, and the relationship has a decidedly dark-sided character. Together these two may find themselves forced to confront the more unpleasant aspects of life—particularly pain and loss.

Romantic relationships tend to be serious. Sexual intensity is seldom the focus here; as lovers Scorpio III's and Aquarius I's are more preoccupied, even obsessed, with the more elusive elements of each other's personalities. The reasons for these feelings are difficult to pinpoint and may ultimately have to be acknowledged, like so many other elements of the relationship, as an unfathomable mystery. Marriages are often inevitable between these two once they have joined in a strong love affair. Again one gets the feeling that as spouses the pair will demand not only a particularly deep commitment but also the necessary time for working out complex issues.

Easygoing friendship may be impossible between Scorpio III's and Aquarius I's, even when that is what both partners want. Frustrations over being unable to enjoy the relationship fully without grave problems emerging may lead to its early demise. Work relationships, especially lifelong career associations working for the same company, can be more permanent in nature. Although these two may not always be able to work with each other side-by-side, they seem fated to interact regularly over many years, particularly when involved in projects demanding their quite different skills and approaches. In the family sphere, relatives here are often interested enough in their connection to explore common cultural ties and genealogies.

ADVICE: Your real fate may be to try to understand yourself. Take a more active role in assuming responsibility for your actions. Promote positive energies.

THE WEEK OF YOUTH & EASE
AQUARIUS II

Sympathetic Vibration

This is a close relationship emotionally. Speech and thought are rarely the focus here; these partners are far more likely to concentrate on feelings, empathy and sympathy. They may even have psychic connections to each other, which they sometimes openly discuss, more often simply experience. The relationship's goals, often realized, are likely to be emotional openness and honesty. Its sensitivity can also extend to the projects that Scorpio III's and Aquarius II's develop together and that often bear their stamp: the results of these undertakings are apt to be refined and creative in nature. When the partners are working on such a project, the close psychic touch between them usually allows them to complete their work, even when they are separated in space and time, for they can act with full assurance that their partner would approve of their decisions.

Although sympathetic, love affairs here can be somewhat difficult and intense. Their unusual degree of sensitivity is certainly a strength, yet it can also manifest as irritation and emotional overreaction. The Aquarius II psyche often summons up projections of its own shadow side and falls in love with them, so that Scorpio III's may willy-nilly find themselves playing out an unconscious role for their partner. Of course the attention is gratifying, but Scorpio III's will want to be loved for themselves, rather than for the image they unwittingly supply of someone or something else. A commitment to psychological investigation will usually allow this couple to begin unraveling the complexities of their relationship. Marriage may let them mature even more—here they can really begin to self-actualize.

Family ties in this combination are usually empathic, supportive and understanding, and friendships and career matchups can show the same qualities in an even more positive light. This may be because they do not involve overwhelming emotion and passion but rather an easy flow of sympathetic vibrations. Scorpio III's are powerful in giving direction and Aquarius II's can provide a relaxed and easy atmosphere in which to work. As friends these two may well go into business together, usually with few regrets.

ADVICE: Direct emotions constructively. Don't let your buttons be pushed so easily. Toughen up. Strive for self-understanding. Use reason as well.

Hard Decisions

These two can do well as partners in a variety of endeavors. Their activities are usually well grounded in the here and now and have particular relevance to the times in which they live. Not especially attracted by either the future or the past, these partners want to affect the family, social or commercial environment around them in a meaningful way and to change things for the better. Because Scorpio III and Aquarius III form a square aspect to each other in the zodiac (they lie 90° apart), traditional astrology predicts friction and stress in their relationship, but also dynamism. This can certainly be the case—there will be few dull moments in this relationship.

Love affairs and friendships in this combination are usually intense and committed. Affairs can be highly passionate, friendships devoted, but if in addition to the personal there is also a social aspect to the relationship, and in particular a cause to which both partners are dedicated, they may to some extent neglect the private life they have together. They will often be faced with a hard decision: which should they devote more energy to, the social or the personal? In the best-case scenario, however, there is room for both in equal measure.

Scorpio III's and Aquarius III's often combine their marriages and their working relationships, with relatively good success. Their relationship gives them an unusually high capacity for commitment, as well as tough pragmatic attitudes and the ability to see things through. To understand how strong these pairings are, one has to look at them over the long run, since they can be expected to feature a lot of ups and downs. Scorpio III's will probably view wilder Aquarius III energies more than somewhat askance and may demonstrate a condemning side that will be intolerable to their partner—Aquarius III's tend to be nervous anyway. As parents, Scorpio III's are likely to impose strict rules and firm boundaries, usually fair ones, in an attempt to keep wayward Aquarius III energies in line.

THE CUSP OF SENSITIVITY
AQUARIUS-PISCES CUSP

A Vehicle for Projection

An undeniably bizarre quality suffuses this relationship; it is the odd and unusual aspects of Scorpio III's and Aquarius-Pisces that are activated here. And the oddest thing about this pair is that odd as they are themselves, together they can become obsessed with the unconventional behavior of others, yet exhibit no empathy for it. Perhaps chronicling, dissecting and ultimately passing judgment on the foibles of their peers is simply a rather knee-jerk reaction to their own fears and neuroses. In any case, the relationship is difficult to fathom. The fact that it is nothing but a huge and sometimes rather monstrous vehicle for projection may not at first be evident. That these partners are usually rather unconcerned with their public image allows them to be even more unruly and obnoxious. Friends and family are apt to feel increasingly alienated from them. Should serious problems threaten or break up the relationship, they could find they have no support group left.

Bored with the ordinary and conventional, this couple may have no interest at all in marriage, and should they take the big step their relationship is unlikely to follow the rules, beginning with the wedding ceremony and proceeding right on down the line from there. It is not uncommon for partners of very different backgrounds—racial, national, cultural, economic—to tie the knot, flying in the face of their families' traditions.

Friendships and sibling relationships between Scorpio III's and Aquarius-Pisces are usually private and exclusive. Isolation from social control can breed interesting fantasies, which are sometimes kept hidden in the personal sphere but can also be let loose on others in the immediate environment, with predictably unsettling effects. As youngsters these two are apt to be bullied. In career matchups, Scorpio III's and Aquarius-Pisces often share power drives, making their relationship potentially an ambitious and even ruthless one. In extreme cases this duo can even profit from making others uncomfortable or taking advantage of them.

ADVICE: Take the feelings of others into account and don't profit from their misfortunes. Keep your friends. Cultivate kindness.

A Sensitive Core

This relationship often focuses on fidelity, loyalty and a determination never to give up, no matter what. Although Scorpio and Pisces are water signs and are fluid in their orientation, the Scorpio III–Pisces I relationship is ruled by earth, an element emphasizing groundedness. The more these two are pressured or attacked, the more they resist, so that their matchup, for better and worse, is generally characterized by stubbornness. The relationship has a certain sensitivity, which it usually reserves, however, for interactions between the partners themselves. Thus its tough exterior can hide a sensitive and emotional core.

This is especially clear in love affairs and friendships, which can allow empathy and deep feeling. Scorpio III's and Pisces I's are capable of loving each other deeply, but this need not imply sensual or sexual activity or even romance; respect and understanding are more likely to determine these relationships' tone. Still more strong will be a realistic, even pragmatic, common-sense orientation. Should these lovers or friends decide to marry, they may make a go of it and have a good chance for a long life together, since they have few illusions about each other from the start. Problems can arise through hidden activities and a certain amount of dishonesty, intentional or not. But when Scorpio III's and Pisces I's do conceal painful information, it is often out of consideration for each other's feelings.

Co-workers and family members in this combination can play a protective and nurturing role in their respective business and family groups. But they can also be highly manipulative and controlling, eventually arousing the resentment of fellow workers and relatives. Over time, this process can erode their position in the group hierarchy, severely limiting their effectiveness. Learning to keep out of other people's business, or even to draw strict boundaries between what is theirs and what is the group's, may be critically important in assuring their credibility or status.

ADVICE: Dishonesty only saves pain in the short run. Don't crowd people—back off. Try to listen to what is being said. Insist on what is yours.

THE WEEK OF THE LONER

Absorbing Trade-Offs

This relationship is an interesting mix of give and take, with affection, attention and absorption in each other's lives and work all playing a part. Since both partners are very private and need to be alone a good deal of the time, respecting each other's space is a requirement they can usually meet. On the other hand, they both are prone to escapes of different kinds, and should they fall into a habituating or outright addictive form of escape together, their bond could easily become unhealthy. This can be an emotionally complex matchup. Scorpio III's do not like anyone to be too dependent on them, and some Pisces II's can be extremely needy people. The other side of the coin is the Scorpio III need to control their partner, which Pisces II's usually meet with little resistance.

Emotional manipulation can be quite common in love affairs and marriages in this combination. The fine art of persuasion can reach a high level of sophistication here, often manifesting as a series of compromises, trade-offs, mildly coercive acts and other clever stratagems, which guarantee that each partner will get their way a sufficient part of the time. These maneuverings are not necessarily serious and may even be quite playful in character. Withholding sexual favors or limiting them in certain respects are also possibilities. These two are likely to stick together over the years. If they do break up, the separation will be extremely painful.

Career relationships between Scorpio III's and Pisces II's can be outstanding. Often distinguishing themselves in technical, scientific or research areas, this pair can fully concentrate on the job at hand while also sustaining the vision to attain far-reaching goals. The pair can work best side by side as co-workers, either as part of a team or independently. Scorpio III–Pisces II family members and friends can also have a strong career connection, which becomes the bedrock of their relationship.

ADVICE: Beware of pleasurable escapes. Hold up your end of the deal. Don't foster undue dependencies. Face emotional problems squarely.

Emotional Polemics

This relationship can be taken up with a struggle for dominance, not necessarily in the personal sphere but having more to do with ideas, methods, outlook and concept. Scorpio III's are generally attentive to detail and want to control the events unfolding around them, while Pisces III's are much more accepting and diffuse, rolling with the punches and being flexible when confronted by the blows of fate. Differences like these may lead these two into polemical attacks on each other in almost any area of daily life, causing endless discussions and confrontations. They also give the relationship an edge, however, a stimulus without which things could get pretty dull. Scorpio III and Pisces III lie in trine aspect to each other in the zodiac (they are 120° apart), encouraging sensuous, easy and relaxed feelings. Thus the relationship is characterized by a contrast between a sharply divided mental orientation and a unified and comfortable emotional state.

Scorpio III's bring out the more realistic side of Pisces III's, and their love affairs, although romantic, will always be fairly well grounded. Their sexual contacts tend to be more sensual than passionate, more pleasurable and long-lasting than agonizing and tumultuous. Empathic feelings generally guarantee respect and understanding between the partners. This augurs well for marriage, but the partners are careful about taking this step, perhaps because they are quite aware of the differences in their outlooks and will usually take the time for a serious consideration of the pros and cons.

Work relationships between Scorpio III's and Pisces III's can be remarkably well grounded, for their matchup is ruled by earth, an element here indicating practicality and a pragmatic outlook. With such a solid base, Scorpio III's, with their attention to detail, and Pisces III's, with their imagination, can coalesce well (despite acute differences of opinion), and whether they are business partners or co-workers on a project they can produce commercial successes. Friendships and parent-child relationships in this combination are usually warm, and although the partners often disagree, they accept each other's viewpoints.

Hard-Driving Intensity

Two Scorpio-Sagittarians could well work as part of the same team, but would rarely be able to live peacefully under the same roof. Hard-driving, uncompromising and insistent, these two will get the job done in their own way, refusing to be ordered or coerced. On the other hand, if suggestions are made to them in the right way, Scorpio-Sagittarius couples can be very open to new ideas, rarely rejecting any such proposal out of hand. Should two Scorpio-Sagittarians live together, for whatever reason, they will have to work out some kind of truce, in which the more aggressive side of their natures can be given a break. Open conflict or warfare between these two is unthinkable, and would make living together almost impossible.

Scorpio-Sagittarians are sexually intense as a rule, but this does not reveal much about their love matchups with each other. Here they may be much more wary, particularly in the initial stages of their relationship. Sensing a powerful adversary, whom they may not be able to dominate or humble so easily, makes both of them keep their distance or even back off. Once they are involved, it remains to be seen whether they can offer each other the freedom they require, for two Scorpio-Sagittarians can be surprisingly claiming of each other's attentions and affections. Their need for sexual freedom, and their use of a double standard vis-à-vis their mates, could make a successful marriage between them difficult or impossible.

Leaving each other alone will thus be crucial to the success of parent-child and sibling matchups. Friendships in this combination are sharp, quick and highly insightful, but partners are not always able to find a firm emotional basis for the relationship. In the professional sphere, two Scorpio-Sagittarians can work well together, but usually not in the same office, or even in the same department. They tend to work best on their own, advising each other only occasionally, and thus avoiding the rigors of day-to-day interaction.

Opting for Conviviality

This relationship does best when the partners are with each other by choice rather than necessity, and both must be able to carry on their own lives as they will. The fact that they often freely choose to be with each other on a daily basis, and for long periods of time, attests to their essential compatibility. They will rarely choose to be tied down to overwhelming responsibilities as a couple, but, gypsylike, prefer to just get up and go when the urge seizes them. This does not imply any irresponsibility in their professional lives, for they can work diligently for years as individuals, each upholding their end of the deal financially. Yet, given their druthers, they would enjoy not working at all, and could easily dedicate themselves to a life of amusement, travel, socializing and spiritual study.

In love and friendship, often closely related here, the highest value is placed on conviviality—sitting down with friends for a meal, a few drinks and endless rounds of light, humorous conversation. Parties and games attract them as well, not excluding gambling in the least. A special interest in food and cooking is often found here, since this can involve a perfect blend of sensual delight and socializing. As far as marriage is concerned, these two free spirits may decide just to keep it the way it is, and to avoid the finality of a formal ceremony. Having children is rarely a priority here.

Working together at a regular job is not usually in the stars for these two, particularly as co-workers in a large organization. As family members, particularly siblings or cousins, Scorpio-Sagittarians and Sagittarius I's can have riotous times together, and are particularly prone to getting into trouble. An element of risk or danger is an important incentive for getting involved in certain activities, indicating a daredevil urge that must be satisfied.

Ensnaring Honesty

The focus of this relationship may be a struggle to break free from the restrictions that it imposes on its partners, who want to act independently. One may then ask, Why did this pair become involved? No matter what the case, there is something about this relationship that ensnares them both. Perhaps it is the high level of truthfulness and integrity that neither is apt to find elsewhere. Despite this (or perhaps because of it), the relationship can well generate mutual disapproval between its partners. In most cases, Sagittarius II's occupy the dominant position, simply because they see things in their own peculiar manner and are unable to let go of, or even modify, their expectations. Scorpio-Sagittarians may first try to please, then later rebel against such attitudes, but in the end they must define their own values, free of any attempt to adapt to or rebel against the relationship's often idealistic stance.

In love affairs, Sagittarius II's may exert power over Scorpio-Sagittarians, threatening to or actually withholding their love. In such situations, Scorpio-Sagittarians are likely to give their all, but ultimately wind up frustrated and unhappy. Marriages between these two are unlikely to be very successful unless Sagittarius II's can limit their power games and act with more sympathy and kindness. In parent-child relationships, too, Sagittarius II parents can leave deep scars on their Scorpio-Sagittarius children through their disapproval or rejection.

Friendships here are likely to be more balanced. Both partners are able to maintain their independence from the relationship and yet contribute positively to it. This is often made possible by their recognition of, and respect for, each other's abilities, without any insistence on conforming to rules of social behavior. Extreme differences in approach mean work relationships rarely pan out. Sagittarius II eccentricity and need to be the center of attention can also pose problems when Scorpio-Sagittarius charm wins over colleagues.

ADVICE: Work toward mutual acceptance through greater understanding. Examine your disapproval. Open your heart.

The Negotiating Table

Although these two may become involved in acute power struggles, they are nonetheless generally successful in communicating with one another rationally. Experiencing few barriers in understanding allows each of them at least to know where the other stands. Working out compromises may be the focus of this relationship, since channels of communication are usually open, and experience teaches the Scorpio-Sagittarius-Sagittarius III pair that open conflict rarely results in anything more than bad feeling and loss of time. It may take a few knock-down, drag-out battles to wake the partners up to this fact.

Close friendships may not work so well for these two, nor will more casual companionships. Neither party may really have either the time or the interest to spend with the other on a regular basis—in fact, things usually work out better that way. Scorpio-Sagittarius parents will have great difficulty controlling their Sagittarius III children, and should they resort to serious punitive measures may risk losing them altogether. Sagittarius III parents may be adored by their Scorpio-Sagittarius children, who may in fact be overattached to them to the point of becoming emotionally crippled unless their own individuality is encouraged to develop.

In work relationships, these two are able to function well together only as business partners or co-workers after they have settled their power issues. Neither can usually accept the other as boss; in consequence, power must be shared or at least delegated in such a way that both partners are satisfied. The relationship itself may serve as a peacemaker in this respect, providing a space that resembles a negotiating table more than a battlefield. Witnessing commercial triumphs that are the fruits of the partners' labors will help consolidate this relationship; failures, on the other hand, will too often result in blame and renewed hostility—which in itself may serve as a strong incentive for success. Love affairs and marriages may lack the understanding to ride over rough spots and survive crises, whether financial, sexual or romantic. Despite the ease with which these two talk to each other, emotional feelings do not run very deep here. Partners may, however, be content with a workable companionship.

ADVICE: Be loyal through thick and thin—only determination can weather the storm. Dig a bit deeper to build a firm base. Seek peaceful solutions.

A Maverick Stand

This is a very solid relationship, but one in which the partners can only do things their own way—a way that resounds to the dismay of family, friends and employers. Remarkably resistant to hints or outright coercion, this couple takes a maverick stand from the start and then keeps going. As individuals, Scorpio-Sagittarians and Sagittarius-Capricorns may not be all that stable emotionally, and have certainly faced their fair share of travail and rejection; yet their relationship is a remarkably settled one, probably because of an almost organic coalescence of complementary attributes. Both partners here take refuge in a relationship that is at once protective and nurturing.

Love affairs and marriages often provide the partners with a safe haven. Both of them seem convinced that as long as they stick with each other, they will be protected, but should they part, the wild world, with all of its uncertainties and dangers, will encroach upon them. Fear does not bode well for personal development, so the partners should dedicate themselves to activities oriented toward increasing their self-understanding, taking each of them farther along the path toward self-actualization. The relationship itself will also develop more meaningfully if the partners embrace it less out of need and more from pure desire.

In friendships, these two should not use their relationship as a source of support but should work actively to develop ever newer and more productive activities, broadening its interactive base. Socialization is an important process here, and particularly building a social circle in which the relationship can take its rightful place. In the family, relatives who have felt rejected or left out may seek each other out to share hurt feelings and to commiserate. Positive results can be expected only if self-pity is ruthlessly excised from the relationship. As far as working matchups are concerned, this duo is usually not well suited as a team in the hard commercial world, unless it is running the show and issuing the orders.

ADVICE: Deep-seated fears may be holding you back. Get to know yourself better. Develop your social side, but beware of your weakness for flattery.

Political Issues

This relationship has an undeniably political cast but does not necessarily imply a formal involvement in politics. The partners may work out such activities in the family, business or social sphere. Even if they are not active to any great extent, social and political issues will generally interest them and provide a basis for their relationship. Conversation and debate on a broad range of topics are apt to be hallmarks here. There isn't a nook or cranny of information that these two will overlook—particularly if it has to do with their favorite topic, politics and its machinations.

Love affairs and marriages can begin with a heavy emphasis on the physical (although this is by no means usually the case), but sensual feelings often fade if not deepen through emotional understanding and intellectual challenge. Because Capricorn I's need to dominate and Scorpio-Sagittarians to rebel against authority, such relationships do not have a rosy future, unless they succeed in transmuting these opposing characteristics into more compatible ones. A complete, harmonious metamorphosis is possible here, but unlikely. Friendships between Capricorn I's and Scorpio-Sagittarians can run very deep—trusting, dependable, affectionate. In such relationships as these, honor and a strong sense of morality are noteworthy. Career and family relationships in this combination may be particularly auspicious, yet because of acute temperamental differences, the more personal aspects of these relationships are best kept to a minimum. Thus it is as associates or not-so-close relatives respectively that most work and family matchups of this kind are successful, rather than as boss-employee or parent-child pairs. The great strength of the relationship is its partners' ability to view things objectively and to engage in dispassionate debate. Should they be able to reach agreement, such pairs may be ready to implement their plans, which often involve some form of reorganization within their group or place of employment. If they are on opposite sides of the fence, however, Capricorn I's and Scorpio-Sagittarians can battle to the death if necessary—when their relationship is adversarial, there is no love lost between these two.

ADVICE: Keep combative urges under control, and learn to compromise. Let political issues be the gateway toward philosophical ones. Deepen your bond.

THE WEEK OF DETERMINATION
CAPRICORN II

Never-Never Land

This relationship is unlikely to recognize ordinary limitations of time and space. Peak experiences of all types attract these two like magnets. Extremely expansive, Scorpio-Sagittarians and Capricorn II's seek out unusual, even bizarre concepts that ideally they will be able to incorporate into their lives and work. The greatest danger here is that the partners' psychological stability can be undermined, and they may come to live in a never-never land of unchecked fantasy.

Artistic, philosophical, religious and spiritual areas are particularly fertile fields of investigation for this couple. Whether lovers or friends, mates or co-workers, the relationship will inevitably be drawn in these directions, sometimes to the point where personal considerations are overlooked, forgotten or sacrificed. The romance of love affairs and friendships in particular is enhanced by such special interests—a spark that can be fanned into a flame of high intensity. Marriages are more pragmatic, particularly when children are involved, and in the day-to-day running of such relationships, escapist fantasies must not be allowed to run riot. Children of such a marriage may be forced into accepting heavy responsibilities at an early age in order to fill the gap left by their parents' far-flung involvements.

Fortunate indeed are the working pairs (who not infrequently are friends and family members) that can make their active imaginations pay off for them commercially. Not so much having peak experiences as marketing them can become the emphasis here, possibly leading to great financial success. In the best-case scenario, the couple will simply be paid to share their experiences—though of course their merciless exploitation of such events may leave them less and less time to enjoy them. Furthermore, bringing peak experiences down to earth will tend to flatten them out, eventually leaving the partners a bit bored.

ADVICE: Maintain contact with those around you. Use your imagination intelligently—beware of unbridled fantasy. Don't dull your experience.

Beginning with Respect

This relationship often begins with the partners' respect or even admiration for one another's abilities. As it develops and deepens, they are likely to become attracted to each other personally, and may even ultimately fall in love. Because of the slow development here, such relationships often survive any snuffing of the romantic spark, and can continue on as friendships. An air of enchantment often suffuses this relationship, but it is not mere infatuation, for the magic worked between these two is usually long-lasting. Great care should be taken to avoid letting arguments escalate out of control, since hair-trigger tempers on both sides can lead to regrettable scenes.

In love affairs the partners are unlikely to sweep each other off their feet. For the most part, good sense and discretion are exercised here, particularly if one of the partners is already deeply involved with someone else. It is often the relationship itself that the partners find most interesting, despite the fact that they generally have many outside interests in common. Should marriage mean being forced to give up individual freedoms, it will rarely work. Capricorn III's are much too sure of what they want and Scorpio-Sagittarians of what they need to fool themselves or cast their fates to the wind.

Professional rivalries and personal enmities between Scorpio-Sagittarians and Capricorn III's are awful to contemplate. Scorpio-Sagittarius coolness under fire and refusal to back down are powerfully countered by the formidable presence and willpower of Capricorn III's. Such battles are seldom confined to verbal swordplay, but translate quickly into action. Friends and sibling pairs must beware letting their aggressive energies get out of hand when facing other people. Extremely protective, either partner could well fly off the handle if he or she feels the other is being threatened or attacked. Strong bonds of interdependence may develop here that are not easily broken.

The Quiet Center

For all its excitement, this relationship is remarkably well balanced—a balance underscored by the fact that Scorpio-Sagittarius is a water-fire and Capricorn-Aquarius an earth-air combination. This combination contains all four elements, then, but it is ruled by fire and earth, here indicating passionate sensuality. These relationships go very deep, and are often serious in nature. Yet the partners often share an excellent sense of humor, one that is not merely comic but also sensitive to the ironies and bizarre coincidences that life so often serves up. Both loyal to the extreme, despite their wild and somewhat unstable natures, these two may find their relationship a silent and quiet center, a place in which to find respite from their own, often chaotic lives.

Love affairs between Scorpio-Sagittarians and Capricorn-Aquarians can be torrid, yet they are often quite calm emotionally, without undue argument or confrontation. Both partners are extremely temperamental, and there are few dull moments here, but contentment and harmony generally prevail. Marriages between these two can work out, but there is no guarantee of their longevity or stability, since financial and social stresses as well as the strains of child-rearing usually bring out the more nervous and excitable aspects of both partners.

In the family sphere, parent-child relationships of either possible variation can be warm and loving, albeit with a tendency to nervousness. Friendships in this combination are geared up for action on all fronts, being always on the lookout for adventure and excitement in both conventional and (more likely) out-of-the-way places. Business matchups are generally unfavorable. Removed from a domestic environment and exposed to the rigors of the commercial world, the Scorpio-Sagittarius-Capricorn-Aquarius relationship, although stable, may be tainted by the exigencies of survival.

ADVICE: Find the quiet center. Be more cautious and patient in your worldly contacts. Minimize stress, and keep your nervousness under control.

Unmerciful Teasing

These two would seem to have a good understanding of each other, but this does not necessarily imply that they get along, for each knows well enough how to push the other's buttons. Whether or not the relationship is peaceful is largely up to the partners themselves, for it is in their power to be sympathetic and kind to each other or, just as easily, to be provocative and nasty. It is precisely because they are on the same emotional wavelength that it's so easy for them to upset each other. Scorpio-Sagittarians certainly appreciate the quick intelligence of Aquarius I's, who in turn can be in awe of Scorpio-Sagittarians' sense of purpose and driving ambition. As a work team, these two can be highly successful, as long as they remain objective and keep feelings from getting out of control.

In love affairs, marriages and sibling matchups, these two may tease each other unmercifully—whether as a form of humor or of sadism is not altogether clear. But both partners do get extraordinary pleasure from riling and then laughing at each other. They may often come equipped with a wild story or an exaggerated claim, encourage their partners to believe it and even to bruit it about—just to watch their final embarrassment and humiliation. Yet throughout such seemingly cruel behavior runs a streak of affection confirming that these two really do like each other. Strong sensual feelings seldom form the basis of love affairs here, nor is intimacy given high priority in marriages. Sibling relationships are surprisingly physical, but this is usually expressed in childhood games, mock fights and sports.

Friendships of this type rarely achieve constancy of mood. Up and down, on and off, low-key and aggressive, such relationships bring out the more unstable side of both partners. They can end badly when insults fly out of control, ending with the partners never meeting or speaking again.

ADVICE: Don't take unfair advantage. Try to maintain consistency. Accentuate the positive. Don't assume that you will always be forgiven.

Authoritative Power

The Scorpio-Sagittarius–Aquarius II relationship carries with it a healthy respect for and pride in tradition, an insistence on stability and considerable strength of purpose. It has the potential to provide a firm foundation for any endeavor. As a unit, this duo is quite powerful in a quiet, rather authoritative way. The likelihood, however, is that Scorpio-Sagittarians may consider themselves the real source of power in the relationship, viewing Aquarius II's as mere lightweights. In truth, however, it is the combination that carries the load here.

This romantic and sensual relationship is physically gratifying to both partners. Love affairs and marriages pit two willful and impulsive partners against each other; these two are loving and passionate—to be sure, loving—but often rebellious nonetheless. Aquarius II's like things nice and easy but are not about to knuckle under to authority, while Scorpio-Sagittarians don't like being bound by rules, unless these are of their own making. Setting up the relationship itself as the ultimate authority and methodically establishing firm guidelines are essential, and something that both partners may actually enjoy doing as long as both have an equal say. Agreeing on who will be the unquestioned boss in their own special areas of interest may also be a possible solution.

Friendships in this combination can be more difficult and emotionally complex. Aquarius II's may experience frustrations with Scorpio-Sagittarius tension, and Scorpio-Aquarians often want deeper involvement with, and greater commitment from, their more carefree Aquarius II partners.

Boss-employee and parent-child relationships in this combination can be full of strife if the top dog has little compassion for his or her dependent partner. Lack of respect on both sides usually spells doom for such a relationship. On the other hand, as co-workers or siblings, Scorpio-Sagittarians and Aquarius II's can have a highly rewarding association, one in which career and family connections may overlap.

ADVICE: Take time for thorough discussion. Patience will be rewarded. Structure interactions with care and sensitivity—efforts now may preclude conflicts later.

Above the Rules

This unusual relationship often places itself above society's rules, whether legally codified or socially customary. The partners' feelings may be amicable or hostile, but they are usually out in the open—a certain honesty prevails. On the other hand, they have a tendency to hide their most important dealings with each other from family, friends and colleagues, since in their eyes what happens between them at the most personal level is no one's business but their own. Actual meetings between these two may be infrequent or daily, depending on the relationship. Mercifully, serious confrontations are usually few and far between. The energies here arouse deep emotion, which, however, is often concealed behind a cool, even impersonal facade.

Hidden love affairs are common between Scorpio-Sagittarians and Aquarius III's. They are so well camouflaged that even when they appear at a party or other social gathering, few would guess that they were intimately involved. Thus the relationship can be deceptive, not only to other people but also to the partners themselves, who think they have it all figured out but in fact do not. Fate often takes a hand in such matchups, producing completely unexpected results. Marriages between these two can be topsy-turvy in nature. Such confusion can be stimulating, even fun, but must eventually be sorted out, particularly when children are involved.

Scorpio-Sagittarius–Aquarius III sibling relationships and friendships work best when they don't involve a lot of responsibility. The partners must feel free to go their own ways at will, pairing up only when it suits them to do so. Career matchups may be highly competitive and antagonistic, especially when they involve bitterly contested prizes, hierarchical or financial. Such struggles most often continue until there is a clear winner; even then, however, the loser may either refuse to give up or seek revenge. The battling here is often carried out less by the individuals themselves than by their dark sides, and this has a powerful influence on each partner's larger personality.

ADVICE: Try to attain a deeper level of understanding. Bury the hatchet. Don't take on too much. Get your act together. Don't waste so much time on concealment.

Ambition or Complacency?

Although both partners here are highly imaginative and creative, their relationship tends to be a responsible one that specializes in looking after practical matters. Thus artistic leanings do not by any means contradict or rule out running an efficient home or office. Furthermore, the duo can be quite ambitious—neither is content to sit and dream about what might be or could have been. Their plans for the future are likely to materialize, since they usually discard unworkable schemes along the way. Yet relaxed attitudes generally prevail here, owing to the easy and open communication between the partners—Aquarius-Pisces and Scorpio-Sagittarius are trine to each other in the zodiac (120° apart), so that these personalities get along well, with little tension. If taken too far, however, such attitudes can lead to complacency, undercutting the partners' ambitious drives. At work and at home, these two may oscillate between periods of high motivation and laziness. Thus the relationship tends to fall into a repetitive pattern of tension followed by relaxation.

Scorpio-Sagittarius–Aquarius-Pisces spouses are often social climbers, and can be quite ruthless in reaching their goals. Any feelings of inferiority that they harbor—and there may be quite a few—are translated into action and the raw determination to impress others. When the partners are friends, however, such desires are curiously absent. Here their more artistic sides are brought out, and they share a commitment of considerable energy to creative and perhaps spiritual endeavors. Love affairs in this combination are even more low-key and pleasure-seeking. More often than not, hedonism is the order of the day, and a lot of attention will be given to matters of sex, food and the home. Sibling relationships are often noteworthy here.

Work matchups can be very expressive venues for the partners' creativity. Down times allow dreaming and planning, while periods of greater determination see projects initiated and then up and running. These two obviously work best in project-oriented situations.

ADVICE: Find a balance between ambition and complacency. Put money to use instead of sitting on it. Be kinder to others. Beware of snobbism.

The Right People

The partners in this relationship are often taken up with convincing others of their point of view—basically, with selling themselves or their product. Powerfully persuasive, these two know how to charm the pants off practically anyone. But they also know each other's methods of persuasion pretty well, so it may be a bit more difficult for them to work similar magic within their own relationship. One prerequisite for a dedicated salesperson is that they really know and believe in the service or product they're promoting. Thus Scorpio-Sagittarians and Pisces I's are likely to devote considerable time and energy to painstakingly putting their sales plans together. Luckily, this combination carries with it both managerial ability and a penchant for the careful preparation so crucial to success.

Snobbism and elitism often manifest in matchups of this type, and the partners risk coming across as conceited (which can undercut their efforts) but rarely overconfident (which strengthens them). A solid streak of pessimism and disbelief runs through their relationship, which also makes them difficult to convince. Realists, such partners rarely kid themselves; consequently, they know exactly what they can get away with.

In friendship and love, these two are apt to value their relationship highly, and are prepared to overlook slights or insults. Furthermore, both of them are usually willing to sacrifice individual gain for the sake of the relationship. Work matchups and marriages are generally effective in convincing others of their reliability and desirability, whether for financial or for social advancement. There should be little doubt that these are the right people to be involved with if you want to move onward and upward. The Scorpio-Sagittarius–Pisces I pair usually relies heavily on their track record, for no matter how good their spiel, other people are more likely to believe in the merits of their past success. In fact neither of these two impresses as money-hungry; the way something is done is actually at least as important to them as the result. The relationship affirms that style and finesse are often worth more than tangible goods, and that who you know is more important than what you know.

ADVICE: Diamonds can be found in the oddest places—with your nose in the air, you may be missing something right at your feet. Keep your pride under control.

Environmental Control

No matter what sorts of difficulties this relationship encounters, the intense loyalty that characterizes it will see it through. Because the focus here is usually building a stable life together, every element of the partners' environment is brought under tight control. Particularly sensitive in the aesthetic sphere, Scorpio-Sagittarians and Pisces II's have excellent taste, which in this relationship means that designing, decorating, gardening and furnishing are all given top priority, along with other domestic concerns.

Love affairs, friendships and marriages may be closely related for couples in this combination. Sex is rarely the most important element in an interpersonal relationship between these two; rather, the focus is establishing bonds of friendship that pervade all areas of the couple's life together. Knowledge of affairs outside the marriage or primary love affair may at first be greeted with shock, but will be followed by deep understanding and acceptance. While empathic bonds are strong, emotion may be less easily expressed, and much is kept beneath the surface in everyday interactions.

Scorpio-Sagittarius parents, although sympathetic to their Pisces II children, sometimes lack sufficient time or interest to invest in them. Pisces II parents are nurturing toward their Scorpio-Sagittarius children, but can also be manipulative and controlling. More distant relatives, such as uncles, aunts, cousins or grandparents of either sign, may be much more suitable for fulfilling parental or sibling roles, and such relationships can be more satisfying, productive and supportive of the child's personal development.

Business partnerships and co-worker combinations are not always tough enough to survive in a dog-eat-dog world. The fierce competitive spark is often lacking in this matchup, along with any real desire to work hard for an organization on a daily basis. Freelance associations, involving fewer outside deadlines, are much more favorable for these two.

ADVICE: Back off a bit and let things happen—accept what fate offers up without trying to control it. Appreciate the comic aspects of everyday life.

Life on Earth

This relationship is not the most stable one, but the partners can usually count on each other for a good time. More serious Pisces III's get a chance to let it all hang out and Scorpio-Sagittarians to give vent to their wild side. Few topics are off limits to these two, nor are they afraid to put it on the line when it comes to challenging adventures. In order to maintain balance, it may be necessary to lower the level of excitement here, and for both partners to resist the lure of alcohol or other destabilizing drugs. Coming back down to earth can be a painful experience after a dramatic flight of fancy, but sooner or later the partners will realize that escapes, no matter how pleasurable or exciting, often only take the relationship away from the real work that needs to be done.

In love affairs, seeking ever more ecstatic highs may eventually prove enervating. Learning to balance mood swings or, in extreme cases, bipolar disorders that may manifest here is of prime importance. Professional help may have to be sought if this relationship lacks the resources to handle acute problems itself. Marriages between these two are often devoted to the pursuit of pleasure, but this search will rarely take the partners far on the road to self-realization.

Family members will have to be extremely understanding of this duo's need to spend time together—resentments and jealousies may be aroused on both sides. Scorpio-Sagittarius and Pisces III siblings, particularly of the same sex, can create a private fantasy world that satisfies both partners' emotional needs right up into adolescence. Growing out of such relationships in early adulthood can be extremely painful for both partners. Co-workers in this combination could develop close friendships; likewise, friends will often seek employment together. Such relationships can be extremely absorbing and protective, with the partners spending most of their time together.

ADVICE: Even out your behavior. Don't be so quick to run away from yourself. Face problems squarely. Experience the joys of self-development.

THE WEEK OF INDEPENDENCE

Kinetic Energy

This can be a terrific matchup, in which Sagittarius I's finally encounter a partner not interested in controlling them, a kindred free spirit. Of course this is no guarantee that things will go smoothly, or even that the partners will get along on a daily basis—but when things are on between these two, the energy output can be enormous. Few in the year can generate the kind of electric excitement that Sagittarius I's can, and the synergy of these individuals together often sends indicators flying off the scale; but directing such energy and keeping it under control are other matters entirely. For the most part, however, two Sagittarius I's are able to handle each other's energies, whereas others might short-circuit.

Love affairs can be intense but brief. With nothing else to sustain or occupy Sagittarius I lovers except unrestrained romantic feelings, they are liable to burn out in a matter of months, or even weeks. As far as marriage is concerned, taking on individual responsibilities and working together on domestic projects can lend stability to the matchup and guarantee its survival for longer periods. Children of Sagittarius I parents will usually appreciate their energy and their level of interest and nurturing, but may find them a bit overprotective and sternly ethical.

Sagittarius I siblings can fight like cats and dogs, and compete unremittingly, but when the chips are down, they will stand up for each other courageously. As friends, Sagittarius I's may fill in the gaps where parental, love or marital relationships have failed. In fact, this can become an all-encompassing relationship, one that supplies full emotional support and understanding, but it may also promote overdependency and close individual partners off from worldly challenge.

Sagittarius I co-worker pairs can often get the job done in half the time, and do it well to boot. Although Sagittarius I's don't generally like taking orders, they welcome all forms of input if it is of benefit to them and conveyed in a respectful way, and thus Sagittarius I boss-employee relationships can work out if these criteria are met.

ADVICE: Regulate energy output. Take on fixed responsibilities. Soften your disapproval. Don't allow competitiveness to spin out of control.

November 25–December 2

THE WEEK OF INDEPENDENCE
SAGITTARIUS I

By Chance, Not Choice

These two seldom become involved by choice, but sometimes do by chance. A bit too alike in their more negative aspects really to get along, Sagittarius I's and II's are wary around each other. Any relationship that does develop here is characterized by a tremendous need for freedom and independence, which may, depending on the circumstances, make any really deep involvement difficult or impossible. Furthermore, the relationship is often extremely extroverted and lacking stability, since it is most often taken up with change and variety. If seriously interested in strengthening their bond, this duo will have to dig deeper and develop stronger emotional and spiritual ties. One plus this relationship has going for it is communication, for Sagittarius I's and II's generally have little trouble understanding each other or getting their points across.

Friendships and love affairs of this type can be particularly unstable. The best of them are more romantic in nature, eschewing any kind of settled domesticity for truly adventuresome pursuits, often involving travel and exploration. Marriage lends a bit more stability here, but neither of these two is quick to commit, and taking the big step impulsively, without serious consideration of the difficulties involved, is not at all recommended. In marriages consummated quickly, the spouses too often pay the price later for their rash actions.

Sibling matchups and parent-child connections between Sagittarius I's and II's can be warm, close and supportive. Strong physical and emotional bonds are characteristic of such relationships, and guarantee the presence of close ties throughout adult life. At work, executives and business partners of this type may experience many differences of opinion, some irreconcilable. But competition can also bring out the very best in both associates, ultimately tending to advance the cause of the group or organization they both serve.

ADVICE: Take the time for personal exploration. Deepen emotional ties. Make a commitment if you are really serious.

Unrelenting Crossfire

If these two were guns trained on each other, it would be best not to get caught in the crossfire, since they make an excellent match, whether as allies or opponents. Commanding presences that they are, Sagittarius III's are unlikely to withdraw from the fray; but Sagittarius I's are equally determined, and can attack with measured tempo or unrelenting fury if necessary. It is hard for these two highly individual personalities to serve on the same side, but should their energies gel, the resulting force is well-nigh irresistible. Whether amicable or adversarial, the relationship is extremely unusual, and its mutable qualities make flexibility under fire one of its strongest attributes.

Because this relationship is intensely physical, lovers, mates and friends in this combination will want to engage in sports and fitness activities, or at the very least to take long walks or go for swims. Lovers here will enjoy a frank and open attitude toward sex, but should be careful that built-in antagonisms do not result in power trips or insensitive, even violent behavior. The marked independence of spouses can mean that their children will have to look after themselves a good deal of the time.

Competitiveness usually cannot be avoided in Sagittarius I–Sagittarius III friendships, but should best be restricted to board or video games, or to the playing field. Should an attractive third party appear, this person should be shared equally as a friend, for if love enters the picture, ties of friendship can be strained to the limit.

Battling is apt to be the order of the day with sibling pairs, sometimes throughout their childhood and adolescence. Even when anxious parents or the partners themselves call truces, there is always a potentially explosive undercurrent. In professional matters, co-workers and colleagues in this combination can be valuable to any company, as long as they are getting along. If working for rival companies, their respect for each other's power will not keep them from tangling memorably.

ADVICE: Keep violent urges under control. Try to see what is to your mutual advantage. Find constructive outlets for physical needs.

The Grim Alternative

These two are constantly searching for ways to work out issues and improve their relationship. This search is based on the acknowledgment that problems exist, and on the premise that they need to be solved in order to proceed in a more productive and less antagonistic fashion. All of this sounds very logical, but in fact Sagittarius I's and Sagittarius-Capricorns are looking out for their own interests as well. It is the tension between what they can get and what they will have to give up as individuals that provides the dynamic here. At some moments, these two resemble politicians hammering out an agreement, at others a buyer and seller haggling over the price of merchandise.

Temperamentally, Sagittarius I's and Sagittarius-Capricorns couldn't be more different—the former lightning quick and overreactive, the latter more measured and difficult to arouse. Friendships between these two are generally more successful than love affairs. Because such affairs gyrate between passionate conflict and indifference, they are rarely reliable enough to hang together for long. In friendships, these partners generally surmount their differences, not least by fully respecting and even appreciating them. Such friends may pool their strengths when working on domestic or outside amateur projects together.

It is in marriage and family relationships that the true focus of this combination emerges most clearly, as problems are recognized and solved almost every day of the week. Perhaps this results from the fact that family pressures and practical considerations dictate the necessity of this process, and that in some sense survival is at stake. Having little choice but to cooperate, the partners can put their differences aside or work them out, for they know full well that the grim alternative may be the end of their relationship, or even of the group of which they are a part. Professional working relationships here don't always turn out that well. Sagittarius I's can get impatient with the slower pace of Sagittarius-Capricorns, who in turn can be irritated by Sagittarius I's jumpy and refusal to listen.

ADVICE: Consider the needs of those around you. Stand up for yourself but be ready to compromise. Keep lines of communication open. Listen.

Reveling in Debate

This combination is seldom taken up with small details; issues of the broadest scope come naturally under discussion. Philosophical, the relationship revels in debate and discussion of the most abstract concepts. Its physical side is also well developed, which can lead to confrontations that are variously playful and seriously aggressive. Should Sagittarius I's and Capricorn I's come to symbolize two very different points of view within a circle of family, friends or colleagues, their followers are likely to line up behind them and expect them to be their spokespersons or representatives. Willy-nilly, these two can find themselves at the center of very heated controversies that they might not have really looked for.

Although Sagittarius I's and Capricorn I's are very different temperamentally, marriages between them can work out as long as they can come to an agreement on important points. The inherent stability of Sagittarius I's and the good money sense of Capricorn I's will be effectively balanced by the latter's dynamism and liveliness. When faced with defeat or disappointment, this couple can take it hard, and may lack the resilience or self-understanding to cope. Love affairs in this combination rarely arouse strong sensual desires or empathy. For some reason, friendships are unlikely to develop past the stage of mere acquaintance, and in fact the more involved these two become, the more the relationship takes on an adversarial tone.

Professional and family encounters can be particularly intense. Generally speaking, Sagittarius I's will take the more radical point of view, while Capricorn I's are apt to defend the status quo. Even when liberal in viewpoint, Capricorn I's will defend the more traditional way of doing things, whereas Sagittarius I's will call into question any normally accepted view that doesn't make sense to them. Furthermore, the style of Capricorn I's is often relatively objective and dispassionate, whereas Sagittarius I's tend to be more individualistic and emotional.

ADVICE: Keep some time for yourself. Don't avoid personal issues. Deepen understanding and acceptance. Closeness should not imply dissent.

Misleading Lightness

The social image that this relationship conveys can be quite different from its personal realities. These two can work a magic on other people, so that even when arguments threaten to split them apart, onlookers continue to gape in fascination. The relationship can in some ways be characterized as being light, even flaky, emotionally. It is this very lightness that can be so misleading, for in fact the relationship can be a highly serious one. Neither of these two take either their careers or lives lightly, or expect that they will be easy. Thus struggle and hard work are no strangers to the relationship, which takes little for granted.

In private, heaviness or seriousness of purpose is apparent in love affairs and marriages. If this affect comes to dominate, it can at times lead the partners into depressions, but it is precisely during these episodes that great progress in personal development can take place for both partners, and particularly for Capricorn II's. Self-actualizing, the relationship can benefit in many subtle ways by solving emotional difficulties, and the harder the partners struggle, the more they may learn. Even if such relationships do not work out over the long term, the partners may nonetheless have benefited greatly by having gone through a metamorphosis, emerging as quite different individuals.

Sibling combinations may be particularly interested in art, film, video or Internet productions, not only as onlookers but also as active participants. Deep family ties can develop between Sagittarius I and Capricorn II relatives, despite competitiveness and acute differences of opinion. Sagittarius I–Capricorn II friendships are not particularly memorable, often because of an inability to share.

In the professional sphere this pair can work extremely well together, integrating Sagittarius I dynamism and the idiosyncratic, even nutty qualities of Capricorn II's. It is in this area that the more magical aspects of such relationships emerge, for these two specialize in mesmerizing an audience at business presentations, demonstrations or sales conferences.

ADVICE: Bring your public and private selves more into focus. Work on emotional honesty—aim for greater transparency. Try to be more tolerant.

THE WEEK OF INDEPENDENCE

THE WEEK OF DOMINANCE
CAPRICORN III

An Impenetrable Center

The feelings in this relationship run deep and passionate. Although on the surface it would seem that clashes are inevitable between independent Sagittarius I's and dominant Capricorn III's, this combination does not have to involve conflict; in fact, it is precisely its partners' differences that make it so strong and dynamic, for as a unit it can display great versatility in its interaction with other people. Extreme differences of temperament may dictate that the partners see each other only from time to time, rather than on an everyday basis. Since the relationship can be characterized as the Sagittarius I irresistible force meeting the Capricorn III immovable object, much is hidden here that neither partner wishes to have revealed to family, friends or society in general. The dark center of such a relationship may remain forever mysterious and impenetrable.

In love affairs, tensions are inevitable, and are particularly pronounced in the sexual sphere. Lovers must beware of power plays here—of becoming obsessed with controlling the other or winning out. Marriages are usually less favorable than love affairs, for here the materialistic aspects of the relationship often predominate. Breakups and divorces can be painful, not only emotionally but financially.

Friendships and sibling relationships certainly have their ups and downs. Neither party usually succeeds in controlling the other—but not for lack of trying. Rivalries, jealousies and competition, in sports and love, are all likely to characterize this matchup. Parent-child relationships in this combination will inevitably see the Capricorn III need to dominate challenged by rebellious Sagittarius I children, or a Capricorn III child's stubborn and recalcitrant side aroused by a Sagittarius I parent. In career matchups, this can be a strong combination, with boundless Sagittarius I energy and optimism melding well with the common sense, good money management and responsible attitudes of Capricorn III's. Classic differences of opinion arise over the Sagittarius I need to spend and the Capricorn III need to save, but the relationship could be the beneficiary of a sensible approach to cash management that would be the result of finding the middle way between these extremes.

ADVICE: Don't try to reconcile your differences—put them to work for you. Try to understand yourself better. Learn the joys of total relaxation.

THE CUSP OF MYSTERY & IMAGINATION
CAPRICORN-AQUARIUS CUSP

Shooting Stars

This could be one of the most exciting and explosive matchups of the entire year. Unfortunately, little stability is guaranteed in such a relationship, so that these two are likely to blaze their way into darkness like shooting stars in the night sky. The partners are apt to be very attracted to how easily they can express their feelings with one another. The compassion and empathy between them betoken an instinctual understanding of each other that will help them overcome many difficulties.

Love affairs and friendships bring out the more sensitive side of each partner. Despite their popularity within their circle of friends or family, both Sagittarius I's and Capricorn-Aquarians are likely to feel misunderstood much of the time, and therefore in their relationship with each other may seek a variety of escapes—from drugs to sex and love to physical isolation—in an attempt to soothe hurt feelings and protect themselves from the slings and arrows of a hurtful world. To the extent that the relationship serves as a shelter in the storm, it may have both positive and negative effects on the personal development of its partners.

Marriages and work relationships between these two will have to accept the somewhat tedious social responsibilities incumbent on such roles. Although the world may view these two often outrageous and outgoing individuals as quite extroverted, in fact they have a highly private side, one that is clearly revealed by their relationship with each other. Moreover, when they do make public appearances, they may have something more exciting in mind than parent-teacher meetings and office parties. In the family sphere, siblings and cousins in this combination will liven up the atmosphere of gatherings, but will also render them a bit chaotic. Keeping the Sagittarius I-Capricorn-Aquarius relationship under control may be more than anyone is prepared to handle.

The Given Word

This relationship is a dignified one, in which personal worth and honor are given the highest consideration. Responsibility is the keynote here, and with it a guarantee of high-quality work. Written agreements are rarely necessary between these two, since the given word is law; to bring them to this point of agreement, however, is not necessarily easy. Although they may respect each other enormously, Sagittarius I's and Aquarius I's may not be prepared to entrust their future to such a relationship, nor to commit themselves to it with full force. Sagittarius I's may be suspicious of Aquarius I motives, while Aquarius I's are wary of Sagittarius I aggressiveness.

Love affairs and marriages are not especially suggested between these two—when passions emerge between them, so do acute instability and nervousness. Such relationships carry few guarantees that they will last, a fact underlined by their frenetic pace and, at times, lack of good sense. Family matchups, on the other hand, can be highly rewarding personally. They may also have professional or career aspects: not necessarily business people, relatives in this combination may pool their talents in social, artistic, health or sports-oriented activities, and as long as they decide to hire a good accountant and business manager, they are quite capable of achieving considerable commercial success.

In work relationships and friendships, admiration and affection between these two guarantee a high level of fulfillment. Often sharing the same or similar values, Sagittarius I's and Aquarius I's have little difficulty communicating with each other, although they may disagree on how to implement their plans. Once they agree on a course of action, they will follow through with steadfastness and determination. Quarrels can arise over one issue, however, and that is who will be the boss. More intelligent matchups choose to let the ultimate authority reside in the relationship itself, and to make all decisions with an eye to its longevity and welfare.

ADVICE: Work toward greater trust and less suspicion—what are you afraid of? Use common sense to help you make decisions.

Getting Lost

This relationship seldom concerns itself with the ordinary way of doing things. It will seek out environments and activities that activate its fantasies, but should these two live in rather dull or conventional surroundings, they will generate imaginative projects within the walls of their own domestic space. The relationship is ruled by water, an element here emphasizing the world of dreams, visions and colorful feelings. Aquarius II's bring out the more unconventional side of Sagittarius I's, who often view them as far out and seek to get close to them by entertaining the prospect of unusual lifestyles or strange activities. Aquarius II's, on the other hand, appreciate the raw energy of Sagittarius I's, as well as their naturally inquisitive nature.

Romantic relationships in this combination may transport the partners to far-flung worlds of the mind, where they live on a plane at a distant remove from that of their friends, family and co-workers. Other people may view them askance, at times with a mixture of bewilderment and envy. Unfortunately, should their bubble burst, these lovers may have little of a substantive nature to hold on to. Marriages are not at all recommended here, unless a solid footing can be established in which to ground such ephemeral energies.

Friendships can be highly successful as long as demands are not too great. Both partners must feel free enough to go their own way, yet must not neglect to be there for each other in times of need. In the spheres of family and work, Sagittarius I's and Aquarius II's will be bound to fixed responsibilities, but this is no guarantee in itself that they will get along. Both partners must learn to concentrate on the job at hand and to keep their emotions from getting involved. Since the relationship is oriented towards feelings, this will not be an easy task, and these partners may find themselves constantly getting on each other's nerves.

ADVICE: Don't get completely lost—pay attention to what's going on. If other people don't understand, take the time to explain. Be patient, and listen.

Just a Memory

The key to holding this relationship together is the partners' ability to work together, whether in a domestic or a professional setting. Given the individual natures of Sagittarius I's and Aquarius III's, one probably wouldn't predict much stability for the relationship, but their combined chemistry can have a strongly stabilizing effect—at least as long as emotions aren't allowed to go haywire. Aquarius III's appreciate the attention given them by Sagittarius I's, whom they admire, and things go well when they are at the center of what is going on. Should Sagittarius I's occupy the dominant position, though, the relationship will be far less cohesive—the partners' changeability will carry it from pillar to post. Should honesty pervade the relationship, things have a chance of going well, but duplicity, deceit or outright cheating will often bring it crashing down around the partners' ears.

Love affairs are not so much romantic as practical. With few or no responsibilities, such an affair is likely to fade away to just a memory. Yet such relationships often do well when they progress to marriage, particularly when children are involved. The most crucial point here is discharging responsibilities easily and without resentment, and having a respect for children's individuality that approaches that of a sacred trust.

Friends may try to work together, but although things can seem very rosy at the outset, these relationships may not work out to anyone's advantage financially. The danger here is that the friendship may be adversely affected in the process, and after a business setback or failure may never be the same again. And if the partners do achieve success, this will bring difficulties of its own, since it will put the partners on a different footing. In the family sphere, Aquarius III parents may find coping with the energy of their Sagittarius I children exhausting. The task here is for them to learn patience and understanding, and to respect points of view far different from their own.

ADVICE: Recognize boundaries and limitations. Don't take on too much. Ground yourself in practical endeavors. Remember who and what you are.

AQUARIUS-PISCES CUSP

Impersonation

The lives of these two are fatefully intertwined, in a complex and not always obvious way. The focus of their relationship is often a kind of imitation, in which each seeks to emulate the other, going so far in some cases as to mimic his or her style or personal characteristics. Thus a principal theme in this matchup is interpretation, for its partners often go about copying each other in their own highly personal manner. Of course it's tempting to ask why they pick each other as models in the first place, but the answer invariably lies at a fairly deep psychological level. One suggestion is that the impersonator is roused by some important element in the life or character of the figure they are imitating, and wishes to be like that person. This is quite ironic, since in most cases the individual in question already carries, though unconsciously, the characteristics he or she perceives in the other.

Such personal and complex interchanges can make love affairs and friendships involved and difficult to fathom. Projection is often at work here, with Sagittarius I's becoming the focus of Aquarius-Pisces' secret wishes or fantasies, and vice versa. Animus-anima attractions—that is, falling in love with a projection of one's own idealized inner man or woman—are also evident. Marriages to a figure reminiscent of one's mother or father, or a dominant sibling, are common between Sagittarius I's and Aquarius-Pisces. Relationships like this may allow someone either to work out childhood difficulties or just to reenact them, but in either case it can be quite bewildering and frustrating for the other partner consistently to be treated as if he or she were someone else.

With psychological forces like this at work, career matchups in this combination can create unnecessary difficulties, which get in the way of doing the job. Family relationships confront the whole question of imitation much more squarely, particularly in parent-child matchups, where acceptable parental role models can be crucial to a child's development.

Personal Responsibility

These free thinkers are usually united on one point: Death to the Tyrant! The whole question of dominance and authority is central to their thought. The problem they must solve is how to diminish the needs of those around them for an overriding authority by encouraging these individuals (who may be family, friends or co-workers) to take increasing personal responsibility for their actions. This point reveals the fact that this combination's orientation is not revolutionary or anarchistic per se, since it continues to seek order and structure simply by using other means.

In love affairs and marriages, the couple goes through many changes, from sexual to platonic, from physical to spiritual. Since Sagittarius I and Pisces I are square to each other in the zodiac (90° apart), conventional astrology predicts friction and stress between them, but also the dynamic energy to address problems. In friendships and family settings, the partners can seek to oppose and undermine authoritarian attitudes by encouraging free thought and open discussion. Their particular target in a family group is inevitably the patriarch, the matriarch or any adult figure who rules with an iron hand. Thus as siblings, for example, their stance may be seen or branded as rebellious, and they must be prepared for the worst in terms of punishment. As friends, they will make their influence felt widely in the social groups and gatherings of which they are a part.

Interpersonally, Sagittarius I's and Pisces I's may have problems getting along. Although resentment and jealousy are common between them, however, such considerations are usually overlooked in favor of the unity required by their common mission. This is dramatically demonstrated if they are attacked while in the middle of an argument, for each will immediately spring to the other's defense, going on the offensive with blinding speed. This trait is emphasized in career matchups, where these two can effectively serve an organization by working side by side. Union activities representing workers' rights are a natural setting for their efforts.

ADVICE: Don't assume you know what's best. Keep your own house in order. Cultivate diplomacy—arousing opposition can cripple your efforts.

On Again, Off Again

The Sagittarius I–Pisces II relationship careens through life like a roller coaster. On-again-off-again, it can exasperate those who must painfully watch or deal with it. Although the partners may swear their loyalty to each other and proclaim their undying love, the cold facts would seem to argue otherwise. Thus unreality is the principal problem this relationship must face, since the partners are often unaware of the games they are playing with each other. Things would not be so difficult were the level of feeling less high here, but emotions seem destined to prevail over reason again and again. Worse still, Sagittarius I's and Pisces II's are convinced that they are being rational, but in fact may be misled by faulty reasoning.

Love affairs can be passionate and rewarding. Yet just because this is so, Sagittarius I's and Pisces II's are all too prone to overlook serious problems that need their attention until it is too late. With little or no warning, one partner will often simply leave and never return—potentially a devastating experience for the other person, despite all his or her statements to the contrary. Marriages in this combination will have to face the disagreement between the extreme Sagittarius I need for independence and the need of Pisces II's for security, drives that can often clash. Each spouse is also likely to have close friends outside the relationship who may not get along well with the other partner.

Work relationships between these two tend to be chaotic, since each has a different idea about how things should be done. It is in the spheres of friendship and family that things perhaps go best for the Sagittarius I–Pisces II couple. Here self-deception is not so obviously at work, and the partners can be mutually supportive without kidding themselves about the true state of things. Empathy between siblings and in parent-child combinations is marked. And Sagittarius I and Pisces II friends are likely to bring each other into the bosoms of their own families, where they often meet with acceptance and respect.

ADVICE: Open your eyes. Examine your need to convince yourself. Back off a bit emotionally—try to remain objective. Seek the advice of family and friends.

THE WEEK OF DANCERS & DREAMERS
PISCES III

Fantasy Realized in Action

This combination wants to go where the action is. It isn't enough for this pair to have imagination—they will eventually want their dreams to be translated into reality. The word “eventually” is crucial, though, for it can take months or years before fantasy is realized in action. But since these partners bring out each other's practical side, making plans for such endeavors, down to the last detail, can be highly satisfying for both of them. The theme of travel usually figures here in one way or another, for this couple takes great pleasure in regularly moving from place to place.

Love affairs and marriages between Sagittarius I's and Pisces III's favor long-distance trips, and if a period of time goes by without any mention of such travel, both partners may get itchy feet. Travel provides the perfect escape from the relationship's problems, but also acts as a safety valve, allowing the partners to let off emotional steam built up by frustration or neglect. Expressing anger is often a major problem for these two, in that it can be hard for them to find a socially acceptable way to let loose, or to avoid abusiveness or violence in such confrontations, whether physical or verbal.

Both professional relationships and friendships can be outstanding between these two, and they may also be interrelated, with particular emphasis on manual, technical or artistic skills. Although Sagittarius I jumpiness and Pisces III flakiness can be problems at times, when it comes to meeting deadlines and quotas these two can be counted on to come through. However, when a lot of time is available and demands are not high, both are very capable of goofing off together. In many situations, then, the Sagittarius I–Pisces III matchup will work no harder than it has to. In the family sphere, neither combination of the parent-child relationship is likely to be highly demanding or authoritative. Attitudes here are generally pretty free and easy, with a great deal of affection on both sides.

ADVICE: Putting things off can become a bad habit. Be relaxed, but not too much. Find a sensible way to express your aggression. Meet challenges directly.

Longing for Someone Normal

The chances of two such idiosyncratic and highly individualistic people as these getting along together on a daily basis is alas not great. Both have their own ways of doing things, which are not only unlikely to gel but are actually prone to conflict. The fact that both partners tend to focus on the unique does not necessarily make it easier for them to sympathize with each other—indeed, both partners may long to be with someone more normal (as long as they can remain their own difficult selves, of course). One of the problems in getting such a relationship on the rails is that these partners need a while to adjust to each other's foibles, but may not be prepared to hang in there that long. In fact, family relationships between two Sagittarius II's can be the more successful ones, simply because, having grown up together over the years, they are used to each other's odd ways.

Love affairs and friendships between these two, to the extent that they are possible, tend to do best when the partners see each other only occasionally. A hunger for more contact will often merely hasten the matchup's ultimate demise. Marriages can work out only if the partners have the necessary space that they can confidently call their own, without any interference or judgment. Children of such parents will not have an easy time of it, since their parental role models leave something to be desired. In fact, it may be that the children themselves become the stabilizing force in the relationship.

Sibling and parent-child relationships between Sagittarius II's are not easy ones to maintain, either, but a repetitive process of confrontation and resolution can help to some degree. Familial relationships between members of the opposite sex usually have a better chance for success. In the professional sphere, these two will be happiest as self-employed freelancers or as business partners, where the varied talents of both can be put to best use, but they will have to seek strong financial advice and management.

ADVICE: Give things a chance to work out. Hang in there, but don't keep beating your head against a wall. Beware of double standards.

An Arrow to the Future

With lots of energy to spare, this duo is up for new and exciting experiences, and also for rolling back boundaries. These partners may already be highly original individually, but the synergy of their combination magnifies this quality, making their relationship a potent force for change. Whether they work together directly or not, their presence in a family or social group, or as part of a work team, will give such organizations a tremendous impetus to move forward. Like an arrow pointed toward the future, this duo will lead the way.

Love affairs between Sagittarius II's and III's can be passionate, but they are also highly unstable and may not go very deep emotionally. A curious inability to express sympathy or kindness, which in no way implies that these emotions are not felt, may make such a relationship hard and uncompromising, albeit intense. Learning to slow down a bit and to place greater emphasis on understanding and acceptance are crucial to this relationship's survival. Marriage should not be considered unless these points are addressed.

Friendships are often of the more challenging sort. Outdoing each other in any field of endeavor can become the basis for such a relationship. Sagittarius II's may find their niche and stay there, while Sagittarius III's are seldom content until they have pushed their talents to the limit; the determination and stick-to-it-iveness of the former may find its match in the desire of the latter to overcome and emerge victorious. Confrontations are not at all necessary here, however, and this duo can be remarkably accepting of each other.

Sibling pairs, particularly of the same sex, may engage in constant competition and dialogue, but this usually has a salutary effect, acting to sharpen their individual skills. Work and career connections will rarely be possible between two such dynamic personalities, however, for they generally do best when working on their own, or on a team where they alone call the shots.

ADVICE: Explore emotional realms carefully, but work on expressing feelings at a deeper level. Seek out compromises. Conserve energies in order to make them last.

The Resolve to Prevail

This relationship often focuses on large-scale, even mammoth projects. Whether planning family vacations, social events or career coups together, the couple enjoy being in the thick of the fray, fighting either as a unit or against each other, for large stakes. They are often found at the head of respective organizations, but when they are colleagues they do not have to occupy a dominant role in their group; just being part of what is going on is usually enough for them. The thrill of confrontation is also an element here, and although defeat is not really a possibility they consider, they can accept it if they know in their hearts that they've given their all. Furthermore, their resolve to prevail in the next encounter is usually tremendous.

In sibling relationships and career matchups, the competitive aspects of this combination can be powerful, particularly when the partners are of the same sex. Generally, Sagittarius-Capricorns may have the advantage here, because they are so psychologically perceptive, but sheer energy may allow Sagittarius II's to win out. The most satisfying connections between these two may center on the theme of construction, whether of physical structures or more abstract ones. Bosses and parents may come to depend heavily on the support and dedication of co-worker and sibling pairs of this type.

In love affairs and marriages, Sagittarius II's can be attracted to the smoldering passion of Sagittarius-Capricorns, who in turn may be drawn to Sagittarius II drive and charisma. This can be an intense matchup, accessing deep emotional areas. Unfortunately, undermining and self-destructive feelings are as likely to emerge as healthy and constructive ones. The partners' intentions are very important here, and if the relationship believes in itself and wants to succeed, the results they get can directly reflect their attitudes. Friendships or enmities tend to be forged in the white heat of experience. There is usually little concerning their purpose in getting involved with each other that they leave to the imagination.

ADVICE: Winning is not the only important thing. Learn from your mistakes. Maintain a positive attitude. Don't undercut your own efforts.

Rarely Neutral

Should these two be able to get together, they may temporarily work a kind of magic as a pair, but in the long run their temperamental and ideological differences may prove too great a barrier to their relationship. Capricorn I's are likely to view Sagittarius II's with a wary eye—mistrust and an occasional twinge of jealousy must be overcome if the relationship is to move forward. No matter how far out, or even revolutionary, Capricorn I's are, at bottom they are rock-solid traditionalists who often disapprove of highly unusual and individualistic expressions such as those that emanate from Sagittarius II's.

Love affairs and marriages between these two do not have an outstanding prognosis. Capricorn I's have an earthy sensuality that may hold the interest of Sagittarius II's for a time, but they also show authoritarian tendencies that will ultimately leave Sagittarius II's longing to break free and looking elsewhere for what they need. Their own curiosity will probably be piqued by Sagittarius II originality, at least at first, but they will later come to view this quality as flaky and irresponsible, and will grow irritated and impatient with it.

Capricorn I parents can give their Sagittarius II children the stability and support they desperately need, but may ultimately prove too controlling. Friendships are a study in contrasts. Other people may find it hard to understand how such different people can remain close friends over the years, but this very special bond is often sustained through mutual need and admiration. Common interests invariably prove to be the cement that holds such a relationship together.

In career matters, this relationship can be either positive or negative, but will rarely be neutral in character. Should these two be rivals, they are likely to entice each other with dubious promises, and to try to catch each other off guard in their attempts to overcome. As colleagues or co-workers, they may succeed in generating a magnetism that can draw clients and bosses alike to their cause.

ADVICE: Try to see the other person's point of view. Give things time to unfold and to change. Mute your disapproval. Find what is to your mutual advantage.

Nothing Permanent Except Change

This is the couple to watch if you are interested in keeping abreast of the times. They are particularly good at setting trends, or, at the very least, at recognizing and following them. This does not mean that the relationship is without its ups and downs. In fact, it is knowing how to surf the waves of chance that guarantees the combination's success, implying a wisdom capable of recognizing that nothing is permanent except change. Capricorn II's are highly ambitious, a quality that can be lacking in their partner in this combination, but they can certainly be attracted to out-of-the-way phenomena, and so may be captivated by the unusual attributes and concepts of Sagittarius II's. Furthermore, they are sensible enough to realize that today's weird notions may be tomorrow's realities, so that the relationship's vision often proves accurate, and even lucrative.

In love affairs, Sagittarius II's and Capricorn II's may be carried away on the wings of fantasy, but their idealistic interactions may in fact have surprising longevity. Marriages between these imaginative Sagittarius II–Capricorn II couples may not fare so well when confronted with the humdrum routine of domestic life. Friendships and sibling matchups in this combination often show an interest in fantasy, science fiction, horror films and the like. The friends and parents of such a couple may despair of ever dragging them back to the real world, but these pairs are well aware of the differences between what is real and what imagined.

Business relationships and career connections between these two can get on like a house on fire. They most often do best when free of the restrictions of a hierarchical or bureaucratic organization, but they may actually meet while in the employ of such a company and formulate ideas to go off on their own. Another common scenario is for Sagittarius II's and Capricorn II's to meet as freelancers or small-business people and to pool their efforts, often inspired by a totally new concept or idea.

An Empathic Morass

There is an innate sympathy and depth of feeling between these two that can help the partners overcome many difficulties. Their relationship can be an extremely close one, providing shelter and protection against the misunderstanding or narrow minds of other people. Although Capricorn III's seem to be the more protective of the two, Sagittarius II's also offer solace in times of psychological need, serving to raise their partners' spirits when they are teetering on the brink of depression. Sagittarius II liveliness and sparkling imagination is not generally disturbing to Capricorn III's, nor is the Capricorn III tendency to dominate resented by Sagittarius II's, who may come to rely on this partner's stability and strength.

Love affairs and marriages between these two may create a bond of mutual dependency that is difficult to break. While things are going well, there may be few problems, but if personal development is neglected, neither Sagittarius II's nor Capricorn III's may be equipped to function confidently on their own. The strong empathy between these two can be seen both as a blessing and as a force that weakens individual egos, since it reduces the need to rise to challenges. Such relationships are pleasant enough, but may sink into an apathetic morass that generates little energy.

Family relationships, on the other hand, can be very dynamic, not only between siblings but also between parents and children in this combination. Capricorn III's are often role models for Sagittarius II's, their achievements acting as a stimulus to their partners, who want to be taken seriously and therefore must prove themselves. Relatives here are also capable of teaming up on joint efforts, to the benefit of their relationship. Friendships may result from working relationships, or vice versa, but feelings often get in the way here, and keep the relationship from functioning objectively. It is usually best for such pairs to decide whether friendship or work is the most important priority and to stick to such decisions, no matter how difficult that may be.

ADVICE: Try to maintain objectivity. Stand up for yourself—a relationship can only do so much for you. Empathy has its good and bad effects.

THE CUSP OF MYSTERY & IMAGINATION
CAPRICORN-AQUARIUS CUSP

Auspicious Circumstances

On the surface of it, this combination would have all the ingredients for instability. Yet the natural flamboyance and extroverted qualities shared by these partners can be constructively channeled into highly grounded pursuits. Taking on concrete responsibilities, meeting deadlines and having to be concerned with the welfare of others all work to the benefit of this duo. True, they are equally capable of flying off the track and dissipating their energies in debilitating, albeit pleasurable pursuits, but at least the choice is there. In addition, fate usually takes a hand, serving up some auspicious circumstance that enables this pair to get back on the right path.

Learning to read the signs of the times is of crucial importance to the stability of this relationship. Thus it may be a combination of free will and serendipity that determines whether love affairs and friendships will work out or not. The circumstances under which these two meet are often as important as how they react to each other. Should one of them already be involved in a permanent relationship, the whole course of the matchup will be determined by whether the partners show patience and care, or rush right into an emotional involvement without giving it much thought. Here more than elsewhere, acting responsibly will help create an outcome more favorable for all concerned.

In the areas of family and career, parent-child and boss-employee relationships of either combination tend to be nervous and somewhat unstable. Parents usually find it difficult to keep their anger under control, and can become easily exasperated by their children. In co-worker combinations, particularly those having an outlet for imagination and personal initiative, this pair can be successful. Friendships between them tend to drift apart unless imbued with a strong sense of purpose. Engaging in community activities, common interests and even in small-business pursuits may be required to keep the friendship on an even keel.

ADVICE: Don't try to escape your destiny. Surrender is important, but so is individual choice. Find activities that will give you direction.

Vying for Attention

The uniqueness of character that these two possess can work against their establishing a strong relationship, since their combination only emphasizes their unconventional aspects, and also adds a dose of overemotionalism. Since this pair normally chooses to invest far more in themselves as individuals than they are willing to give a relationship, a relationship between them doesn't stand much of a chance. Spending a lot of time together may not be in the cards for these two, so that more casual relationships are favored. Emotions are often out-of-synch here as well, as is evident in the impatience and irritation that these two often feel with each other.

In love affairs and marriages, both partners seek attention; if they fail, they will often try to annoy each other or deliberately create a problem that cannot be ignored. Such couples will often vie for attention in gatherings of friends and family by showing off their talents and abilities, or by being obnoxious. Should these two be thrown together in a work situation, they will have to exert great discipline not to allow their emotions to be aroused and to keep their anger under control. In the sphere of friendship, these two often do best as occasional companions or acquaintances. Limiting emotional contacts can allow common interests to be the focus and playful feelings to emerge.

Examining families where these two grow up together can lend insight into their relationship. Both partners tend to be very self-centered, yet they can often establish bonds through childhood games and other forms of play. As long as they are involved in what they are doing, things can go quite well, but the appearance of an adult can spark competition for attention. Failing to gain it, one of the pair may throw a tantrum, start a fight or withdraw. Such sibling pairs have very different emotional requirements, and parents who find it easier to adopt one attitude toward both will inevitably arouse discontent. It is quite possible for these patterns to be replayed in the workplace.

ADVICE: Make an effort to get along—put the relationship first. Promote harmony through sharing. Be the first to give attention and the last to demand it.

Reaching the Top

There is an undeniably ambitious element in this relationship, and with these two the desire to reach the top in any given field is not necessarily selfish or even self-seeking; rather, it is the expression of what they feel is their path in life, their destiny, their fate. These partners often feel that together they are able to serve a cause more efficaciously and to forward not only their own dreams and aspirations but those of the group to which they belong. Such feelings of inevitability and justification make this relationship a very difficult one to oppose in the professional and business worlds. The partners must be careful, however, that they do not act unfairly or hurt others' feelings through an overaggressive or elitist attitude.

These ambitious attitudes often manifest in the family and the marital sphere, where the couple can come to be a kind of group representative. Even when the partners express their drive in different areas, and have little to do with financial interests, other relatives express great pride in their achievements. But jealousies over the couple's good fortunes can also be aroused in those who feel left out or perhaps insulted by such "uppityness," or through unfavorable comparisons.

As lovers, these couples may find it necessary to convince themselves and others that they have the best relationship possible, often through displays of romantic affection. Such demonstrations may really be a cover-up for problems that cannot be faced or even acknowledged. Friends in this combination find it less necessary to put on a show, but still may need to believe that their relationship is absolutely tops. This may well be the case, but they will eventually learn that these attitudes can also be harmful, since calling someone "best friend," or lauding one's own relationship to the skies, can actually become a setup for a later powerful let-down or betrayal.

ADVICE: Don't blow your own horn. Conceit can undercut your efforts. Go about your work quietly and modestly—results speak for themselves.

THE WEEK OF ACCEPTANCE

Forceful Persuasion

Because of their unusual natures and special requirements, these two may recognize each other as soul-mates. Furthermore, they are both quite likely to have suffered more than their share of rejection and misunderstanding before meeting each other. Sagittarius II's tend to be wary of the acceptance accorded them by Aquarius III's, and may initially back off. Later, however, they can become unduly dependent on this partner, once their trust has grown. Aquarius III's show their enthusiasm more openly, and are often mesmerized by the energies this relationship unlocks, yet they may still hold back. Thus the relationship's focus may well be the forceful persuasion that the partners exert on each other to open up and fully accept one another in their hurry to consummate what promises to be a wholly unique relationship for both of them.

In love affairs and marriages, these partners are capable of sharing at a deep emotional level. Once convinced that their secrets are safe with one another, they may open their hearts and discuss the most intimate and painful matters. They are both well aware that such trust could backfire, and that they risk betrayal, but they are usually willing to take the chance. Needless to say, should the relationship fail or suffer the loss of one partner, it could be years before such trust could again be established with another, if ever.

Friends and siblings in this combination usually indulge in physical activities ranging from sports to fitness to daring activities such as bungee-jumping or hang-gliding. These two bring out one another's extroverted side, particularly in areas involving challenge and danger. Sharing mutual friends may be a problem here because of the possessive feelings and petty jealousies that often arise. As co-workers, these two may find it hard to agree on what approach they should take in their projects. Likewise, as business partners or entrepreneurs, their differences in outlook may provoke dissension and ultimately precipitate a breakup.

ADVICE: Overcome suspicions and open your heart. Don't be afraid to share. Possessiveness must be relinquished. Learn to work together.

THE CUSP OF SENSITIVITY
AQUARIUS-PISCES CUSP

Grounding Wayward Energies

This pair tends to bring out each other's insecurities. Thus the struggle to overcome emotional imbalances is likely to become the relationship's focus, at least insofar as it seeks to perpetuate itself through healthy behavior. The domination of impulsive and self-destructive urges is of prime importance here. Sagittarius II's may find their partners in this combination very attractive, but could be frustrated in their attempts to penetrate Aquarius-Pisces' elaborate defenses. Aquarius-Pisces in turn will find it hard to adjust to the alternately aggressive and passive moods of Sagittarius II's. Establishing consistency in the relationship is a top priority; assuming responsibilities and grounding wayward energies in the regular activities of daily life may be at least a partial solution.

All activities of a physical or sensual nature—such as food, sex, exercise and sleep—should all be deeply explored. Love affairs and marriages are liable to show stress and nervousness when these areas are avoided or neglected. At times, the insecurities in such relationships seem to resemble chemical imbalances or deficiencies, since they can often be rectified when the right antidote is found. More often than not, love, affection and kindness turn out to be necessary supplements.

Working out their differences can be a lifetime task for relatives. As friends, Sagittarius II's and Aquarius-Pisces have their ups and downs. They often do best when in crisis or mutual need, exhibiting sympathy and warmth, but they can be surprisingly cold and offhand with each other when such times of trouble have passed.

Professional relationships between these two can do well when fixed requirements demand a steady, unwavering approach, but Sagittarius II's will eventually tire of inflexible and boring assignments, and long for change. Aquarius-Pisces often feel threatened, and even betrayed, by such feelings. In the family sphere, relatives in this combination may have difficulty getting along, creating dissension within the group.

ADVICE: Promote calm and balance, and avoid extremes of behavior. Ground yourself in the here and now. Problems are challenges.

Varying Frequencies

The harmony between these two is in the nature of a sympathetic vibration. Like strings tuned to the same frequency, Sagittarius II's and Pisces I's are highly responsive to each other, such that the slightest upset or change of feeling in one will cause discord in the relationship. Because of the extreme sensitivity here, oscillations of mood are common, and it may be difficult to attain constancy or permanence. Yet this challenge can become the focus of the Sagittarius II–Pisces I relationship, as its partners seek to be ever more aware of their emotions and try to stay in tune with each other. Sooner or later, they will learn not to react so quickly to upset, and realize that being out of tune must also be accepted as a natural phenomenon that needs to occur from time to time.

In love affairs, the partners can enjoyably spend long periods of time with each other. But although they are good companions as well as lovers, they do best when each has his or her own space to which to retreat to be alone. Emotional interactions are complex here, since it is difficult for either the partners or an objective onlooker to know where feelings are coming from, so conjoined are they. Feeling the other person's emotions and taking them as one's own is quite a common phenomenon here. The difficulty that Pisces I's find in making commitments, and the problems that Sagittarius I's have in trusting at a deep level, may keep these two from getting married. Should they tie the knot, however, their union may prove highly successful.

Working together is only possible if the partners' innate sensitivity to each other's moods can be put aside for the sake of the project or the good of the group. Similarly, relatives in this combination cannot expect others to sit around and wait until they have smoothed over their differences. Sagittarius II–Pisces I friendships may be too close, stifling the individuality of both partners.

ADVICE: Too frequent tuning takes away from the playing time. Let things go as they will. Worry less about what's wrong, and don't ask.

Putting Patience to the Test

This relationship can turn out to be a highly provocative and lively one—not much boredom will ever manifest here. The partners must be extremely careful, however, to moderate their energies and avoid taking on too much. Both physical activity and highly imaginative endeavors are characteristic of this pair. Pisces II's often bring out the more introverted aspects of their Sagittarius II partners, and in their own private world these two can give vent to unlimited flights of fantasy. Kaleidoscopic, the relationship's ever-changing thought patterns roam over vast areas of human endeavor.

Love affairs and friendships tend to the strange, even to the peculiar. Seldom interested in the straight and narrow, this relationship will go far afield to find what really stimulates and satisfies it, and it will rarely be content with middle-class values. If the partners deny or ridicule each other's needs for comfort and security, however—and these needs can be significant—they may be undercutting the relationship's longevity. In marriage, the drive for security may well emerge even more strongly, often bringing about a marked change in the values in a young Sagittarius II–Pisces II couple. Should these spouses have children, they will undoubtedly appreciate the value of a settled domestic life still more. Achieving financial stability is an important challenge for this marriage to face.

Working relationships between Sagittarius II's and Pisces II's are often successful in technical and practical areas, perhaps dealing with computers or finance. Although neither individual may be very practical on his or her own, the relationship can surmount such difficulties to create a sensible and well-ordered work space. Siblings in this combination may find it hard to maintain stability in their relationship, since they demand variety. In general, these pairs put the patience of parents and older relatives to the test.

Following the Left-Hand Path

It may sometimes seem that this pair has come together for one purpose only—to help each of them on the road to self-realization and to find their individual creative cores. Once they are set solidly on the left-hand path of inner growth, their relationship may no longer be necessary. The success of this work may depend on the ability of Sagittarius II’s to keep their ego drives under control and submit to a higher authority, whether moral, religious or spiritual. Pisces III’s may be a strong influence on them in this respect, and may act as their spiritual guides in these relationships, gently encouraging them to temper their egotism and follow the path of true inner work. In turn, Sagittarius II’s can share in the courageous and creative Pisces III approach to this process.

Love affairs will be passionate, but are no less in need of philosophical direction. Sufficiently pleasurable experiences may be had by both partners, but if they take the time to explore the depths of their own feelings, and to contemplate the many mysteries of life, they will add whole new dimensions to their interactions. Furthermore, such investigations tend to increase the likelihood of their staying together. Marriages may come to be squarely based on a particular ideology, whether a formal one or a more subjective one worked out by the partners themselves. Should this be the case, the couples must remember to be open to criticism and evaluation, and never to cut themselves off from the world’s input.

As friends, Sagittarius II’s and Pisces III’s are liable to drift without direction unless they find a point to set their compass toward. As family members, particularly parent-child pairs, Pisces III’s are more successful in the parental role, and must insist on their authority being respected. Sagittarius II–Pisces III co-worker pairs often do well putting their energies in the service of a company or organization. Inspirational aspects are extremely important here, and this professional duo does particularly well in activities demanding imagination and flair.

ADVICE: Learn the lesson of surrender. Don’t put yourself above the universe. Find your true self. Listen carefully to the suggestions of other people.

Sailing Off into the Great Beyond

Because of a shared tendency to think big, these two are likely to overlook some important details that may be staring them right in the face. Often so intent on the forest that they miss the trees, they allow idealistic visions to get in the way of their performance of necessary daily tasks. Thus the partners here may be dependent on others to clean up after them, and since such services rarely come for free, a good bookkeeper, accountant, domestic helper and yard worker, for a start, may be necessary. Partners who don’t see what they don’t want to see may ignore all kinds of warning signals until it is too late. They could perhaps rely on a partner of a different combination to serve this function, one who would also encourage them to kick off their high-energy projects. But alas, the relationship between two Sagittarius III’s does not grant these and other benefits.

Love affairs, marriages and friendships are highly optimistic here, at times too much so. The partners’ inability to see that their relationship doesn’t warrant such confidence can guarantee bewilderment and despair for both if things fall apart. As siblings, Sagittarius III’s may be dependent on parents who will take care of practical matters, allowing them to go sailing off into the great beyond.

Work relationships between Sagittarius III’s are perhaps the most successful of all. When engaged in mammoth projects together, whether of a professional, social or familial nature, the partners will usually see them through to the bitter end—not because they are exceptionally responsible or even persevering, but because there is usually no other choice. Furthermore, projects that seem overly ambitious to some may be viewed as quite manageable by Sagittarius III’s, and therefore easily accomplished. In career matters, the biggest problem for these two is that they sometimes don’t know how to restrict their highly speculative enterprises. The belief that growth is inevitable, and unlimited, can create an extremely risky outlook, and in business it can prove fatal.

ADVICE: Even you have limitations—recognize them. Deal with what is in front of you. Try to focus on the details once in a while.

Thriving on Struggle

This relationship certainly has its stormy side. The magnetism between these two is compelling—they fascinate one another, and in retrospect it may seem that their meeting and subsequent interactions were meant to be. Although high seriousness is often characteristic of both Sagittarius III's and Sagittarius-Capricorns, their relationship is a strange blend of clearly articulated thought and raw feeling. These two are unquestionably on the same wavelength, and whether or not they like each other, they usually have a deep understanding of each other's needs.

Whether positive or negative, love affairs and marriages are extremely close, with the partners well aware of where they stand with each other. Erotic desire is very much in evidence here, yet it does not necessarily emerge as the most important aspect of such relationships, particularly as they progress. Both partners are ultimately more concerned with establishing emotional bonds, and with keeping the romantic flame burning bright. Unfortunately, the turbulent nature of the feelings involved here can run counter to the development of empathy.

Sagittarius III's and Sagittarius-Capricorns are as likely to be enemies as friends. When they find themselves in opposition to each other, their struggles can be epic—incapable of being resolved by a single confrontation, these battles often continue throughout their lives. As friends, these two are extremely interested in one another's activities, and may attempt projects together of an artistic, social or political nature. Parent-child relationships are usually unfavorable; here these personalities will tend to trigger each other's emotions. Too often, Sagittarius-Capricorn silence and Sagittarius III anger conspire to undercut any real chance of communication. Colleagues and co-workers in this combination can make a powerful and effective working team, which thrives on opposition and struggle and often succeeds through sheer tenacity.

ADVICE: Try to keep feelings under control. Work to develop empathy—keep lines of communication open. Don't be distracted in your search for values.

Encompassing a World

These two are poles apart, which means they can encompass a whole world between them. Sagittarius III's are by nature optimistic and effusive, Capricorn I's more realistic and selective. Though a potentially volatile mix, these two more often form a powerful union, with the qualities of one synergistically intensified by those of the other; whether they are rivals or serve on the same team, they complement each other perfectly. So natural and efficacious is this bond that the partners often fulfill more than one role in each other's lives, and reason correctly that success in one area could indicate a similar superiority in another. One disturbing element of this matchup is that the partners often activate each other's dark side, and must be sure to keep destructive tendencies from getting out of hand.

Friendships and marriages between Sagittarius III's and Capricorn I's may develop into career associations, and vice versa. Couples with as close emotional ties as these two have can be remarkably successful in business or sports, or in scientific or artistic pursuits. But financial disagreements, arising from the tension between Sagittarius III liberal spending and Capricorn I thriftiness, may be unavoidable. A friendly rivalry between the partners stimulates them both to higher levels of performance—a positive form of competitiveness on which their relationship seems to thrive. They are exceptionally willing to learn from each other; in certain areas, each may prove the other's best teacher. Love affairs can be perilous, however; darker desires may be aroused here that can lead just as easily to instability and violence as to sexual gratification.

In the family, Sagittarius III and Capricorn I relatives may be fated to battle it out, since each may come to represent a contrasting point of view within the group. Unfortunately, fixed familial roles and behavioral patterns may prevent these two from interacting personally and thus having a chance to work out their differences.

ADVICE: Learn from your differences—don't compromise them away. Keep an eye on your dark side. Reach financial agreement. Avoid labels.

Knowing What Is Best

As power oriented as this relationship seems, sympathy and understanding are woven into its fabric, and its focus is the strong emotional bond that exists between its partners. Sagittarius III's understand well the Capricorn II need for achievement and power. One could say, "It takes one to know one," for Sagittarius III's are no slouches themselves when it comes to ambition. A collision may be inevitable in this relationship, unless one or the other partner gives way. There are two possibilities here: first, the partners may not be headed for the same goal, or even interested in competing for it; second, one partner may be subordinated to the other, at least for the time being, as a helpmate or assistant. Generally speaking, outright combat, or even fierce competition, is uncharacteristic of this relationship, since the partners usually have enough good sense to know it is not in their common interest.

Because of their mutual understanding, Sagittarius III–Capricorn II pairs—whether mates, friends or co-workers—may be invaluable to each other as advisors. Being able both to comprehend one another's thoughts and to empathize with one another's personal feelings is a rare combination, and something this pair would not care to live without. Sagittarius III's can often tell what's best for Capricorn II's before Capricorn II's do themselves, and vice versa. In some ways, though, this makes the relationship weakening as well as strengthening, since neither partner here may want to make a move without knowing the other's opinion of it—and, ideally, getting his or her assent.

These two can impress other people as real tough cookies, but in their love affairs with each other they are surprisingly vulnerable. Allowing each other to see sides of themselves that they rarely show anyone else indicates tremendous trust, as well as a belief in the relationship's permanence. Parent-child relationships of either combination can also exhibit loving and trusting attitudes.

ADVICE: Don't be so concerned with pleasing each other. Be honest about what you want, even if you risk rejection. Asking advice isn't always best.

THE WEEK OF DOMINANCE
CAPRICORN III

A Battle for Supremacy

A battle for supremacy may be unavoidable in this relationship. Since Capricorn III's can be content with what they have, however, and are very service oriented, conflicts can be avoided if Sagittarius III's are smart enough not to question their partner's need to dominate in certain important areas. As a matter of fact, as long as this need is recognized, Capricorn III's might be quite content to let Sagittarius III's take the lead. Still, two personalities as big as these have to expect to bump into each other every once in a while. For a successful relationship in this combination, the focus should be on how the power structure between them can be set up in the most efficient and agreeable way, for neither partner should be overly interested in provoking arguments and fights.

Love affairs and friendships, sad to say, may be more taken up with power than with love or affection. Urges to dominate can be very difficult to keep under control, and struggles will sometimes rage out of hand. Both partners will have to relax occasionally, and to realize that, in love and friendship, a crushing victory may actually signal defeat.

As marriage partners and family members, Sagittarius III's and Capricorn III's tend to be extremely bossy around their children and other relatives. Rarely able to sit on the sidelines, these two often need to dominate a large family group, and will seek to control both its finances and its outlook. The arousal of resentment and resistance may be expected, along with endless conflict, unless the pair is more sensitive to the wishes of others.

In career matters, the Sagittarius III–Capricorn III pair is highly dominant, and usually has to rule the heap. They function best as business partners at the head of their own company, or as executives with real decision-making power. Should they be cast as lower-level co-workers in a large organization, they will invariably show frustration and dissatisfaction if unable to rise on their merits.

ADVICE: Take a break. Listen to others. Lessen your need to control—delegate responsibility. Love is perhaps the greatest power of all.

THE CUSP OF MYSTERY & IMAGINATION
CAPRICORN-AQUARIUS CUSP

A Round Peg in a Square Hole

The dynamics of this relationship work best, perhaps, when the partners accept their own idiosyncrasies and put them to work for them, without excuses or holding back. Many of their problems will clear up once they stop trying to act conventionally or to be accepted by those whose respect they crave—after all, once these two begin helping each other, they have quite a bit going for them careerwise. Lively and imaginative Capricorn-Aquarians are good at helping serious Sagittarius III's relax after work. Capricorn-Aquarians, for their part, are not always able to realize their fantastic schemes, and here Sagittarius III's can be of great help. Nonetheless, the road is not an easy one for these two interpersonally; although they can be a joy to each other in many respects, they can also get on each other's nerves—with dire results. Capricorn-Aquarians tend to vent their anger in a single, explosive reaction followed by a series of smaller aftershocks, whereas Sagittarius III anger simmers away, and inevitably turns to depression if not released.

In love affairs and marriages, this pair can be torn between a desire for a quiet and conventional life and a real need to be outrageous and flamboyant. Such conflicts between wants and needs make the relationship look like a round peg being forced into a square hole. Generally at the root of the problem are certain childhood scripts or parental expectations that continue to hold one or both partners in a viselike grip. Learning to be firm and bidding a fond farewell to parental guilt trips will be difficult, but is necessary if self-development is to continue.

Friendships and sibling relationships in this combination, particularly of the same sex, revel in upsetting adults. Playing pranks is more the pair's style than outright rebellion. Mischievous to the extreme, they are never happier than when they are pushing someone's buttons. The onset of maturity is often clearly marked by the cessation of such activities.

ADVICE: Put your flamboyance to work—your lack of convention can help you succeed financially. Don't be guilty about your childhood shenanigans.

Unbeatable on Paper

Careerwise this can be a match made in heaven. If the partners are able to integrate their energies, the sky is the limit; yet insecurity often undermines their determination. The combination looks unbeatable on paper, or if one simply examines their combined raw talent. Somewhere, however, there is a nagging voice that persistently raises doubts, lowers self-esteem and threatens to sabotage the whole enterprise. Furthermore, the kind of creativity this duo exudes is likely to arouse envy and insecurity in other people. So, in the end, only a rock-hard determination to succeed, accompanied by the ruthless extirpation of negative programming, will move these two forward in their work. If this kind of resolve is lacking, they are likely to languish in a less than optimal setting, despite all their ability.

Relationships between Sagittarius III's and Aquarius I's are quite exciting, but unless there is a firm commitment to building a deeper emotional bond, the matchup is likely to remain superficial, albeit enjoyable. When in need of the kind of help that demands sacrifice over a period of time, the partner in distress is, alas, all too likely to be left alone. Love affairs may be highly passionate initially, but can quickly fizzle. They are attractions that rarely involve a realistic possibility of marriage. Yet sheer guts and determination may result in the kind of success no one would have predicted for the relationship, and in the development of connections and new areas of interest previously unimagined by these two as individuals.

Parent-child relationships of either possible variation may see a concerted effort on the part of the parent to make the best of, or to exploit, the child's talents. Sagittarius III or Aquarius I hindsight may later indicate that such energy would have been better spent gently encouraging the attainment of more realistic goals.

ADVICE: Dig in your heels. Don't depend on your talent or take success for granted—hard work is needed. Sheer guts can win the day.

Avoiding Trouble?

Management seems to be the hallmark of this relationship, and the primary tool the partners use in dealing with each other. It is actually a rather effective tool, since management implies both understanding and good will here, rather than manipulation. Sagittarius III's, for all their strength, may be helpless before the charm of Aquarius II's, who tend to sense their inner lack of self-confidence. In return they can provide stability to their restless partners, as well as build a firm professional and financial foundation for the relationship. Aquarius II's, for their part, will rarely oppose their powerful partners directly, and their persuasiveness can act as a subtle but effective guide. Although they claim to like it nice and easy, avoiding trouble like the plague, it is often to difficult personalities (like Sagittarius III's) that they end up being drawn.

Love affairs can work out all right, but are complex. Sagittarius III's and Aquarius II's will find self-examination an extremely painful process, but unless they attempt it, their relationship is unlikely to develop fully. These two can have great times together, at least until Sagittarius III's seriousness or depression looms. The passion of Aquarius II's for their dark-sided partner may cool, and at this point they may want out of the relationship. Marriages between Sagittarius III's and Aquarius II's are not recommended unless both partners are committed to developing deeper ties of understanding and trust.

In the family, Aquarius II children may adore their Sagittarius III parents, but are often dominated by them, reinforcing these children's tendency to relax and let themselves be taken care of. Friendships are best when devoted to the pursuit of pleasure and entertainment; they will rarely go very deep, nor is there any particular need for them to do so. Career partnerships in this combination can be extremely persuasive and influential within their working sphere. Conflicts often arise, however, between more hardworking Sagittarius III's and easygoing Aquarius II's, and resentments can build.

ADVICE: Develop self-understanding. Stick together through thick and thin. Letting yourself be spoiled weakens willpower and character.

Calling the Shots

The focus of this relationship may be well hidden behind the scenes, but it usually involves a struggle for power. The Sagittarius III–Aquarius III pair tries to show a happy and positive face to the world, but it is difficult for them to cover up their differences of opinion. Strong-minded, both partners know what they think and what they want, but too often the relationship demands the subservience of one to the other. No matter which partner is calling the shots, the other will feel resentment and anger at being dominated, and will sooner or later lash out. These partners would do better to work consciously and steadily on making their matchup more equal, taking the power from either individual and putting it in the hands of the relationship, where it really belongs.

Love affairs are best when they are more playful than serious in nature. Marriages between these two may strike the world as master-slave in type, which is usually not far from the truth. The partners' temperaments are such that they very naturally fit into these roles, with Sagittarius III's dominating and Aquarius III's accepting it. Such relationships, although seemingly undesirable, can last if at least a small percentage of the partners' needs are being met.

Family members in this combination often feel appreciated by each other, but in the long run they may be unable to share because of what they view as their partner's selfishness. Friendships between these two often see Sagittarius III's governing emotionally and Aquarius III's intellectually. Such relationships can work out well if the partners learn from each other and work to achieve balance.

In career matters, Sagittarius III's and Aquarius III's usually have few illusions about each other. Able to work effectively in the short term, they may nonetheless experience a break over differences of opinion concerning how their work should be done.

ADVICE: Put power where it belongs. Foster dignity and respect. Even things out—neither partner should benefit at the other's expense. Wrongs don't go away.

THE CUSP OF SENSITIVITY
AQUARIUS-PISCES CUSP

This Too Shall Pass

This relationship has the wisdom to recognize the transitory nature of all things. That viewpoint pervades all of their interactions, not only with each other but with others as well. The Aquarius-Pisces sensitivity to the daily fluctuations of life dovetails with the Sagittarius III ability to see the big picture, so that the relationship shows an awareness of constant change within the context of the overall scheme of things. Two immediate characteristics emerge: first, the ability to be aware of small changes but not to overreact to them or take them too seriously; and second, the patience and wisdom to wait to examine major trends before making decisions. These two can be highly effective as a business, social or political combination, or as friends, family members or a married couple who know how to invest their money wisely.

The longevity of friendships, love affairs and marriages between these two is enhanced by their philosophical outlook. The partners rarely choose to separate or break up unless every avenue of compromise and reconciliation has been explored, over a period of years. The disadvantage of all this is that the partners also tend to suffer silently, harboring the secret hope that things will work out and that their troubles, like everything else, will pass.

In parent-child relationships in this combination, Aquarius-Pisces may be unduly influenced by their Sagittarius III parent, particularly one of the opposite sex. Such attachments will have to be worked through in adolescence and early adulthood. Ups and downs between sibling pairs, where favorable periods alternate with horrible ones, can drive the family to distraction.

In business, the partners will usually create a product or service for which there is a demand but not a lot of competition, discovering a so-called "hole in the market." This pair is good not only at initiating ventures but at maintaining them, particularly in the area of reinvesting their profits.

ADVICE: Tend to what needs fixing—don't leave it all up to fate. Make decisions and act on them decisively.

THE WEEK OF SPIRIT
PISCES I

Pragmatic Idealism

Good feelings and mutual admiration are at the center of this relationship, yet this should not imply that Sagittarius III's and Pisces I's have a relaxed time of it. This inspirational matchup can generate tremendous energy, which, if properly directed, can improve the lives of all those around it. This couple is often on the cutting edge of whatever is going on, and in many ways points the way toward the future. Let's call them pragmatic idealists: highly imaginative, they are interested in the kind of change that makes a difference in people's lives, and are not willing merely to wait for it to happen, either.

Love affairs here can be passionate and absorbing. Pisces I's have a lot to teach their partners, not only about sensuality but about spirituality, too, and Sagittarius III's can be apt pupils in this respect. In marriage, these two can make loyal and devoted spouses, although Pisces I nervousness can be a bit of a problem. Sagittarius III energy may not always have a calming effect, and Pisces I's often feel pushed beyond their limit.

As friends and family members, Sagittarius III's and Pisces I's find fulfillment in giving their energy to a cause, whether social, political or artistic. Their desire to serve is strong, so that they can make a valuable contribution to any group of which they are a part. Their optimism is not always rewarded, however, and they must be careful not to be taken advantage of by other people who are more selfish than they are. The best scenario for co-workers is to be able to make a living by working to further their ideals—not an easy situation to find. Compromises may have to be made, perhaps by working for a school, governmental department or community organization that may not be exactly in tune with their ideas but that provides the opportunity to get some constructive work done.

ADVICE: Respect the ideals of others, and learn to compromise. Temper your optimism. Relaxation is important. Only give so much away.

PISCES II

Moral Fervor

The moral fervor of this matchup is pronounced, and often becomes the basis for a deep interpersonal relationship. Sagittarius III's and Pisces II's may well find themselves on the same side of a cause, fighting for what they believe is right. They might meet at school, or at a demonstration or rally, and after several interesting discussions find that they want to get to know each other better. If brought together through a commonly held ideology or belief, or through a course of study, this philosophy or activity often continues at least through the early months and years of their relationship, and will remain a cohesive force. But it may in the end be replaced by the relationship itself, which then becomes the chief inspiration for this dedicated couple.

Love affairs and marriages of this type often demand most of their partners' energies. Although Pisces II's may find this situation satisfactory, Sagittarius III's are resistant to giving up their other interests, and may feel resentful at being forced to do so. Yet they have a great deal to learn from Pisces II's about depth of human feeling and meaningful action—assuming they are prepared to learn. And if Pisces II's are not really convinced of their partners' commitment, they may pull back. As family members, Sagittarius III's are generally much more demanding of attention than Pisces II's, who may feel neglected or cut out. Having common responsibilities will often help these two get on a more equal footing. Working relationships between them are possible if both of them believe in what they are doing, and here Sagittarius III's are more willing to blunt their ego drives in service of a common cause. Should Sagittarius III and Pisces II friends decide to put their relationship first, they could form a strong and lasting bond. If, however, their separate interests, or a lack of trust, keep them apart, they may be better off dropping the relationship altogether. Like other relationships between these two, such friendships seem to be of an all-or-nothing type.

ADVICE: Be less rigid in your beliefs—cultivate flexibility and openness, and learn to accept other people as they are. Pursue practical, everyday activities.

Brain-Buster

If either of these partners has even a bit of intellectual curiosity, this relationship is likely to bring it out, and if both partners are intelligent or idea-oriented to begin with, their matchup can be a real brain-buster. From cards, chess and word games to computers and technical or scientific research, these two are interested in sharpening their wits on each other. Although Sagittarius is a fire sign and Pisces water, the Sagittarius III–Pisces III relationship is ruled by air, here indicating the power of reason.

An obvious drawback of love affairs here is that they may neglect the physical and emotional side in favor of mind games and clever sorts of manipulation. Since Sagittarius III and Pisces III form a square aspect in the zodiac (where they lie 90° apart), astrology suggests stress and strife here—a prediction that is born out by a frequent tendency to argue. Such confrontations may actually be not about feelings at all but, rather, a kind of one-upmanship in which each partner strives to assert his or her mental superiority. Marriages between these two can go on for years, with the partners arguing all the way—they may even be held together by such battles.

Friendships and work relationships in this combination often overlap. Most likely of a technical nature, the work they produce may be important and engrossing, but also incomprehensible to all save a few who understand the complex jargon that is the relationship's specialty. The partners will have to come down from their ivory tower occasionally and speak ordinary language—if they don't, they face the possibility of arousing resentment or charges of elitism. It may be necessary for them to be their own public-relations team, getting to know others in a simple and straightforward way before proceeding further. In the family, cousins and siblings in this combination may have great fun in their youth playing board and video games and working out all sorts of puzzles.

ADVICE: Take the time to explain yourself, using ordinary language. Don't neglect the human aspects of life. Not everything has to be so complex—simplify.

All-Consuming

This relationship may be too heavy even for these profound individuals to bear. To give themselves a rest from their own seriousness, Sagittarius-Capricorns usually seek out those who have lighter and more upbeat personalities; when they are with other people, they like to have fun. Unfortunately, two quiet Sagittarius-Capricorns getting together may simply reinforce each other's moods. If they are already in the depths of a depression, they may become immobilized by hopelessness.

Love affairs between Sagittarius-Capricorns could be intense physically, but somehow such matchups seldom arise, probably because these two are wary of this sort of deep involvement, intuiting that it might be all-consuming and ultimately painful. Children with Sagittarius-Capricorn pairs as parents may have a very difficult time communicating with them, and might long for relief from an oppressive domestic atmosphere. Siblings or cousins, on the other hand, sometimes form a strong bond, and support each other emotionally through all kinds of difficulties and crises. Here the partners share a deep kind of understanding that does not require a lot of conversation to sustain or develop it further. Two Sagittarius-Capricorns can make excellent friends. Psychic abilities are often brought out in such relationships, with each partner having some ability to read the other's mind. Although these friends rarely have an overt or professional interest in predicting the future, they can be remarkably good at it, and may even be consulted informally by family and friends. The relationship can be a refuge for both of them against a world that too often cannot accept them. However, their tendencies toward self-pity and the depression that accompanies it must be mercilessly rooted out, through sheer willpower, and prevented from taking over. If these two are thrown together in a professional capacity, two Sagittarius-Capricorns can make a powerful team, particularly in implementing the company philosophy. Any resentment and dissatisfaction they feel they often suppress, however, which can facilitate getting the job done but does not lead to a healthy psychological framework.

ADVICE: Maintain some distance. Don't give in to oppressive moods—lighten up. Beware of repressing your true feelings. Build solid self-esteem.

Strengthening Emotional Ties

At least these two know where each of them stands. Such hardheaded and tough-minded individuals are not always in agreement, but they do respect each other's practical side, and their joint ability to rally their forces in support of their positions. Neither of them usually has much success in trying to control the other, and in fact they rarely try to do so, perhaps knowing in advance that it would be a waste of time. Yet a strange kind of empathy operating between these partners enables them to sense, with great sensitivity and accuracy, the precise nature of each other's emotional state at any moment.

Love affairs between these two are uncommon, but although the romantic spark rarely ignites here, affection is possible to a limited extent. Highly pragmatic and ambitious marriages can manifest, but love is seldom the prime consideration for such connections. Nonetheless, these mates know one another's needs and wishes quite well, and can be highly attuned to each other's feelings.

Parent-child relationships in this combination can be highly, even brutally, combative. Sagittarius-Capricorn children are often extremely rebellious against dictatorial Capricorn I parents, and the worst is to be expected in their confrontations. Sagittarius-Capricorn parents are likely to be more giving and understanding toward their Capricorn I offspring, but also to be both aloof and highly demanding of them as they grow older.

Although boss-employee relationships in this combination seldom work well, co-workers and colleagues are more successful in their interactions. In the long run, however, personal problems may impair the efficiency of such a duo and finally lead them to call it quits. As friends, these two do best when united in a common activity, whether a hobby or semiprofessional interest, often of a highly physical nature, such as sports, fitness, dance or martial arts.

THE WEEK OF DETERMINATION
CAPRICORN II

Battling for Ascendancy

It may be very difficult for these two to reach a point of compromise. Each arouses the other's ambitious side, so that their relationship is taken up with a lust for power, money or control. Such desires are often purely selfish, but they can be highly effective in helping this pair to achieve goals that are beneficial to them both, and to the groups to which they may belong, particularly familial ones. This relationship is very shrewd, able to judge when opportunities are ripe and when it is wiser to wait. Points of contention between Sagittarius-Capricorns and Capricorn II's may be numerous, but they are usually related to what can be a frightening struggle for power. The relationship is often lopsided to begin with, as a powerful Sagittarius-Capricorn or Capricorn II takes the lead and scoops up his or her less highly advantaged partner from a lower social or economic stratum. Capricorn II's, however, derive great strength from the relationship, and are soon able to challenge their partner for the dominant position. The outcome is difficult to predict, but one thing is sure: in a struggle like this one, no one gives up easily.

Love affairs, alas, may also be largely about power. Favors in intimacy can be awarded or withheld at will, and quite ruthless emotional manipulation may be practiced in order to exercise control. Marriages between Sagittarius-Capricorns and Capricorn II's tend to be highly ambitious and to try to climb as high as possible in their social sphere, accumulating money and power on the way. Such relationships can be enduring, cohesive and purposeful, although lacking in the development of human or spiritual qualities.

Friends in this combination are too often prone to using each other for their own ends. Selfish in the extreme, neither of these individuals is likely to stick around when sacrifice is demanded. Professional matchups between these two may be highly successful, particularly in the financial sphere, marred only occasionally by Sagittarius-Capricorn flakiness and Capricorn II overreaching.

ADVICE: Develop your human side. Practice kindness and charity. Don't be eaten up by your lust for power. You have a need for spiritual development.

Marketing Unusual Aspects

This combination figures out a way to make its unconventional stance pay off. Whether active in groups favoring alternative cultures and lifestyles or attracting attention from the establishment, these partners may be outrageous but they are certainly not crazy. Clever enough to market their more unusual aspects, they can be highly successful financially—or else they can make just enough to get by. The point here is that both will try not to compromise their standards appreciably. Not only does the relationship convey an uncommon view of things, but its partners are quite able to share their more personal feelings as well. That they can do this speaks well for their depth of involvement, and for their sincerity.

Love affairs between these two can feature sharing at a deep emotional level, allowing a degree of self-expression that benefits both partners. Neither trusts others easily, and both may experience great relief at finally being able to reveal themselves to another person without fear of censure or ridicule. In marriage, partners are often able to find a balance between more conventional and far-out elements of style, color and design in their domestic setting.

Sagittarius-Capricorn-Capricorn III siblings of the same sex will often try to outdo each other in being more cool or modern in clothing styles, speech and action, but such attitudes usually fade after adolescence, in some cases to be replaced by more substantial lifestyle commitments. Friendships and career relationships are often interrelated, and in these areas this pair gives full expression to their flamboyance. Problems can arise if Capricorn III's prove dominating or insensitive, or if Sagittarius-Capricorns feel unappreciated, but for the most part things go well. Differences of opinion can arise about how commercial, or how successful, to become, for Sagittarius-Capricorns may feel that the relationship is forcing them to sacrifice too much of their artistic integrity for financial gain.

ADVICE: Keep your flame pure, but remember that commercialism isn't necessarily a contradiction. Find a balance. Don't get caught up in trivialities.

Seeing It Through

This highly determined matchup has the imagination to conceive incredible ideas and the tenacity to see them through. These two are not content with idle speculation; their relationship will have meaning for them only if it can manifest substantial achievement, in the family, social or, perhaps, commercial sphere—although money is rarely the driving force here. As individuals, these two can be very self-centered, but as a pair they are service oriented. They may eventually resent the relationship for taking them away from their own personal pursuits; if they are successful, however, they will realize satisfaction and tremendous fulfillment from knowing that they have been able to help other people.

In love affairs these two may be an unstable combination. Unless they find activities to ground them, their volatile emotions may toss them from pillar to post. Marriages are more effective in providing stability, particularly when the partners are involved in organizing new and exciting activities to be enjoyed with their children—often vacation trips and special celebrations. In the family, relatives in this combination may be a potent force for reorganization. Seeing the needs of family members, coming up with imaginative solutions and making them work is their specialty. Of course, not all their relatives will appreciate either their interest or the methods they use—they must be prepared to encounter resistance. Parent-child combinations, particularly of the opposite sex, are very close, but have difficulty remaining objective about the issues at hand, particularly when the darker emotions of Sagittarius-Capricorns invite Capricorn-Aquarius violence.

As co-workers and friends, these two do well in social activities, but more in those involving organizational, service and production skills rather than human services. The relationship rarely has the patience to remain dispassionate when dealing with other people, and does best when challenged by the implementation of new ideas. Friends of this type can enjoy wonderful times together, but tremendous fights can break out periodically. These quickly blow over, however, preventing resentments and frustrations from building up.

ADVICE: Try to remain objective—too often your emotions cloud the issue. Be sensitive to the wishes of others, and be aware that your ideas are unwanted.

Speaks for Itself

These two would seem to have little in common. Slower, more profound and volcanic Sagittarius-Capricorn energies contrast markedly with the quick, light and easy approach of Aquarius I's. Yet there is a mutual fascination at work here, one that proves highly persuasive in overcoming the most marked socioeconomic, racial or temperamental differences. Apart, these two may not be known for their psychological stability; their union, however, can be surprisingly secure. Partners are often tremendously appreciative and proud of their counterpart's talents, and can rely on each other in many different areas of life, playing various roles.

Love affairs bring out either highly sensual or more platonic feelings; in either case, affection figures prominently here. Sagittarius-Capricorn and Aquarius I lovers are often also good friends, and, as such, truly have each other's best interests at heart. These feelings would seem to augur well for marriages, but just the thought of tying the knot may arouse insecurities in more free-thinking partners who are threatened by the finality of such a step. Sagittarius-Capricorn-Aquarius I sibling relationships, particularly of the opposite sex, are often extremely close, supportive and understanding. The good feelings engendered by such a relationship can give quiet support to the entire family, but can as easily arouse antagonism from relatives who feel ignored or slighted. In friendships, this combination is mutually rewarding. True, Sagittarius-Capricorns may not always be able to count on their more ephemeral Aquarius I partners, who, however, usually do try to make up for their occasional unreliability with sparkling wit. Sagittarius-Capricorn profundity and Aquarius I brilliance can gel in commercial endeavors in which these two are partners, particularly when they need to persuade others of the value of their service or product. They will rarely need to resort to any kind of underhanded manipulation, since the attitude in this relationship is an open one, proclaiming that what this duo produces speaks for itself. Clients and public are drawn to the clean emotional energy of this relationship.

ADVICE: Go easy with those more conservative than you. Live up to your end of the bargain. Never be superior or condescending.

A Spruced-Up Image

The focus of this relationship is often a process of socialization, in which the dominant side of Sagittarius-Capricorns is tempered by the easy approach of Aquarius II's. Because Aquarius II's are often immediately liked by others, they have a great deal to teach harder-to-know Sagittarius-Capricorns about how to spruce up their image. Furthermore, although Sagittarius-Capricorns usually assume the superior role in this relationship, they are heavily dependent on the very likable and entertaining personas of Aquarius II's to help them take a break from their problems and worries. One might ask what the attraction is for Aquarius II's, but these types often fall in love with deep, serious individuals who are a projection of their own dark side—and Sagittarius-Capricorns fit the bill perfectly.

Love affairs between these two usually begin with the acute need of Sagittarius-Capricorns to assume the power role, but often end up with them eating out of the hand of charming Aquarius II's. In marriage, sex may not be of the greatest importance. More often, the focus here is the working out of a social role for the relationship within a small circle of friends, colleagues and family.

Family relationships between these two can be quite complex, particularly parent-child relationships where a serious Sagittarius-Capricorn parent tries to channel, in a constructive way, the energies of a talented but often wayward Aquarius II child. Friendships in this combination will overcome many obstacles that stand in their way, and may be driven to occupy a dominant position in their immediate environment. Such friends should be careful not to arouse serious enmities and antagonisms that can boomerang on them when they least expect it.

In career matters, these two are often highly dependent on each other. They can make good business partners, with Sagittarius-Capricorns planning, developing and reorganizing while Aquarius II's contact clients and work on public relations and sales.

ADVICE: Strive for self-awareness—find out more about what is motivating you. Beware of arousing animosities. Understand how others see you.

A Supernatural Connection

Although this relationship has a very close connection as its hallmark, it also shows wide swings of mood and affect. Often polarized, its partners inevitably clash in points of view, since neither is willing to give ground or compromise. Yet the positive aspects of the relationship are also prominent, particularly since Sagittarius-Capricorns and Aquarius III's sometimes share an amazing psychic connection, and are especially tuned in to the unexpected and the supernatural. The backgrounds of nonfamily partners in this combination are often extremely diverse, yet the relationship is able to bridge seemingly impossible gaps of time and space.

Love affairs here may feature acute ethnic, religious or cultural differences. Although the couple may give the impression of not being influenced by such considerations, they may in fact be making a point of them by always emphasizing how unimportant they are. The children of Sagittarius-Capricorn-Aquarius III spouses will ultimately benefit from the cultural diversity afforded them by their parents. Friendships between these two will be up and down in nature, one moment wildly enthusiastic and positive, another pessimistic and hurt or depressed. When the partners consciously work on balancing such moods and not taking them too seriously, real progress can be made.

Family members, particularly siblings and parent-child combinations, often manifest signs of telepathy and clairvoyance, which can be accepted as normal on most occasions but can prove frightening on others. Highly unusual experiences of this kind do not always help the stability of such relationships, but can make such connections special, even unique, within the larger family structure.

Career matchups may well be of an artistic nature or involve some form of communications, either in publishing or other media. The creative imagination of this duo is usually extremely high, but this does not guarantee financial success, since the relationship may not be geared toward the practical.

ADVICE: Don't get attached to your moods. Avoid extremes of emotion when possible. Put your psychic abilities to work for you.

Things That Go Bump in the Night

This pair seems to attract unusual, occasionally frightening experiences to itself. It is almost as though the energy of these two is synergistically combined into a kind of lightning rod for the bizarre. The power of the imagination is also activated here, sometimes causing an abnormal level of fear or paranoia. Both of these individuals have often suffered some childhood trauma, which makes them attracted to each other. Luckily, the relationship shows deep compassion when it comes to being scared of things that go bump in the night. Dealing with the fantasies of childhood and frightening experiences, real or imagined, can become the focus here. The act of sharing such personal material from the past can create mutual dependencies, which, although reassuring, are not always of the healthiest sort.

On first meeting, Sagittarius-Capricorns and Aquarius-Pisces are not about to reveal themselves, but they do often sense in each other a kindred spirit, a person who has suffered and turned inward. As love affairs and friendships develop, these two may slowly begin to trust each other and to share their amazingly similar experiences. Particularly when violence has figured in the lives of one or both partners, the assurance that they have nothing to fear from each other can be of the greatest comfort. Children of these marriages may never know how much their parents' ability to love them openly, and to afford them protection, means to this couple. The greatest difficulty here can be overprotectiveness, with its accompanying parental fears, which may be absorbed by their children.

Siblings in this combination often inhabit a world of mystery and imagination, in which horror and fantasy films and books may play a central role. These siblings should not be allowed to spend too much time alone, but should be gently encouraged to develop their social side. In the professional sphere, co-worker pairs may succeed in a very low-key manner in getting the job done efficiently, without fuss or bother. Imaginative elements are seldom prominent here, and indeed are ordinarily best left out of business matters.

ADVICE: Let go of the past. Beware of being overprotective and fearful. Develop a detached approach, but don't be afraid to love.

A Law Unto Themselves

The focus of this relationship, and usually its biggest problem, is finding a point of reference or standard of behavior that both partners can recognize. Often split in their belief systems, this pair may have great difficulty reaching agreement on most major issues. In the personal realm, probably the greatest difference between them is that Pisces I's are in need of attention and approval while Sagittarius-Capricorns do not expect approval and would often prefer to do without it. This makes Sagittarius-Capricorns much the stronger partner in many ways, and they are usually able to win out in personal struggles between these two. This comparison, however, also indicates that Pisces I's operate by socially accepted norms of behavior more easily than do Sagittarius-Capricorns, who tend, through their isolation, to become a law unto themselves. Thus the struggle inherent in this relationship centers on whether it should orient itself toward others (easier for Pisces I's) or more or less isolate itself and seek its own values (easier for Sagittarius-Capricorns).

In love affairs, Sagittarius-Capricorns are not aware of hurting the feelings of their Pisces I partners, or of alienating them with their uncompromising stance. On the other hand they will find it difficult to handle the flightiness of Pisces I's, who have an intense need for variety. These love affairs may be quite passionate, but the partners' unwillingness to make fundamental changes in their personalities does not augur well for marriage.

Friendships in this combination may fail to find a middle ground of agreement, and as a consequence could spend most of their time flitting from one new interest to another. It will be difficult for others to take this relationship seriously if the partners allow it to be associated with impractical, even silly ideas. At work, these two usually lack the drive to compete in the marketplace, and are better off engaging in freelance, creative or educational pursuits. Parent-child relationships of the opposite sex can be extremely close in the early years, but will have to work hard to develop ties in other areas later on.

Gossip and Chatting

This combination likes nothing better than being left alone to engage in its favorite form of entertainment—conversation, from the philosophical to plain old gossip. Both partners have a strongly reclusive side that their relationship enhances, and that may develop into a kind of obsession. Not interested in being seen together in public, these two often prefer to meet in either one's cozy kitchen and enjoy the conviviality of chatting while sitting at a table and drinking coffee or perhaps a glass of wine. These are often successful matchups, for the partners do not demand a lot from each other or use their relationship as a stop-gap in times of need, but simply enjoy their regular, if not overly frequent, contact with each other.

Friendships are particularly noteworthy here. The couple's quick perceptions and telling observations may concern their own relationship or those of other people, but it is people that they are mainly interested in studying, in an intelligent and insightful manner. Such sessions are usually private in nature, and if a third person enters the scene, the mood may evaporate, and business may be postponed to a later date. This is not a comfortable pairing for love affairs, since there is a curious lack of passion here, but it can be well suited for companionships that ultimately lead to marriage.

Relatives in this combination make it their business to know exactly what is going on with the rest of the family. These two run the risk of being branded as busybodies, in fact, sticking their noses into everybody's business far too often. In the professional sphere, it will be quite possible for the partners to function side by side as co-workers for years on end. The job, however, is usually secondary to the conversation, so that this is not a particularly dynamic combination.

ADVICE: Don't be so newsy. Learn to be more open and truly sharing. Your interest is not always appreciated. Beware of excessive isolation.

Visualization

The Sagittarius-Capricorn-Pisces III combination is often able to bring things into being just by thinking about them. They have a balanced strength, which is unlikely to lead to big surprises or disasters. The matchup can be extremely effective in guiding the destiny of a particular group, whether social, familial or professional, simply by forming a clear picture of what is needed and miraculously realizing it. Some would say that little magic is involved here, just a kind of receptivity to pragmatic solutions. Extremely dependable, such a matchup could induce even skeptics to reconsider their denial of paranormal phenomena.

Love affairs and marriages between these two can be highly successful. The emphasis is more on the metaphysical than the physical, but warm and loving feelings also abound. Arguments are rare, but the relationship can be a bit too relaxed at times, lacking real snap and fire. In times of distress or depression, the partners must be careful of the power of their self-fulfilling prophecies, since their negative pronouncements are all too likely to come true.

Friends in this combination can be called on in times of need—their relationship is an unusually supportive one. During better times, they are likely to see each other only occasionally, when they meet to check up on each other's progress and have a pleasurable night out. In the family, relatives in this combination who live together may dominate their space, dictating what others can and cannot do there. These duos are powerfully united, and will be difficult to oppose. In professional matters, it is probably best if Sagittarius-Capricorns and Pisces III's consult with and advise each other rather than work together on a daily basis. And when they are business partners, although their schemes may well come to fruition in one form or another, they rarely carry much financial reward.

ADVICE: Don't try to control too much territory—leave space for others to make decisions. Deepen emotional bonds and seek greater self-understanding.

Alternatives to Struggle

Despite their assertions to the contrary, Capricorn I's usually understand each other well—which is to imply not so much empathy between them as a very fundamental comprehension. It is quite possible, then, for them to work out a satisfactory agreement as to which of them will guide the destiny of their relationship, or that of any small group to which it belongs. There is a tendency here to conflict and open power struggles, but there are several ways these can be avoided, of which perhaps the best are sharing power as copartners and compartmentalizing the relationship so that each has his or her own unquestioned areas of dominance. Either of these alternatives can work well, depending on the circumstances and individual preferences. Should two Capricorn I's be unwilling or unable to reach agreement over who will rule, constant strife, argument and, ultimately, separation can be expected.

Capricorn I's are attracted to each other's earthy side, but their love affairs tend to be sensual rather than sexual. Lacking a certain amount of excitement and spark may enhance the longevity, but not the interest, of such matchups. Marriages here can be successful as long as the power issue can be settled satisfactorily. Practical in the extreme, such relationships are rarely divided by differing points of view over money, responsibilities and family structure. As friends, Capricorn I pairs are loyal and dependable. Should they lack shared interests, however, they are unlikely to develop the strong emotional bonds that would hold the relationship together. Capricorn I parent-child relationships can be stormy and punishing, particularly if either partner deviates from the behavior expected from them. As siblings, Capricorn I's of the same sex must each have space of their own, since their abilities to share with each other may be quite limited. But Capricorn I co-worker pairs can work together successfully for years on end, discharging their responsibilities with little fuss. Problems arise only if both have ambitions to rise higher within the company or organization, since they are likely to be quite selfish and ruthless toward each other when in competition.

ADVICE: Work out agreements carefully. Try to be more flexible and less severe. Work toward greater emotional honesty. Settle power conflicts.

Masterfully Diplomatic

This relationship tends to look after its own best interests, and will encourage its partners to get along. For all of their power drives, Capricorn I's and II's can be united in dealing with important matters, since they are quick to figure out what might be of mutual advantage to them. Onlookers may be surprised by the forming of a bond between two people whose points of view and general characters seem to be irreconcilable, and their relationship may indeed be a highly unconventional, even bizarre matchup from certain standpoints. Yet these incongruities are not the primary issues on the minds of partners themselves, since they are usually far more interested in dealing with whatever matter is at hand. This practical relationship has little danger of falling into idle speculation.

Marriages are usually stronger here than love affairs, since the Capricorn I–Capricorn II relationship shows a marked tendency toward domesticity. Home may be the uppermost consideration for this couple—making it safe, secure, comfortable and functional as a place both to relax and to work. Children of such a marriage will probably be well looked after, although expected to toe the line. Disapproval and punishment must be kept within bounds, for the relationship can be excessive in both respects.

Friendships and sibling relationships in this combination are often supportive but also highly competitive, particularly in sports, school and love. This pair may compete may for the attention or affection of adults or, more likely, for peers. Should such strife get out of hand, alienation and an inability to forgive can be expected. At work, on the other hand, Capricorn I's and II's are usually able to mute their power struggles when they are members of the same organization, since they usually give the best interests of the group their top priority. Even when working for rival organizations, they can be masterfully diplomatic, seeking to find mutually beneficial solutions and to avoid open conflict.

ADVICE: Continue to find mutually beneficial solutions, but don't neglect individual needs. Be more forgiving—open your heart a bit wider.

Outright Infallible

Both Capricorn I's and III's can be pretty determined individuals, and their relationship may synergistically harden this quality into a steely firmness. A lack of flexibility and sensitivity, in fact, is among the relationship's weakest points. As partners these two make up their minds immediately on most of the major issues, which, on the positive side, saves them from doubt and hesitation but may also imply that they sometimes rush to judgment. Results both good and bad may accrue from such uncompromising characteristics. The partners can gain advantage, for example, by getting in promptly on the ground floor of a new project, but they may also end up being saddled with involvements that they later regret. Since this matchup can rarely admit that it is wrong, its partners may be forced to suffer in silence, experiencing great frustration when things don't work out as planned.

Characteristically, love affairs and marriages in this combination exhibit periodic dissension and can be highly argumentative in private, but rarely show anything but a strong front publicly or in the partners' attitudes toward other people. These two understand each other very well and are apt to have the same goals. There is little room in their relationship for feelings, however, which can create major problems for a child of theirs who, having failed to find sympathy from one parent, seeks it from the other, only to run into a stone wall of unanimity. In extreme cases, also, the child may be asked to take sides with one parent against the other, with harmful results. Sibling relationships in this combination, particularly those of the opposite sex, tend to fight like cats and dogs, making life trying for other family members. Friendships of this type are generally loyal and enduring, but can suffer from an air of smug assurance or of outright infallibility that others can find difficult to deal with. Capricorn I's and III's are better off not engaging in professional or entrepreneurial pursuits together, since they have difficulty keeping their emotions out of business matters, and tend to trigger each other at the most inopportune moments.

ADVICE: Learn to admit your mistakes. Drop your omniscient air when dealing with other people. Develop flexibility, and don't be threatened by change.

Wily Seduction

This can be a dramatic and exciting relationship. Confrontational in nature, it fosters an atmosphere in which both Capricorn I's and Capricorn-Aquarians will often attempt to use their wily powers of seduction to get from each other exactly what they're after. In highly manipulative interactions such as these, cleverness, perceptiveness and experience are all part of the relationship's arsenal. In general, Capricorn I's rely on quiet insistence, while Capricorn-Aquarians tend to be more emotionally overwhelming. As a team these two can be extremely persuasive and charming, but since their knowledge is deep, and they usually prepare their arguments thoroughly in advance, they do not need to rely on the force of their personalities alone.

Love affairs of this type are beguiling, enchanting—and filled with illusion. Beneath the romantic facade, some pretty heavy emotional manipulation may be going on, often out of fear that affections will be discontinued or misplaced. Marriage is not recommended, but if it is being seriously considered, both partners should work hard on building honesty and trust, rather than reverting to immature and childish feelings.

Parent-child relationships in this combination are also sometimes involved in the kind of game-playing that can be amusing to an extent but may eventually undermine belief and trust, and that may also cause other family members not to take the pair so seriously as a unit. Peak experiences are often the goal in Capricorn I–Capricorn-Aquarius friendships, whether through physically challenging endeavors or, perhaps, through drug-induced states. Moderating such drives and keeping in touch with reality are the main challenges here.

In the professional sphere, these partners can be very convincing, yet also a tad misleading. Should others get the idea that they are being conned or manipulated, word may get around that this couple cannot be trusted, and they may find that in seeking temporary gain they have cut their own throats.

ADVICE: Beware of getting what you want—you may be fooling yourself. Examine what's spurring you on. Consider the ethical implications of your actions.

THE WEEK OF GENIUS

Beyond Desire

The focus of the Capricorn I–Aquarius I relationship, and its principal goal, is often the kind of control that only unrelenting technical training can achieve. No matter in what area such effort is spent, this relationship sees control—whether of its partners' bodies, an appetite, an environment, an activity or the mind itself—as paramount. Such an uncompromising attitude implies some form of deprivation, and the ability to deny oneself what is most natural to a human being—if chastity were the goal for this couple, for example, they would be able to overcome their sexual urges; if they wanted to impose a special diet, their appetite for certain foods could be denied. On the other hand, the possession of such control can be a form of gratification in and of itself.

If love affairs are geared toward technical proficiency or mastery, their object may be exquisite sorts of sensual pleasure. The danger is that this sort of emphasis may lead the relationship in a very different direction, denying the need for the kindness, affection and sympathy that many lovers crave. Marriages in this combination may show a mania for domestic perfection, dictating that the partners spend most of their time renovating a home and making it beautiful. Carried to an extreme, such desires could lead this couple to fix up and sell several houses in succession, expending significant amounts of energy in bringing each one from a wretched to a glorious state.

Capricorn I–Aquarius I friends and siblings may be taken up with diet, technical projects, exercise and sport, or with artistic endeavors that demand a high degree of control, skill and an eye toward perfection. Unfortunately, human feelings often get lost in the shuffle. Work relationships between these two benefit from Capricorn I pragmatism and Aquarius I quickness and inventiveness of mind. But technical perfection can sometimes be counterproductive in business, for the costs of achieving it may be much higher than it's worth.

ADVICE: Perhaps you are being a bit puritanical. Beware of enslaving yourself to your ideas. Let your hair down occasionally—relax and have fun.

The Middle Ground

This relationship may be a seesaw affair, oscillating between conforming to the partners' attitudes and trying to find a balance or middle ground between them. Capricorn I's, who are used to struggle, may somewhat resent Aquarius II's, who prefer to be spared the pain of work and are known to ridicule those who view it as their reason for living. These two are apt to expend considerable amounts of energy trying to convince each other of their individual points of view. As their relationship develops, its partners may discover that they can live a life in which they alternate between work and relaxation in quite a pleasant way, and avoid the excesses of either state.

Love affairs here should be viewed not as either frenzied or hyperrelaxed work projects in themselves but as moderate, and highly enjoyable, activities in their own right. Mature Capricorn I and Aquarius II lovers, furthermore, will learn from each other—Capricorn I's to be a bit less serious, Aquarius II's to be a bit more so. Marriages between these two can witness a splendid melding of work and love, supplying a steady flow of energy to both these aspects of the spouses' lives. Capricorn I's have a judgmental streak, however, and Aquarius II's a taste for silliness, and collisions of irritation are likely to occur between these two moods.

Parents and children in this combination, particularly with Capricorn I's in the parental role, will have to learn to take each other seriously without forgetting about having good times together. The best type of friendship between these two is also able to divide its time intelligently between serious and more lighthearted activities. As co-workers, the more successful Capricorn I–Aquarius II combinations will learn not only to relax but to study after work hours are over, even while approaching their jobs in a sensible, nonfanatical way and programming in regular breaks.

ADVICE: Forget your differences. Achieving a middle ground is possible—there is much you can learn from each other. Avoid extremes and excesses.

Neither Dull nor Unstable

This relationship derives its greatest satisfaction from putting wonderfully imaginative ideas into practice and recommending them to others, usually after trying them out in private. The trick here is a judicious blend of the theoretical and the pragmatic, for the partners in this relationship usually enjoy both qualities equally. Capricorn I's tend to be more responsible and Aquarius III's more explosive, but this doesn't seem to keep them apart. A really successful relationship here is neither dull nor unstable, since each partner's strong points mitigate the other's weak ones. Less successful or failed relationships between these two find Capricorn I's highly critical of what they perceive as Aquarius III irresponsibility and flakiness, and Aquarius III's growing bored and depressed by Capricorn I heaviness.

Whether or not these two feel a strong physical attraction for each other, they will usually appreciate each other's wisdom, making them as likely to be confidants as lovers. Forced to choose between love and friendship, many couples wisely choose the latter. Marriages between Capricorn I's and Aquarius III's can work out as long as sex does not become an issue. If nonjudgmental and accepting attitudes do not prevail, and physical fulfillment is not viewed as the sole responsibility of either partner, these couples can share warmth and affection, and can prove emotionally supportive.

In the family, relatives in this combination are likely to eye each other with a certain suspicion. The more conservative viewpoints of Capricorn I's often clash with the more radical or outspoken attitudes of Aquarius III's. Friendships in this combination, on the other hand, tend to thrive on their internal differences, providing an endlessly amusing study in contrasts for both the partners and those around them. Taking personal issues less seriously can be a big plus here. As co-workers, these pairs will often experience stress when Capricorn I's resent feeling that they have been left with the bulk of the work, or when Aquarius III's feel pushed beyond their limit.

ADVICE: Try to be more understanding and helpful; it's too easy to find fault. Treat others as you wish to be treated yourself. Turn disadvantage to advantage.

Experiential Schooling

This relationship will be educational for both Capricorn I's and Aquarius-Pisces, and can be viewed as a kind of experiential school where both partners, locked in an ever-changing embrace, learn their lessons and do their homework. Although these two can be very close emotionally, they may have to battle it out to see who comes out on top. This can be a very liberating process for Aquarius-Pisces, who need to learn how to stand up and defend themselves in order to continue on their path of self-development. Such struggles may occur in the boardroom or in the bedroom, but if Capricorn I's are overconfident, they may be in for a big surprise, since Aquarius-Pisces will figure out how to get to them emotionally. The result could be, however, that Capricorn I's will learn something about their own feelings through such encounters.

In love affairs, exploration, experimentation and realization usually play an ultimately rewarding though sometimes painful, even destructive role. This combination often manifests passion in extreme forms. It is not merely the pleasures of sex per se that these two are concerned with, however; both of them view it within a broader context, and use their sexual relationship as a means of liberating the self. This process is less likely to surface in marital relationships; it often takes the instability of a love affair to allow such emotions to emerge in their purest form.

Sibling pairs in this combination can lessen conflict by acknowledging the unquestioned authority of their parents. In friendships, such problems of authority play a far less significant part, but these relationships nevertheless do best when dedicated to a common hobby or social activity. In the professional sphere, if these two can agree on certain underlying principles or on an overall philosophy, they may not need to compete for the superior position.

ADVICE: Don't hold back from experience—life is a school you can learn in. Be more assertive. Kindness and sympathy should not be ruled out.

THE WEEK OF SPIRIT

A Philosophical Quest

Although this relationship shapes up as a confrontation between the practical and the spiritual, the emphasis here is on the power of the mind to seek out and find the answers to such philosophical questions. Inevitably, communicating such findings to other people is also important here. Thus the individual strengths of Capricorn I's and Pisces I's will be called upon, and their unique and profound understanding of the worlds of matter and spirit respectively will stand them in good stead. It is precisely in trying to iron out their marked differences that this pair will stumble upon more universal truths.

Love and marital relationships between Capricorn I's and Pisces I's are seldom particularly noteworthy, yet neither are they particularly negative. Friendships in this combination are more remarkable, particularly when partners can benefit from their own radically different outlooks. It is no surprise for such friends to challenge each other mentally and to engage in heated debates, which should be kept objective and prevented from flaring into emotional battles. As family members, these pairs are often able to bring their mental powers to bear with laserlike intensity on the problem at hand, whether emotional or financial. In parent-child relationships, Capricorn I's are likely to be overdominant if in the parental role, and face the possibility of stifling the creative spark of the Pisces I child.

In the professional sphere, this combination does best in occupations where thought and communication play important roles, for example in publishing, education or the arts. Although Capricorn is an earth sign and Pisces water, the Capricorn I–Pisces I relationship is ruled by the element of air, which underlines the matchup's mental orientation. No matter how lucrative their business relationship may be (and it can be highly successful in new-age endeavors), it will be viewed as ultimately unrewarding if it does not challenge the thought processes of both partners.

ADVICE: Don't play God. Be more humble about your own ideas—others may disagree. Encourage free thought and mental initiative. Beware of followers.

Emotional Balance

The focus of this relationship is finding contentment by seeking out a peaceful orientation and a balanced state. The matchup has a good chance of being harmonious as long as the partners' more extreme feelings are kept under control. In the domestic sphere, these two can be quite content with running an efficient household, one in which everything is kept in its place. In most areas of life, in fact, Pisces II's appreciate Capricorn I orderliness and management skills. Capricorn I's meanwhile prize the sensitivity and consideration of Pisces II's, but can become short-tempered with their occasional blasé vagueness about important matters. Here a Capricorn I outburst will usually send Pisces II's scurrying for cover.

In love affairs and marriages, Pisces II's must step out and assume a role equal to that of their mate in this combination. There is inherently nothing wrong with the Capricorn I being the boss, however, as long as the views of the Pisces II are aired and respected. Pisces II's have a warm and loving side that will do a great deal to help Capricorn I's open up and express affection more easily. But when they get really upset, Capricorn I's may find themselves unable to help, and be forced to stand aside.

Pisces II parents are often nurturing and attentive to their Capricorn I children, as long as they themselves are not suffering from unhappiness or depression. In friendships, the worrisome dynamic of Capricorn I anger and Pisces II hurt is best dealt with through both partners' commitment to maintaining emotional balance as much as possible—alas, not always with notable success. In professional areas, co-worker pairs are capable of close daily contact with relatively few problems, as long as their tasks are well defined. As business partners, though, Capricorn I's may become dissatisfied with Pisces II disinterest or lack of resolve in pushing ahead.

ADVICE: Don't expect too much. Exercise willpower—be resolute. Toughen up a bit emotionally, and don't let your buttons be pushed so easily.

Turning on the Charm

The focus of this relationship, and the barometer of its success, is the degree to which it can achieve relaxation, fun and ultimately contentment. The Capricorn I–Pisces III combination may suffer from conflict, since Pisces III's are often free spirits who must do things in their own inimitable way, and who might feel inhibited by the Capricorn I insistence on doing things their way. The answer is keeping things light, which can be possible if Pisces III's turn on the charm and seduce Capricorn I's into relaxing and letting down their guard.

In love affairs, more enlightened Capricorn I's will realize that their ability to enjoy themselves and have fun is directly related to how fully they accept themselves and how positive their self-image is. Pisces III's have a great deal to teach Capricorn I's in this respect, but themselves usually have the opposite problem—namely, that they are too content with themselves, and often lack the instinct for self-criticism. The danger here is that the partners will turn away from the relationship, thinking that whatever it offers may not be worth the effort it requires. This issue must be addressed before these two try marriage, which, for these partners, can be even more demanding than a love affair.

Friendships here may be more successful in achieving a relaxed and enjoyable state, but may sacrifice depth in order to do so. These two run the risk of being fair-weather friends who are not really there for each other in times of need. Only in sibling relationships, particularly those of the opposite sex, may it be possible for the combination to achieve balance between commitment and enjoyment, partly as a result of biological factors and partly because of enforced proximity to one another. Working relationships do best in low-stress jobs where the partners know what is required of them and there are few surprises.

ADVICE: Make up your mind about what you want. More commitment may bring greater pleasure. Exercise patience in getting to know yourself better.

January 3–9

THE WEEK OF DETERMINATION
CAPRICORN II

An Inexorable March

The combination of a pair of Capricorn II's does not presuppose that they spend a lot of time together. Extremely independent, Capricorn II's are allergic to hangers-on, flatterers and parasitic types, and so are able to have a frank and honest relationship with each other. That relationship, however, may be predicated on each partner being able to go his or her own way, although it will also make strict demands about responsibilities that must be unflinchingly discharged, both financially and domestically. Tough in the extreme, the relationship may be virtually closed to outside influences, which has advantages (not being bothered) as well as disadvantages (getting out of touch).

Love affairs, friendships and marriages between these two are likely to be built less on passion and more on mutual advantage. The biggest problem here is selfishness, for both partners are acutely aware of what they are getting or not getting, and neither will suffer in silence if they feel left out of the picture. Finding quiet times alone to express affection and share intimacies are important to the relationship's spiritual growth but not essential to its longevity. Topics of interest to Capricorn II's often have to do with new-age, psychic, spiritual and religious subjects, and by pursuing these areas the partners may be able to repair the split between their work and their personal lives. Capricorn II parent-and-child pairs are often able to see eye to eye on issues involving rules, power and responsibility.

In career matchups, Capricorn II's must be careful not to work themselves to death. Few checks on output will exist here, and in the process of clawing its way to the top, the combination can run out of gas unless it pursues its goals patiently. Also, powerful animosities can be engendered in those who are rudely pushed out of the way or simply crushed underfoot. Thus these two may have to remind themselves not to sacrifice their humanity to an inexorable march toward success.

ADVICE: Moderate your power drives. Be more considerate of others. Learn the value of compromise. Kindness and sympathy are worth more than gold.

Calling Their Bluff

If these two want something from you, you might just have to give in. Very difficult to oppose, these two have a not so subtle way of convincing others: the implied or overt threat of force, which is usually persuasive enough to guarantee that the relationship will have its way. Several problems are likely to arise here. In the first scenario, other people will give in, but unwillingly and with resentment, which later will boomerang on the pair. In the second, Capricorn II's and III's will arouse the ire of other powerful figures, who will call their bluff and precipitate all-out conflict—something these two, for the most part, would actually rather avoid.

These partners will rarely get physical with each other when they disagree; rather, they will seek to persuade each other by more subtle emotional means. Capricorn III's often have deep-seated feelings of inferiority, which Capricorn II's can manipulate by alternately giving and withholding their approval. On the other hand, Capricorn II's are bound to certain illusions that Capricorn III's are good at either sharing or unmasking, and can control their partner that way. In such ways, love affairs, marriages and career matchups may be seen as manipulative in nature, and primarily interested in securing power and control.

Parent-child relationships of either combination, but particularly of the same sex, may exhibit great struggles, often including strong competition for the attention and affection of the other parent. In friendships between Capricorn II's and III's, energies are best directed into physical activity, but in team sports rather than one-on-one endeavors. Should both friends fall in love with the same person, their relationship will be put to the ultimate test, but most often the result will be that they stay loyal to each other in the long term. A difficult triangle like this one may sometimes split up the friendship, but it is usually the third party who winds up getting hurt the most.

THE CUSP OF MYSTERY & IMAGINATION
CAPRICORN-AQUARIUS CUSP

The Strings of Fate

The synergy of this relationship tends to intensify the fantasy-oriented side of both its partners, particularly in the area of dealing with the more unbelievable aspects of life. Everything to do with imagining the impossible fascinates this couple, and indeed the focus of their relationship tends to be the domination of their waking thought by the supernatural elements that often arise from their unconscious. That personalities like these value their sleep and dream time highly is not surprising, but they may not be aware that this is the storehouse they are tapping for their waking visions. Whether they give in to their domination by the unconscious or choose to fight it is immaterial in the long run, for they will at best be able only to put limits on their desire, never to control it.

The presence of the unconscious is felt in everything this couple does, but in no area more than that of love. Here their fantasy is given full rein, and the romance inherent in these relationships is of the most fantastic, even mythic, sort. Consciously or unconsciously, these partners assume roles that are usually reserved for storybooks and films, and do it with apparent ease. Unfortunately, these relationships are not autonomous; in fact, they are moved too often by the vagaries of fate. Marriages usually begin with such romantic dawnings, but may become quite ordinary under the deadening pressures of everyday life.

Friendships and sibling relationships often revel in the world of fantasy, horror, violence and black comedy. Here unconscious drives can push both partners into antisocial or, in extreme cases, even sociopathic behavior. In the professional sphere, more fortunate pairs of this type will be able to put a small part of their imagination to work for them, but if they are dominated or obsessed by such drives they will turn out to be at best an entertaining nuisance in the workplace, at worst an agent of chaos there.

Consuming Curiosity

The focus of this relationship is often an insatiable curiosity about almost everything that goes on around it. The Capricorn II–Aquarius I couple can generally play out its desire to investigate and to explore in a search for technical, scientific, artistic or historical truth. Engaged in such a search, these two may grow extremely close but will also suffer some instability in the emotional sphere. They are united by their need to uncover the truth, but temperamentally they are otherwise very different—slow, steady and unwavering Capricorn II's contrasts markedly with quick, fitful and easily distracted Aquarius I's.

Emotionally this combination is somewhat unstable—it has a certain fieriness that makes outbursts and spats pretty likely. This is reflected in the love affairs and marriages of Capricorn II's and Aquarius I's, which can be extremely stormy. Temperamental incompatibilities are not helped by the fact that Aquarius I's have a roving eye and find it difficult, if not impossible, to meet the demands of fidelity that Capricorn II's place on them.

Capricorn II's and Aquarius I's who are engaged side by side in an area of professional investigation or research are often also close friends. Capricorn II's have a need to compartmentalize, so that they often seal off this area of friendship and work from their marriages or family lives, and this can arouse jealousy from other people around them that may be directed against them or their Aquarius I partners. Yet the couple's achievements, even in the most jaundiced view, usually justify their spending so much time together. Few subjects are off limits to this intensely inquisitive pair. As family members, Capricorn II's and Aquarius I's often seek out adventure, which sings them a siren song that often makes them turn their backs on family responsibilities and the needs of relatives—a source of considerable resentment.

ADVICE: Be more aware of the feelings of others. Don't neglect your responsibilities; this will lessen resistance and make things easier.

Burning Brightly

Excitement and plenty of it is the keynote of this relationship. There is never a dull moment here—indeed, these two are likely to wear each other out, as well as those around them, if they don't moderate their drives a bit. Prone to overstressing themselves, Aquarius II's must be careful to keep the relationship from pushing them beyond their limits. Capricorn II's are usually tough enough to stay the pace but may come to resent the relationship's tendency to seduce them away from their work. The attraction toward ever more imaginative endeavors, however, is difficult to resist for these two, and they may wind up sacrificing whole areas of their lives to keeping its insatiable flame burning brightly.

Love affairs and friendships in this combination may be seriously dedicated to having as much fun as possible. Laughter plays an important role here, not only as an indicator of good times and close feelings but as an escape from more serious matters, often ones that desperately need attention. These relationships are characterized by a tendency to avoid the unpleasant, whether feelings, duties or deep psychological problems. They are capable of being enjoyable for years on end but may one day come crashing down under the accumulated weight of years of their partners' inattention to their problems.

Marriages and work relationships between these two seek to maximize pleasure while minimizing effort. Here the Aquarius II energy predominates, at times baffling workaholic Capricorn II's, but also seducing them to do what they most need to do: take it easy. Although capable of feeling guilty, Capricorn II's usually get in the swing of things, and learn through their matchup with Aquarius II's to stay loose in the saddle.

Difficulties arise in parent-child relationships that find Capricorn II's in the parental role, since their Aquarius II children may feel pressured and hemmed in by their rules and regulations. But Capricorn II's do offer safety and security, so that their Aquarius II offspring can alternatively become quite dependent on such responsible parents.

ADVICE: Try to be more serious. Laughter and fun are great, but they may be used as avoidance tactics. Solve problems as they arise and don't let them accumulate.

Aggressive Urges

The principal factor in this relationship is its own belligerence, and its focus is how best to cope with it. These partners have a will to combat that certainly makes them dynamic, but they must direct it carefully and prevent it from spinning out of control. Trying to suppress the relationship's aggressiveness seldom really works, for it pushes the partners' energies to burrow deep inside, causing frustration and, eventually, paralyzing depressions. Finding an orderly and constructive way of harnessing energy usually implies submitting to a law or plan, a kind of higher authority that sets the guidelines within which expenditures of energy are most effective.

Love affairs can be intense between these two, but not usually in a wild or chaotic sense. Here the relationship's energies are forceful and direct, but can be well modulated. Aquarius III hot-bloodedness and Capricorn II tough sensuality can make an odd but compelling sexual combination. In marriage, Capricorn II's have much to teach Aquarius III's about balancing their energies, and Aquarius III's can help Capricorn II's to become more open-minded and accepting. If children come into the picture, both parents must learn the wisdom of dispassionate judgment, and should beware of allowing anger to dictate unfair punishments.

Friends and relatives in this combination often have strong moral views that they impose on those in their social or family circle. Living up to these partners' expectations may be simply too much for anyone to bear, and this may have the effect of alienating other people from their cause. In youth, aggressions are best worked out on the playing field or gym floor, where energies may be expressed within strict boundaries, without involving resentment or rebellion. At work, this duo may exert powerful authority within a company or organization, or as equal partners in their own business.

ADVICE: Sticking to the rules is good; creating them is even better. Don't repress your aggressions, but direct them as constructively as you can.

THE CUSP OF SENSITIVITY
AQUARIUS-PISCES CUSP

A Font of Honesty

This relationship often serves a specific purpose—to be a font of honesty and mental clarity for its partners. Both of these individuals are all too aware of others trying to manipulate or influence them, and they long for someone who will gently but firmly tell it like it is. Their relationship fulfills that need for both of its partners, and continues to prove reliable over the years. Yet the matchup also involves a certain aloofness and objectivity. Although empathy is possible, wild passion or romantic fervor is usually denied this couple, since it would introduce a highly unreliable, subjective element.

Friendships are usually the most desirable type of relationship here. True counselors to each other, these two can turn to one another in times of decision or need for sound, practical advice, without fear of flattery or betrayal. Their advice may not always be accurate in matters of the heart, however, since neither of these two has a deep understanding of the many twists and turns of human relationships and their emotional and psychological bases. On the whole, love relationships here often do best when restricted to the platonic sphere. But if marriage does result, partners who are wise enough to stay with each other and resist the temptation of a younger face or figure will reap many benefits while growing old together.

Capricorn II parents of the opposite sex can play too great a role in the lives of their Aquarius-Pisces children, who tend to be unduly sensitive to their adult criticism and judgment, and may have to battle long and hard over the years to get free of it. Career matchups in this combination can get carried away on the wings of ambition. Both Capricorn II's and Aquarius-Pisces have a lot to prove, a quality amplified by their relationship. This could be a highly successful pairing as long as overconfidence and a belief in its own infallibility do not gain control, in which case disaster is all too likely.

ADVICE: Be more modest and realistic about your abilities—you don't know everything. Open your heart a bit. Back off. Don't be so controlling.

Calm Under Fire

This can be an outstanding relationship in several areas of life. Showing great loyalty and respect, this pair will meet even the most acute crises with equanimity. Thus the relationship's focus, and perhaps its most admirable characteristic, is maintaining balance and staying calm under fire. In the course of their matchup, Capricorn II's give their Pisces I partners solid support, while Pisces I's contribute imagination and sensitivity. On the negative side, this duo can be perhaps a bit fatalistic at times, meaning that they lack the fighting spirit.

Sensuality may be present in this couple's love affairs to a generous degree, and it usually gives way or at least accords equal status to softer expressions of affection and sympathy. This ultimately bodes well for marriage, which for these two can be filled with love and understanding. Although a bit self-sacrificing and at times self-effacing, the relationship usually allows its partners the space they need to attend to their individual needs. Friendships in this combination may have a neutral quality, indicating an avoidance of extremes but also, perhaps, attitudes that are a bit complacent and unstimulating.

Although Pisces is a water sign and Capricorn earth, the Capricorn II–Pisces I relationship is ruled by fire, here signifying a tendency to follow intuitions. In business and family matters, these two instinctively know which course to pursue, usually to their advantage. Those in their immediate environment can benefit from their knowing and reassuring presence. Should family members decide to form business partnerships, they are usually able to work side by side and share the financial return from such ventures with employees and family members alike. Such sharing is not only an acknowledgment of work well done, and a gesture of generosity, but a solid investment in good will.

ADVICE: Be tougher. Take what is rightfully yours. Don't let yourself be treated like a football. Generosity isn't always appreciated.

THE WEEK OF THE LONER
PISCES II

No Problem!

This relationship does well when it is carried on casually, with few demands being made. It may not have a strong focus, or deal with deep emotions, but it can certainly be satisfactory enough, with relaxed and easygoing attitudes and good communication between its partners. Capricorn II's appreciate the unusual aspects of the Pisces II personality, and Pisces II's sense that Capricorn II's have a feeling for far-out experiences. Actually, one of the absorbing interests of this couple may be discussing fortuitous or out-of-the-way occurrences of an amusing or entertaining nature. Some may criticize the relationship for its appearance of superficiality, but such judgments rarely have much effect on the partners themselves.

Not taking things too seriously can actually help in love affairs and friendships between these two. After all, they are well aware that avoiding arguments gives them a lot more time to spend in pleasurable activities. The only drawback here is that serious problems may not be attended to until too late, but the partners could aptly point out that half of most people's problems lie in the fact that they are so convinced they have them. It often happens that as lovers these two have little interest in getting married; they prefer having the freedom to interact only when they want to, and not being bound to fixed responsibilities.

Parent-child matchups of either combination tend to be protective and nurturing, but rarely very stimulating or inspirational. In the professional sphere, these partners can get along with each other for years as co-workers in positions that are not terribly demanding, but the matchup is rarely well suited to boss-employee or executive relationships.

ADVICE: Push yourself a bit more. Recognize that not everyone wants to be as relaxed as you do. Don't ignore too much; take some things seriously.

THE WEEK OF DANCERS & DREAMERS
PISCES III

True Teamwork

No matter which of these two assumes a leadership role, whether within the relationship or outside of it, the other is likely to respond with wholehearted support. The combination is extremely well suited to finding itself in a leading role within a family, or in a social or commercial organization as a boss-assistant pair, but Capricorn II's and Pisces III's rarely function well as co-rulers or co-workers. Serving in boss-assistant roles does not in any way imply subjugation, for neither partner would stand to be treated with condescension or humiliated by the other. Here the assistant role is viewed as essential help without which the boss would be unable to function. These two are a true team, working closely and conscientiously together to assure the success of any project, no matter how small.

The Capricorn III–Pisces III relationship will take a passionate approach to anything its partners are involved in. These two don't do things half-heartedly or simply by the book but with verve and enthusiasm. Their love affairs are likely to be highly romantic, the type that sweeps them off their feet, allowing them little time to think. Such relationships are rarely light in nature, but they are not heavy, either—they have a purposeful and serious air about them but are also characterized by good humor. Marriages between these two also have a good-natured attitude, in which blame, shame and guilt trips are rarely laid on, and quarrels are soon forgotten.

Capricorn II's and Pisces III's make good friends, but their friendships demand an equality that usually precludes the kind of boss-assistant working relationship in which they cooperate so well. On the other hand, these relationships are not usually practical in nature anyway, being concentrated on just having fun. In the family, parent-child relationships can work out extremely well in either variation. Such duos will also work well together in stress situations that demand dedication and sacrifice.

ADVICE: Put your abilities to their most effective use. Beware of subjugating others to your will. Keep the best interests of the group in mind.

Hero Worship

Capricorn III's are a bit prone to idolize each other. No matter where in life their relationship emerges, they are bound to elevate their partner to a high position, but of course they are also likely to be raised to a corresponding position themselves. Their relationship, then, is not only highly complementary (and complimentary) but also in many respects quite unrealistic. Being set up for a fall is all too common here—one partner will come crashing down in the other's eyes through failure, misplaced trust or just the strain of not being able to live up to expectations. Only by exercising strong willpower, and by constantly reminding each other that they are ordinary human beings like anyone else, will this duo be capable of keeping a realistic eye on their relationship. Perhaps the greatest danger is according the relationship itself an unrealistically high order of merit, and developing a blind faith in its ability to accomplish miracles.

A love affair between two Capricorn III's is likely to be a sensuous, earthy relationship. By calling it the best they've ever had, however, the partners might keep it from deepening spiritually and emotionally. In marriages too, smugness or oversatisfaction can inhibit personal growth. Too often these partners are liable to live in a bubble of happiness that may one day burst, finding both of them unprepared for a sudden inrush of problems and difficulties that they really haven't faced before.

As business partners or executives, Capricorn III's can work very well together, but may overestimate each other's capabilities. They usually have a great deal of loyalty to their firm or company, and their ability to make personal sacrifices seems unlimited. But, of course, they are only human, and if they sacrifice too much their resentments will steadily build, particularly if commensurate reward is not forthcoming. Parent-child combinations, too, are likely to be overattached to their family group; their unselfishness may allow them to be taken advantage of by more self-seeking family members. Two Capricorn III friends are extremely loyal but must beware of forming a closed mutual-admiration society.

ADVICE: Try to be a bit more realistic. Don't have such high expectations. Belief in your infallibility can be deadly. You are no better than anyone else.

Treading on Toes

This is a touch-and-go combination. All too often, the antagonistic feelings that are likely to arise here lead the partners into confrontation. Because of their relationship's instability and unpredictability, these two will have to take great care not to tread on each other's toes or arouse animosity. They may also experience great excitement and challenge in the relationship, but a competitive element will often surface in the middle of a mutual project and set them at each other's throats. Keeping impulsiveness and deeper feelings under control, without dangerously suppressing them, and being able to work out differences of opinion will be essential to the well-being of this volatile pairing.

Love affairs in this combination can be passionate but transitory. The relationship will sometimes strike both partners with overwhelming intensity, then pass as suddenly as it appeared, like a summer thunderstorm. Such beginnings augur poorly for marriage, but should these two meet as friends rather than lovers, they may be able to develop a solid basis of trust and understanding. Energized by the constant emotional edge between them, however, their marriage will not allow them much relaxation.

Friendships and enmities between these two may be as close as the proverbial love and hate. Struggles over mutually desired goals, whether of a commercial or human sort, can both bring Capricorn III's and Capricorn-Aquarians together and drive them apart, depending on the circumstances. What is most important is that antagonistic, even violent impulses be kept under strict control, and consideration for all concerned be exercised to as great a degree as possible. In the professional sphere, the individuals in this pairing often find themselves on opposite sides of the fence, most obviously when they represent rival outfits but even when they work for the same organization. Their rivalries may be stimulating but can also bring out the very best and worst in them. In family matters, relatives in this combination must be careful to prevent open combat from emerging between them, precipitating an adversarial situation in which others are forced to take sides.

ADVICE: Figure out what is to your mutual advantage. Don't let dissension get out of control. Be aware of your effect on others. Promote stability.

Adjusting the Pace

These two personalities are very different temperamentally, and at first they may have difficulty in adjusting their pace to each other. But they are capable of generating a lot of energy and enthusiasm, and of dreaming up schemes that they can later realize as real-life projects. Their relationship is a study in contrasts. Capricorn III's, with their slow and serious side, may have problems with the lightning-quick Aquarius I approach, yet they have a great deal to teach Aquarius I's about the control and accurate direction of their energies. In arguments and personality struggles, Capricorn III's have the advantage of being able to hang in there steadily and push their point with unwavering perseverance, but Aquarius I's will sometimes explode with a force that will be difficult or impossible to resist.

In love affairs and marriages, dominant Capricorn III's may clash severely, even violently, with Aquarius I's who refuse to be controlled or ordered around. These relationships usually face acute emotional conflict sooner or later, although they can be quite exciting, too. It will be essential to lay down firm guidelines as to what is and is not considered acceptable behavior, both at home and in social contexts. Furthermore, both partners should know what is expected of them domestically, especially since discharging fixed responsibilities can have a calming and salutary effect on this matchup. Friendships and sibling relationships will demand constant stimulation in terms of entertainment and adventure. These two are up for practically anything, and will seek out danger and challenge wherever they can find it.

The key to this relationship's success is being able to minimize personal differences while making the very different strengths of its partners work to advantage. In career areas, such as boss-employee relationships, a Capricorn III at the helm will find an Aquarius I worker extremely difficult to control and, often, to understand. Should these two be paired equally as co-workers, they will often have problems agreeing on a common course of action, but once they settle in they can get the job done, efficiently and in short order.

ADVICE: Set strict limits. Attend to your daily tasks. Take care in roles sensitive to domination and rebellion. Get into synch.

Self-Evaluation

This couple often lacks a clear picture of itself and of what it does—it needs help in self-evaluation. The focus here, then, is often a mutual search for a standard or objective criterion against which it can measure or evaluate its achievements. Should debilitating arguments arise, both partners may need to consult a counselor or mutual friend who can serve as a mediator. In interpersonal relationships, hard-working Capricorn III's often enjoy the free and easy attitudes of Aquarius II's, which can help them take their mind off their work and responsibilities. When Capricorn III's relax, they can be great fun, so that these two may thoroughly enjoy their leisure together. On the other hand, Aquarius II's will also get on the nerves of Capricorn III's who are in a serious mood or are busy with a project. Capricorn III's sometimes find Aquarius II's extremely irritating and distracting.

Love affairs rarely develop between these two, since Capricorn III dominance is usually more than easy-going Aquarius II's can handle. In marriage too, Capricorn III's are likely to set themselves up as absolute authorities—a stance not acceptable to Aquarius II's, and unworkable within the relationship. These two partners tend to define their likes and dislikes extremely clearly with each other, so that the issues in their friendships and rivalries are usually all out in the open. Friendships generally bring out the best, and enmities the worst, in this combination.

Career matchups will feature strife and competition until both parties can agree on certain key points. Should Capricorn III's and Aquarius II's be co-workers, a perceptive boss will usually be able to keep peace between them, but the strain they put on the group may at times prove overwhelming. As cousins or siblings, they can relate splendidly, preferring to spend their time as far from adult supervision as possible. These partners make their own rules for themselves and consider social and even legal strictures not really applicable to them.

ADVICE: Try harder to work things out. Don't let your buttons be pushed so easily. Enjoy goofing off together. Don't take things too seriously.

Planning Campaigns

The traits that Capricorn III's have in abundance—constancy, consistency, application, etc.—are precisely those that Aquarius III's need to develop. And Aquarius III's also have a great deal to offer their partners in this combination in the way of initiative and invention. Between them they may build a highly creative relationship that can succeed brilliantly in impressing its talents, and even occasionally its genius, on other people. Humor is often present in this relationship, figuring prominently in the form of irony and wit. Capricorn III's too often emphasize their serious side in their interactions with other people, so they appreciate their relationship with Aquarius III's for letting them give vent to their playful, even silly moods.

Love affairs of this type can be complex, since although there is usually a base of good will, the partners arouse emotions in each other at a deep level, often touching dangerous shadow areas best left alone. Volcanic upheavals and truly wild expressions of feeling may periodically disrupt what is otherwise a remarkably peaceful relationship. Marriages are a bit more even, but as spouses these two tend to feel neglected, slighted and taken advantage of, and they usually only make their displeasure known after long periods of brooding. As friends, Capricorn III's and Aquarius III's are really good at cheering each other up. Should both of them fall into a serious depression at the same time, however, neither one may be strong enough to emerge from the pit alone, and these moods will have to run their course.

In career matters, Capricorn III's and Aquarius III's work extremely well together, meeting few emotional difficulties. True, their feelings seldom enter into the picture anyway, since the thoughtful and often intellectual content of what they do is of primary importance here. Particularly good at planning out projects and campaigns, they also have the tenacity to see their plans through. In the family, similarly, Capricorn III and Aquarius III relatives often team up when celebrations or other festivities need organizing.

AQUARIUS-PISCES CUSP

Inner Strength

As individuals, these partners often give the impression of being tougher than they really are. Whether through physical or psychological armoring, their exterior may seem unassailable; they seem to be walking evidence for the idea that strength is an external manifestation. Actually, though, they probably believe just the opposite, and their relationship with each other may be beneficial to them in that it will allow them more fully to discover the nature of inner strength. In some cases, in fact, the relationship can become an introduction to spirituality. In this way the couple's combination can have the effect of transforming their forbidding exterior, making it softer and less threatening, since they no longer have the need to impress anyone with muscular development or aggression.

Love and family relationships in this combination are often led to many sorts of spiritual discovery through the development of inner balance and strength. Such couples can find yoga, tai chi, kung fu and other Eastern disciplines extremely instructive in this respect. Capricorn III's and Aquarius-Pisces are no strangers to self-denial, being perhaps more prepared for disciplines that demand it than most initiates, but their relationship magnifies their readiness. Learning and practicing the true differences between mind and body can create greater strength in both areas.

Marriages and working relationships may see their principal endeavor as only a small part of life, and will want to give it greater meaning by connecting it with other areas, or with life as a whole. Aware and philosophical viewpoints like these, which are fundamentally spiritual in nature, lend greater meaning to the pair's marital and professional endeavors, although in work situations they may make them less commercially productive. For friends in this combination, various forms of entertainment and excitement often begin to lose their glow with time, and to exert less of a pull. Such friends may eventually find silent meditation and thoughtful discussion much more stimulating and strengthening because they come from within rather than without.

ADVICE: Keep in touch with reality. Inner balance is important, but so is your social life. Don't turn your back on others. Make the connection.

Belief as Fabric

This relationship is easygoing and pleasurable. Both Capricorn III's and Pisces I's know the nature of struggle, but in their relationship with each other they are able to put aside painful problems and difficulties, let their guard down and relax. An eternal youthfulness characterizes this matchup, and its childlike nature and openness protect its partners more thoroughly than any thick-walled defenses ever could. Defenses like that, of course, invite attack, whereas these two silently believe that true innocence is unassailable. Although other people may find their belief naive, they themselves feel they can make it work in daily life. In fact, it can become part of the relationship's inner fabric. This is not necessarily a religious combination but features a kind of easy self-confidence and trust in each other's love and in the relationship itself.

Marriages between these two can be outstanding. Both partners make excellent parents—nurturing, patient and supportive in the extreme. Love affairs and friendships, on the other hand, can be unstable and transitory; here Pisces I's are less focused, Capricorn III's less devoted. These relationships are unlikely to withstand emotional upset, and if either partner has any immaturity (particularly probable with Pisces I's), they may actually turn out to be quite selfish and self-absorbed.

Capricorn III parents can be very severe with their Pisces I children, yet also overprotective. Pisces I parents may try to coddle their Capricorn III children but rarely succeed in doing so. Sibling pairs of the opposite sex in this combination usually have difficulty growing up. The bond they form in childhood can last throughout their lives but often interferes with their ability to form mature adult relationships with other people. Breaking such a bond may prove impossibly painful.

Both of these individuals do best when they have their own particular area of expertise. They do not make an outstanding combination, then, as business partners, company executives or co-workers.

ADVICE: Not everyone deserves your trust. Keep your individuality alive. Let go of claiming bonds. In certain respects you may be kidding yourself.

Not as Simple as It Appears

This relationship usually centers around providing effective leadership. Capricorn III's would seem to be the bosses here, since Pisces II's are rarely capable of or even interested in dominating their powerful partner. But things are not as simple as they appear in this respect: although they cannot govern Capricorn III's, Pisces II's generally demand to be on an equal footing with them in terms of power and control. It is often the relationship itself that assumes a leadership role in its immediate social, professional or family environment. Since this relationship carries the possibility of passionate involvement, ironing out these issues may prove far from easy.

In love affairs, passions are likely to be uncontrolled unless the relationship has some direction and purpose. Pisces II's can be highly unconventional, and balk against social restrictions, while Capricorn III's may insist on following the rules. Marriages between these two are not recommended unless agreement can be reached on social and financial matters. And when they founder, they are likely to generate extremely painful and destructive energies.

Friends in this combination find great joy in discussing the latest ideas and trends, from fashion to politics. They often show great empathy for each other, and can call upon each other in times of need. As family members these two often take the lead in planning the group's activities, and they are also able to represent the family when social obligations must be fulfilled.

In professional matters, this relationship can prove extremely valuable and rewarding for all concerned. Of a decidedly philosophical bent, it does best in areas where planning, theorizing, reorganization and preparation play a primary role. Although able to work as part of a larger team, these two probably do best on their own as independent freelancers, researchers or consultants.

ADVICE: Don't lose emotional control. Lead others wisely—beware of abusing power. Don't get lost in theorizing. Keep your feet on the ground.

Thinking the Best of Others

Great humanity is exhibited by this relationship, and a concomitant desire to better the lives of others both in the pair's immediate environment and beyond. Capricorn III's are ruggedly fair and honest in their accepting attitudes toward all, and Pisces III's are universal enough in their thinking to eschew any selfish striving after money or power. Idealistic in the extreme, these partners must remind themselves that guarantees, deadlines and legal agreements also have their place in the scheme of things. They are sometimes a bit naive to the abuses of power and must remind themselves to be tough and demanding, and to insist that guarantees will be backed up with rock-solid commitment.

In love affairs, Capricorn III's too often sit at home waiting for their elusive Pisces III partners to return. Pisces III's are masters of the excuse, but they will find their partner in this combination somewhat hard to convince, and remarkably unforgiving. After several punishing sessions, Pisces III's will either learn to toe the line or find another partner.

Friendships and marriages here tend to be a bit gullible. The partners too easily accept the word of others, putting their own finances and reputations at risk. Thinking the best of others until proven wrong is an admirable but not always practical quality, particularly when it comes to gray areas involving close relatives or friends who are less than reliable. Trust and acceptance can also be big issues between the partners themselves. In this area Capricorn III's tend to be severe, unyielding and moral, Pisces III's flexible, accepting and difficult to pin down.

A Capricorn III parent will often spoil a charming Pisces III child quite shamelessly but will also exercise absolute control. In the professional sphere, this matchup can be a powerful force for tolerance and opportunity. Employees of social and commercial organizations will benefit from having such a duo as their representatives.

ADVICE: Your accepting attitudes hide a condemning side. Don't allow yourself to be manipulated. Demand firm guarantees, even from those you love.

A Roaring Inferno

These two may not be the best combination for each other. True, they appreciate each other's liveliness and vivacity, but their matchup has two major drawbacks: first, that its synergy magnifies not just their talents but their instabilities, making them dangerously unpredictable; and second, that each of them is often more attracted to quiet, passive types. Because of their ability to trigger each other's shadow side, violent outbursts are to be expected in this relationship, which can be terribly destructive both psychologically and physically.

Interpersonal relationships like friendships, marriages and love affairs are particularly susceptible to this kind of triggering. Furthermore, since both partners are fascinated with imaginative and dangerous pursuits, they may lack some kind of checking or limiting mechanism to keep them from being caught up in various types of excessive behavior, perhaps involving drugs, violence, sex or fantasy. Each partner merely feeds the other's flame until the relationship is fanned to white heat. A roaring inferno or eruptive volcano of emotion can sweep away everything in its path, including the relationship itself. As relatives, Capricorn-Aquarians have a quick, almost telepathic bond that allows them to act as one, a quality particularly helpful in emergency situations that demand lightning-quick reflexes. Nurturing instincts are also well developed here, but the pair must be careful about their violent reactions to people they consider intruders in the family space.

Substantial controlling mechanisms do appear, on the other hand, within the professional and the familial spheres. Capricorn-Aquarius combinations can make excellent partners in business, industrial and artistic pursuits. Hard-working and responsible attitudes emerge here, and with them a firm commitment to achieving success. The couple's human qualities are also strongly marked, so that these two will rarely take advantage of others. In fact, their matchup can be generous, and is highly considerate to the feelings of other people, particularly socially disadvantaged ones.

ADVICE: Shooting first and asking questions later is not advised. Keep your temper under control. Seek moderation in all things, if possible.

Enforcing Agreements

Although these two may understand each other well and have abundant energy to put in the service of their shared projects and of their relationship itself, things will not usually work out between them unless they can see eye to eye on certain issues. Once they reach agreement on financial, philosophical and cultural matters, they can proceed further, but they must be diligent about preventing periodic lapses in what has been agreed upon. The problem here is emotional instability and uncertainty of purpose. Impetuosity will too often gain ascendancy in this relationship, destroying weeks, months or even years of hard work. The relationship is built on a delicate, even precarious balance, and since it is not known for toughness or resiliency, disruption can lead to disaster in very short order.

Love affairs can develop quickly, perhaps too much so, since this may keep them from having the time to put down solid roots. Furthermore, both Capricorn-Aquarians and Aquarius I's have a roving eye, and unless they can work out an agreement to have a free or open relationship, jealousies, blame and recrimination may result. Marriages should obviously not be attempted between these two unless such agreements are reached first and, just as important, there is a resolute attitude toward enforcing these agreements.

Friendships here are best kept unserious, for Capricorn-Aquarians have a temper that can rage out of hand if they find their Aquarius I friend unfaithful or unreliable. In the family, Capricorn-Aquarian parents can be very intolerant toward young Aquarius I's; they may acknowledge these children's talent and intelligence yet insist that they perform quite menial tasks, just like anyone else. Sibling relationships, on the other hand, can be highly stimulating and mutually supportive. As business partners and co-workers, Capricorn-Aquarians and Aquarius I's are capable of great things, but they must learn to overcome small irritations in their daily interactions.

ADVICE: Make rules and stick to them. Try to curb your impetuosity. Think of the good of the group. Don't demand the impossible of each other.

THE WEEK OF YOUTH & EASE

Satisfaction or Dissatisfaction?

This relationship features quick communication, but not always of the positive sort. This volatile pair easily voices both satisfaction and dissatisfaction; the partners rarely leave each other in any doubt where they stand. Although Aquarius II's are attracted to the deeper, shadow areas of the Capricorn-Aquarius personality, they may not always appreciate the problems attendant upon relationships with these wonderful but maddening individuals. Both of these personalities have an extremely youthful quality, but Capricorn-Aquarians, with their often hectic lifestyles, are unlikely to age as well as Aquarius II's. The relationship is generally a positive one, but its enthusiasm must not be allowed to get out of control and obliterate good sense.

Love affairs can be exciting but emotionally unpredictable. Aquarius II's often have trouble handling tumultuous Capricorn-Aquarians, and although they may crave what these individuals' deep and passionate nature seems to promise, they ultimately cannot handle its intensity. Capricorn-Aquarians, for their part, may enjoy the attention of Aquarius II's but may ultimately tire of what they could come to view as an increasingly superficial involvement.

In marriages and working relationships, Capricorn-Aquarians can be sensible and practical in technical areas (traits that are welcome to Aquarius II's) but also chaotic emotionally and financially (traits that are not). Aquarius II's will often throw up their hands in despair at their partner's latest shenanigans, and will bemoan the fact that they ever chose this relationship. Capricorn-Aquarians, however, are eminently forgivable, particularly by Aquarius II's, who are quite relaxed once they calm down.

As friends, these two can have a great time of it, whether visiting clubs together, going on vacations and to films or just plain hanging out. Capricorn-Aquarians in this kind of relationship with an Aquarius II will feel completely comfortable, and able to relax, kick back and enjoy their time together fully. Siblings in this combination also make excellent companions for each other, particularly when they are of the opposite sex.

ADVICE: Can you handle it? Remember that wishes come true. Get a hold on your emotions. Predictable need not mean dull. Deepen your commitment.

Cool Under Heat

These two bring out each other's wild side. The biggest problem their relationship has, and often its principal focus, is whether it can succeed in moderating its drives and putting them to work in a more balanced way. The nature of the involvement here is tempestuous, to say the least. The question is, will the fire rage out of control or be contained? For the most part it is contained, for this pair can often advance their cause and further their interests in a professional manner that belies the intensity of their pairing. Keeping cool under fire is characteristic of them—they know how to go about their business without attracting or creating much commotion, if they so wish.

Love affairs, friendships and marriages in this combination can be extremely devoted and loyal. Aquarius III's are basically able to accept the whole Capricorn-Aquarius package without reservation, even if they may not fully agree with it. Capricorn-Aquarians are often charmed by their Aquarius III companions, and are strongly attracted to them physically. Although these relationships can all be stormy at times, they tend to hold together over the years, confounding critics who predicted that their instability would lead to an early demise. Parent-child relationships in either possible variation struggle for balance and may finally achieve it later in life.

In business dealings, work projects and other career endeavors, these two can make an effective combination. Getting the job done according to plan emphasizes the fact that things are often worked out meticulously before any sort of presentation or confrontation is allowed to take place. But emotional tensions and disagreements can surface at the most inopportune moments, throwing a monkey wrench into the works. Self-sabotage is too often the result of this pair's endeavors, for they are less apt to be tripped up by others than by themselves.

ADVICE: Don't let the fire get out of control. Achieve balance and maintain it. Beware of undercutting your own best efforts. Keep an eye on yourself.

Fairy Tales

February 16–22

THE CUSP OF SENSITIVITY
 AQUARIUS-PISCES CUSP

This very natural combination specializes in the easy expression of imaginative thoughts and ideas. Both partners lead a large inner life, but even if one of them is content with merely having fantasies, the other is sure to draw him or her out, usually simply through curiosity. Then, acting out these fantasies can become the couple's specialty. They often love to dress up for parties and other events, or even to perform theater within the privacy of their own home. This is not really exhibitionism, and certainly not a manifestation of asocial tendencies, but rather the pure expression of a delight in play-acting, theater and make-believe. Living in an easy and youthful world of enchantment, much as children do when caught up in fairy tales, can become the trademark of this couple.

Love affairs are usually more romantic than physical, more fantastic than earthy. These lovers come to live on another plane, one that they share only with each other. Confiding the most intimate childhood secrets, and playing games that many adults would be ashamed of, often become commonplace activities here. The couple may have little interest in TV or the movies, for they usually furnish their own entertainment. Should they marry, their unions don't always get much understanding from other people, including their own children. Growing old together in a family environment while persisting in youthful and imaginative activities may cause some amusement, or even serious worries that the couple has gone round the bend.

As friends these two may decide to put their fantasies to work for them in commercial activities. Making money with the subject matter of daydreams can be very pleasurable indeed, but the help of a shrewd business manager and a dependable accountant may be all that stands between this couple and financial ruin. Cousins and siblings in this combination will delight in playing for hours, needing few props but for some household articles and a few old clothes.

Discovering a Proper Rhythm

February 23–March 2

THE WEEK OF SPIRIT
 PISCES I

The success of this relationship usually depends on its discovery of the proper rhythm—something usually, and literally, just a matter of time. Success is also dependent on finding the right activities to be involved in. If Pisces I's feel a personal connection with what they are doing, they will give their all. Capricorn-Aquarians often have the wisdom to realize this and will fight the Pisces I tendency to drift and dream. One of these partners, after all, must be the more practical of the two, and must take the lead if anything is to get done. This is a role that Capricorn-Aquarians can enjoy, up to a point; and although they can begin to feel a tad frustrated should their dynamism fail to strike sparks in their Pisces I partner, they usually don't give up.

Love affairs and friendships between these two can be understanding and affectionate. Pisces I's sometimes feel that their Capricorn-Aquarius partner is coming on too strong, but they will appreciate the attention and secretly admire the forceful approach they are receiving. Insensitivity from Capricorn-Aquarians, however, will grate on them, often to the point where they retreat or flee. Meanwhile Capricorn-Aquarians in these relationships may feel rejected and unappreciated, which usually results in suppressed feelings of anger and depression. Capricorn-Aquarians will usually take the lead in marriages, seeking to convince their milder Pisces I partner that the relationship is in their best interest. In parent-child relationships, Capricorn-Aquarius parents may play a tyrannical or dominating role in their Pisces I children's lives. Breaking free of these influences will be difficult for the children, who can suffer for years from a mixture of worship and fear of such a parental figure. Successful business partnerships and other working relationships are possible between these two when Capricorn-Aquarians invite Pisces I's to join them in undertakings of mutual interest. Pisces I's will benefit greatly from the commercial contacts to which tougher Capricorn-Aquarians can introduce them, and will learn much from this partner about how to survive in a dog-eat-dog world.

ADVICE: Stay sensitive to each other's needs. Increase understanding. Try to share leadership roles. Allow time for initiative to develop.

THE WEEK OF THE LONER
PISCES II

A Working-Out Process

This relationship has an empathic connection, but its greatest challenge and focus is often mutual acceptance. The key here is building trust, which can require some patience, for these partners are very different temperamentally and may not get along at all for long periods of time. Learning to relate, however, can turn into a marvelous process of self-discovery for them, one that will help them realize the true value of their relationship with each other. There is a strange chemistry at work here, in which competition can ultimately foster admiration, irritation can lead to acceptance and selfishness can become sharing. It is often through a common activity or interest that this working-out process takes place.

Love affairs between these two hinge on Capricorn-Aquarians' ability to accept not only the need of Pisces II's for privacy but also their choices in friends. Capricorn-Aquarians can be very demanding of Pisces II attention and must feel that they are number one in their partner's affections. In friendships too, being dubbed the "best friend" of a Pisces II is perhaps of overly great importance to Capricorn-Aquarians, perhaps indicating in both situations a somewhat immature and egocentric attitude. Marriages have a chance for success if the Capricorn-Aquarius learns to back off rather than being possessive and controlling of the Pisces II spouse. Pisces II's themselves may have to relinquish claiming attitudes and to give their Capricorn-Aquarius mate more freedom.

In work and family relationships, competitive challenge often becomes a major issue. These partners may be competing for the attention of a boss or parent, for a higher rung in the pecking order or for objective superiority through achievement, but in most cases their struggles can have an ultimately positive result. At the time, however, co-workers and relatives will have to exercise great patience in standing aside and letting Capricorn-Aquarians and Pisces II's work, or battle, things out.

ADVICE: Exercise greater patience. The road to acceptance is not an easy one. Demonstrate your willingness to compromise. Cultivate diplomacy.

Private Archives

This relationship brings out the secretive side of its partners. Their matchup is likely to become, among other things, a repository for all sorts of hidden information, not only about themselves but about others. Not surprisingly, they show a special interest in gossip, reading the paper and watching the news, since much of what they see throws added light on their private archives, and perhaps enriches them. Should the relationship discreetly keep such information to themselves, their preoccupation with collecting such material could be viewed as just a harmless hobby, but in fact this information is often revealed at certain opportune or inopportune moments, with overwhelming effect.

The challenge of the love affair or marriage in this combination is to deal with material from each personality's own past—sensitively and with understanding. Both partners are likely to have buried many painful memories, which the relationship is capable of dealing with in a therapeutic fashion. Through openness and mutual discussion, much of this material can be worked through, and old scripts can be dealt with and discarded. A great deal of trust is necessary, of course, with the consequence that for one of the partners to break off the relationship could arouse devastating anxiety.

Family members in this combination are likely to be chroniclers of past events who share many but not all of their files with other relatives. They often keep hidden material kept back to serve their own advantage one day. As friends, these two are especially interested in the goings-on of their social set. Co-workers in this combination sometimes accumulate damaging information about their company, which they are usually sensible enough to keep to themselves. Should they be dismissed from their jobs, however, it will be dangerously tempting for them to go public with this information or even, in extreme cases, to offer it to the highest bidder.

ADVICE: Don't get on a big power trip. Beware of emotional blackmail. You may be playing a dangerous game. Let up a bit from your preoccupations.

AUGUSTE PICCARD (1/28/1884)

The Piccard twin brothers were 19th-century pioneers in ballooning and ocean dives. In 1932 physicist Auguste ballooned to an altitude of 55,000 feet. After 1946 he made ocean dives in a bathyscaphe he designed. Chemical engineer Jean accompanied his brother on many ascents, both researching cosmic rays.

The Speed of Light

These two can rarely provide each other with the stability they need. Although Aquarius I's can be more fun than a barrel of monkeys, they are not necessarily able to contribute much more than entertainment and sparkling wit to a relationship, and their matchups usually depend on the other partner to supply heavy doses of responsibility, seriousness and stick-to-it-iveness to keep them viable—a more likely contribution from other personalities than from each other. Aquarius I's can be loving and kind to each other, or equally well cool and cynical, depending on their mood. Their unpredictability is magnified by their relationship—probably no one will know what they are likely to serve up next. Quick and accurate communication is a plus in this relationship; messages sometimes seem to flash back and forth with the speed of light. In fact, it is not uncommon for telepathy to play a role here, either with or without the partners' awareness of it.

Love affairs between two Aquarius I's tend to be brief but memorable. Extremely unstable, they bloom suddenly and dramatically, like certain tropical plants, then fade just as quickly. Marriages between Aquarius I's can be surprisingly enduring once the spouses understand that they must grant each other the same freedom they demand for themselves. Fixed qualities will emerge in domestic and financial matters in these relationships.

At work, Aquarius I's collaborate well together, but only in their own strange way. An inspirational team, they often do well when they don't have much contact but are able to touch base with each other when necessary for consultation and advice. In the family, Aquarius I relatives will not always agree on important issues (and, in fact, can be quite argumentative), but at the very least are able to comprehend each other's point of view. When Aquarius I siblings are in agreement, they can make their case very cogently indeed. As friends, Aquarius I's make marvelous companions in a wide variety of endeavors. Once these two put their mind to something, it is likely to yield the most astonishing results.

ADVICE: Try to be more consistent. Keep your impetuosity under control. Explore emotions more deeply. Don't be guilty of applying a double standard.

Paying the Bill

This relationship aims to be as trouble-free as possible. These partners' mutual allergy to problems for the most part tends to give their relationship a happy-go-lucky air. The price they pay for this balance, however, can be heavy, since by avoiding difficulties whenever possible, the relationship may wind up causing more of them in the long run. Although Aquarius II's will enjoy giving their dark side a rest in this relationship, that is no guarantee that peacefulness will result, since the inner shadow does not take well to being ignored and may well demand attention. The relationship can nevertheless be extremely enjoyable for both partners, at least while it is still functional.

Love affairs and friendships can be especially enthusiastic but may lack longevity because of both partners' difficulties in making a lasting commitment. Easy interchanges and few responsibilities are the keywords here. A childlike air suffuses the relationship but, unfortunately, a childish and immature one, too. These two may at times resemble kids who never grew up—and never wanted to, either.

Relationships that demand more of a fixed commitment, such as career matchups and marriages, are not particularly favored by this combination. The degree of independence the partners require, and their inability to submit to controlling and claiming authority, is usually prohibitive in both cases. Conditions can be ameliorated by keeping the power equally divided between them, whether at home or at work, and preventing authoritarian or holier-than-thou stances.

In the family, parent-child matchups in either possible variation may be free and permissive. The partners' attitude is actually that freedom is not something you are given but something you take. In some ways, children come to be more responsible through being accountable for their own actions than they might be in a more authoritarian setting.

ADVICE: Sooner or later the bill will have to be paid. Avoidance may only create greater difficulties. Take care of things now. Own up to your responsibilities.

As Pleasant as Possible

As far as possible, this duo chooses the path of least resistance. Both of the partners know that there are two ways to do things: a hard way and, preferably, an easy way. It isn't that they in any way avoid responsibilities and problems, for as a pair they are more than aware of the dangers of this approach. It's more that their relationship is quite fatalistic about accepting what has to be done, and will try to do it in as pleasant a way as possible. Furthermore, the decisions these two make can be self-assured, swift and decisive, since they know that by getting the inevitable out of the way now they will have more time for fun later.

Love affairs between these two are often more sensuous than sexual. Pleasure-loving to the extreme, they often enjoy food, massage, art, music and other such earthly delights, all equally. Married couples in this combination will give great attention to the layout of their home and, especially, to the colors and fabrics they use to decorate it. Designing the dwelling can be a delight for them, although they can expect a lot of heated disagreements along the way due to their differing tastes.

As friends and siblings, these two can be extremely close in their formative years, and will have great times together. Some rebelliousness and impatience with authority are inevitable here, but the pair will often work out a better way of doing things, and in doing so will ultimately prove how reliable they are. It is possible but not always advisable for Aquarius I's and III's to work together. The playful side of life, after all, is the area where their relationship does best, and a boring or repetitive occupation can deaden feelings between them. On the other hand, if they are business partners or co-workers in a field that challenges their imagination and gives them enough variety, they can work side by side quite contentedly and productively.

ADVICE: You don't have all the answers. Follow other people's advice occasionally. Pleasure isn't always the most important thing.

Standing Outside

The partners in this relationship may discover that they are without deep social needs and that they prefer to stand outside ordinary human interactions, as observers rather than participants. They will rarely feel isolated, however, although they will have to be careful not to neglect their responsibilities to family and friends. Should Aquarius I's take the lead in the relationship, Aquarius-Pisces may feel a bit frustrated at being left out of the decision-making, so it is usually wise for power to be shared as equally as possible. Aquarius-Pisces also tend to be a bit defensive around Aquarius I's, standing somewhat in awe of their mental powers and leadership abilities. Yet Aquarius-Pisces actually tend to have a deeper emotional understanding of things than Aquarius I's do, and therefore have much to teach their gifted partners.

In romance this combination manifests as volatile and somewhat impulsive, perhaps even rash. This is particularly true in love affairs, which can be entered upon hastily, only to leave both partners with a sense of regret that they did not exercise greater patience and forethought. Should the lovers contemplate marriage, they should give themselves plenty of time to get to know each other first. Of particular interest will be how they will divide responsibilities ranging from money-making to domestic management.

Friendships between Aquarius I's and Aquarius-Pisces can be very sensitive about success—the partners will probably compete with each other to achieve greater recognition and higher status or salaries. Although their competition can be playful, it also has a serious edge, which they should discuss and phase out as much as possible. Boss-employee and parent-child matchups in this combination will rely on firm leadership. Too often, the employee or child will be angered by a lack of direction emanating from the top and will ascribe it to weakness or indecision on the part of boss or parent, thus engendering loss of respect. Co-worker and sibling relationships are often more successful, since here equality is more likely between the partners.

ADVICE: Discover and exercise your true social self. Find a meaningful connection with other people. Status is less important than involvement.

Spiritualized Thought

This combination symbolically represents a blending of the mind (Aquarius I) and the soul (Pisces I). Of course, the distinctions between these areas are not always black and white, but for the most part it is Aquarius I mental characteristics and Pisces I spirituality that will react within the crucible of the relationship. The outcome of this fusion directly depends on the degree of the partners' acceptance of one another, for if this is incomplete, their respective qualities will remain partially opposed and unreconciled. Should acceptance be total or near it, however, a whole new entity can arise, eradicating any polarity and replacing it with a heightened awareness, a kind of spiritualized thought. This highly unusual entity will sometimes function autonomously of partners themselves, usually serving as a higher mind, a guide for their every action.

The degree of love in romances and marriages is in itself proof that a fusion of mind and spirit has taken place. Sexual expression, sympathy and affection are by no means contraindicated here, and indeed are usually all present. From acceptance follows understanding and, ultimately, empathy, indicating a true commonality of feeling. Tremendous differences can exist within the relationship, for as individuals these partners rarely even begin to resemble each other or to think and act alike. This diversity, however, speaks well for the matchup's psychological health.

As friends and siblings, Aquarius I's and Pisces I's are capable of reaching levels of awareness as high as lovers and spouses do. More often, however, these friendships and familial pairings progress a good deal less far, and in fact might remain polarized throughout the partners' lives. Seldom able to accept each other completely, these two can share many activities harmoniously without feeling any real soul connection.

Work relationships are best kept separate from interpersonal interactions. The very different business and technical approaches of Aquarius I's and Pisces I's offer versatility but can also act to undermine the unanimity of opinion that can be vital in commercial dealings.

ADVICE: Don't hold back. Give yourself to the experience. Great things are possible once you accept each other fully. Listen to your guides.

Throwing Others Off the Track

This combination will have difficulty trying to hide itself away, and is often controversial, yet it is also extremely private. The partners' friends and family might be led to the conclusion that they must really be exhibitionists, since they inevitably wind up in the spotlight, yet nothing would seem further from the truth: the really intense moments in the relationship are highly personal, whether or not the partners are physically alone. Even in the midst of uproar and hubbub, they can drop their curtain and isolate themselves in the throng. Part of the relationship's secret is that it carries with it a unique and deep understanding of the dynamics of private and public behavior, an understanding it can use to advantage.

Love affairs in this combination might be controversial if the partners chose to reveal the particulars of their intimacy, but few may even guess that romance could exist between some of these couples—it is surprising enough that they are together in the first place. Marriages lay down another sort of smoke screen, that of respectability; the appearance of conventionality may be misleading here, being totally at odds with the truth. In both love and marriage, Pisces II's can play the role of the introvert and Aquarius I the extrovert, when the truth is just the opposite.

Friendships and sibling relationships can hide many secrets. These two often get a kick out of shocking others, often by a surprising revelation that throws people off the track. As a matter of fact, the pair may hide themselves not by concealing their real activities but by revealing a string of phony ones that just serve as a diversion. Teasing parents with their peek-a-boo stance is one of the chief delights of Aquarius I–Pisces II siblings.

In business and career matters, these two may find themselves in a fixed position relative to each other, but their behavior in broad daylight can be so sophisticated that few will really understand what is going on. Even if they see it, they may not believe the direct evidence of their senses.

ADVICE: Be more honest. Who are you trying to fool? Deception can grow tiring. Once others see what you are doing, they may never believe you again.

Theoretical Realms

This relationship is likely to focus on theoretical realms not easily approached or understood by other people. Philosophical speculation comes naturally to these two as individuals, a trait that the synergy of their relationship magnifies. Aquarius I's and Pisces III's have antennae out for each other. They are extremely sensitive to each other's wishes and moods, often anticipating them in a highly gratifying way, which reinforces the relationship's psychic solidarity. Although Aquarius I's are more mentally and Pisces III more emotionally oriented in everyday matters, such differences are more likely to complement than to disturb their relationship.

Love affairs between these two can be magical, ephemeral and hard to pin down. They are extremely empathic; each partner's sensitivity to what the other is feeling may cause them real pain. They gladly share each other's problems, but at times may have trouble distinguishing their own difficulties from those of their lover—for ego boundaries blur here, and identities merge. In marriage, resolute willpower will have to be employed to retain each person's individuality, a quality that children often have a need for in their parents. Too often here a monolithic front signals a breakdown of autonomous personalities.

Family members and friends in this combination can be extremely sensitive to one another, which means that they can at one moment be thoughtful and considerate toward each other, the next get on each other's nerves. Finely tuned, these two must learn to blank their screens when they are together and, in loosening the connection, preserve their own stream of inner meditation. Work combinations can be found in all walks of life, but even the most mundane and ordinary occupations may feature highly sophisticated conversation over lunch and after hours. When these two engage in scientific research, teaching, gambling, game-playing or financial speculation, they may be able to indulge both their love of the theoretical and their fascination with chance to the full. Trying to uncover the laws behind daily reality can become a lifelong search here.

ADVICE: Find a balance between empathy and individuality. Share, but also lay claim to what is yours. Try not to dump your problems on others.

Attracting Problems

For people who like things nice and easy, these two surely attract their share of problems. Part of the explanation for this is the tendency of Aquarius II's to summon up elements of their own shadow side in their surroundings—a tendency that this relationship amplifies. The couple's difficulties are related to their need to attract attention, for along with that attention their relationship is likely to pull in all kinds of potentially debilitating energies. It usually favors two alternatives: first, to carry on with its impulse to stay in the limelight; second, to withdraw to a safer position, a choice that sometimes even demands that the partners split up and go their separate ways, like fugitives in the night. In either case the relationship is being driven by its need for attention within its social, family or professional worlds. Were this desire scaled back to a reasonable level, the alternatives faced in the relationship would be less problematic.

Friends, lovers and family members in this combination are all too likely to attract hangers-on who want to get emotionally involved with them. Arousing these parasitic tendencies in others can become a real problem for Aquarius II's, and in extreme cases can weaken or even destroy their bond. Should the relationship survive this subtle onslaught, on the other hand, it will emerge chastened, wiser and certainly better able to cope with these problems—often self-induced—in the future.

In professional settings these two are most comfortable with a low-key approach. By not taking on too many responsibilities, they can discharge those they do shoulder in a relaxed and efficient way, and can also implement their often brilliant ideas without arousing undue animosity or resistance. On the other hand, marriages of Aquarius II's are quite likely to arouse jealousies and dislikes in other people because of their often elitist and high-flown manner. These couples' superior attitudes, and their transparent efforts to rise to the top of the social ladder, will make life difficult for them and for their children.

ADVICE: Scale back your need for attention. Be more prudent about whom you associate with. Don't be tripped up by your own conceit.

A Car with No Driver

Which of these two personalities will wind up in the driver's seat? On the surface of it, neither of them may be much interested in dominating or taking the lead, but circumstances often force such roles on them in their professional lives. And in their personal relationships with each other there may be even more compelling reasons for one of them to take the lead, for without such leadership the pair may drift without direction. Yet the relationship may feature a marked resistance to assertive behavior from one partner, which is unfortunate, since in their desire to leave things as they are these two may be spoiling their own best chance for personal, social and even financial success.

Love affairs and friendships might seem less in need of real leadership than other personal relationships in this combination. In friendships, however, leadership could take the form of encouraging self-development, spiritual growth and emotional enrichment, and if the relationship lacks this kind of impulse it may be necessary for one of the partners to push it a bit in this direction. Love affairs may suffer from complacency, friendships from disinterest, but someone will have to take up the slack if progress is to be made. Marriages as a rule tend to need financial direction, and if this cannot be found within the relationship itself, professional advice will have to be sought. In some cases, an astute child may fill some gaps in later life.

Companies and families suffer acutely from lack of leadership, and here the pair might be pushed into a position of responsibility out of default. Should incompetent or ineffective leadership already exist, the partners may be faced with the unpleasant but necessary task of unseating it, which might win them animosity and even hatred. Boss-employee and parent-child relationships in this combination often witness a passing of power from the older generation to the younger, not without some friction and difficulty, but usually with near full agreement from both partners, along with that of co-workers and family.

 AQUARIUS-PISCES CUSP

Who Are You?

At the very heart of this combination lies an acute need for self-acceptance—for the relationship to accept itself as a unit, and for the partners to accept themselves as individuals. Both Aquarius II's and Aquarius-Pisces have a dark side at the center of their personalities that they would just as soon forget about. They both have built sunnier personae for themselves, often at great psychological cost, and they simply don't want to be bothered with upsetting subjects. Yet in doing all this they may have denied an important part of themselves, which will plague them later on until they finally recognize and accept it. Their relationship amplifies and echoes this need for self-realization.

Love affairs here can thrive once disturbing elements are acknowledged and shared. Sexual interactions are often intense but also marked by a lack of consciousness of the forces involved. There is a certain fear that once the partners understand the true basis of their relationship, their passions will dissipate, but this is not the case. In marriage, too, increased understanding, acceptance and trust can unlock hidden areas and trigger a whole renaissance of sensuality.

As family members, especially in parent-child and grandparent-child combinations, Aquarius II's and Aquarius-Pisces can struggle to accept each other but may have to come to terms with their own self-acceptance first. Friendships here are best kept light and unserious. As friends these two often use the relationship to fill in gaps in their own personalities, which means that they can postpone the necessity of really dealing with their own deficiencies. In the commercial sphere, these matchups have no need to touch the partners' hidden personal areas to achieve success and, indeed, are better off leaving well enough alone. Aquarius-Pisces ambition is infectious here, and often inspires Aquarius II's to push themselves a bit. Meanwhile, Aquarius II can teach Aquarius-Pisces something about hanging loose.

ADVICE: Find out who you really are, and accept this person. What else can you do? Then build your relationship on a solid foundation.

Moderate Behavior

These two enjoy a relaxed relationship in which they can let it all hang out. There is little need for concealment or exhibitionism between them, since they feel natural with each other, so that moderate rather than extreme behavior is the rule here. Pisces I's, however, have a much greater need for solitude than Aquarius II's, and may resent the relationship's tendency to be gregarious. They are also moody and changeable in nature, and this, combined with Aquarius II fickleness, can create instabilities within their relationship. They will try to be as honest with each other as they can but will inevitably keep a lot of their feelings to themselves, even when they are being quite up front about their actions.

Aquarius II's and Pisces I's don't always succeed in being faithful to each other in their love affairs, even though they do their best to be loyal. Their combination is fired by emotionally complex, even volcanic energies that run deep and dark. Conscious awareness is not at a premium here, so that even though the relationship is predominantly relaxed, there will also be some frustration in these kinds of relationships, with desires being aroused but not satisfied. Marriages between Aquarius II's and Pisces I's are not recommended unless such problems of loyalty and sexuality can be worked out.

Friendships in this combination can work out better, particularly when they are relatively free of responsibility and both partners can give themselves unhesitatingly to the pursuit of entertainment and pleasure. Sharing troubles, working out problems and coming to each other in times of need will usually be impossible, however, and may not even be desired. Family members in this combination, especially parent-child pairs, should be able to form a sympathetic bond and to experience few problems with dominance or rebellion. At work, these two are able to work side by side quite pleasantly for long periods of time at quite ordinary jobs, as long as demands are not too great.

ADVICE: Make reliable social contacts. Work on being more helpful in times of crisis. Take on a few added responsibilities of an undemanding nature.

A Bland Mixture

The focus of this relationship is the partners' responsiveness to each other's needs. But although these two may be quite aware of what each of them needs, they are not always sure of what they want. The result is that they have difficulty making strong, sensible decisions and definite choices. This problem may be related to a certain lack of desire in the relationship. Neither partner has a lot of objections to most of their shared activities, but neither has much yearning for them either. Thus they can live or work together in quite a satisfied state for years without ever really making strong demands on each other, or on their relationship. Although happiness should not be sneered at, in this case one often gets the feeling that something vital is missing.

Love affairs can be affectionate in some respects, quite cool in others but they are rarely passionate. Whether overt or covert, they can last for years without having to face a serious crisis. Marriages, too, can be mutually satisfying, and also somewhat uneventful. The spouses' children will benefit from the relationship's stability but might find it a bit uninspiring.

Within the family, a service-oriented approach is seen in relatives in this combination, who tend to make their energies as a pair available to any family member in need of assistance. Aquarius II–Pisces II friendships can succeed in satisfying mutual needs and providing warm and caring attitudes. The partners will be extremely comforting in times of need, and nurturing to friends and even strangers who need a sympathetic ear or psychological counsel.

Professional matchups of this type may go well enough but will rarely have the drive or ambition to achieve great success. In the sphere of human or social services, however, both partners show great sympathy for the needs of others and may be highly effective in giving professional help.

ADVICE: What is it you really want? Dig deep to find your heart's desire. Be more demanding, less easily satisfied. Liven up your life a bit.

Boosting Confidence

These two have the potential to build something of substance together, and their relationship is often a solid one, emphasizing structure but also understanding. The partners are extremely encouraging of each other's talents, and the mutual appreciation in their pairing gives both of them a noticeable boost in self-confidence. Drawing out each other's more creative side and grounding it in substantial and tangible forms is a specialty for the two of them.

In love affairs, problems often arise in the area of sensual excess. Addictions are common here. A kind of fantasy or unreal situation may arise that could threaten to overwhelm the couple's good sense and practicality. Marriages in this combination usually put a lot of energy into realizing creative visions in the domestic sphere. Aquarius II's and Pisces III's are not always able to agree on matters of color, style, design, etc., since they have very different ideas on such subjects, but once they reach a compromise they can institute their decisions swiftly.

Friendships too have a weakness for excess, but it is mainly contained in the areas of entertainment and of simple, nonharmful pleasures. Family members in this combination tend to work hard on their shared projects but also to reward themselves a bit extravagantly; these relatives will have to take care that their love of food, drink, and spending money does not run out of hand. Business matchups specialize in moving far-out schemes and products along to the point where they become credible—the relationship has a record of bringing the most imaginative projects to fruition. Making fantasy pay off commercially through flawless planning and execution is a specialty here.

ADVICE: Keep your passions under control. Don't get carried away by excess. Beware of addictions. Seek compromise. Lessen unreal states.

Glint of the Mirror

These two may have acute problems getting along on a daily basis. The irritation that they usually experience with other people is heightened in their relationship, and they are likely to develop a habit of mutual accusations, charging each other with annoyances of which they are actually more guilty themselves. Antagonistic battles can rage between two Aquarius III's who are mirroring each other's emotions. Blinded by the glint of the mirror they hold up to one another, they are unable to see either themselves or their partner clearly. On the other hand, there is a terrific potential for energy in the relationship if it can be properly tapped and directed. And precisely because it is so confrontational and uncompromising, the matchup can bring both partners far in their personal development, if only they have the patience to hang in there and the toughness to survive.

Love affairs and friendships in this combination are likely to be ephemeral. Explosive and reactive, two Aquarius III's will have a stormy time of it in these personal kinds of interaction, and the relationship will give them little cushioning against each other's assaults. In marriage, on the other hand, the more stable and responsible elements of the Aquarius III personality are likely to emerge. A love of food and cooking, physical exercise, sex or travel will provide the cement in the relationship, whether or not there are children. A free or unconventional lifestyle is common here, but the partners will have to learn to grant each other the same freedom they demand for themselves.

As co-workers, business partners or executive pairs, Aquarius III's will love the challenge of business or brainstorming activities but will often lack the stability to carry through on their endeavors. Easily detoured, they are likely to be off doing something else when they are most needed. In the family, Aquarius III relatives lend liveliness to any gathering—perhaps too much so; although they are helpful, their presence is not always conducive to stability or to the completion of repetitive tasks.

ADVICE: Finish one thing before going on to the next. Organize your life. Be aware when you generate chaos. Look at yourself squarely.

Unrelenting Zeal

An extremely productive relationship can result from this combination, one that will make major contributions to the lives of those around it. It is difficult or impossible for these two to hide their light or energy under a bushel—indeed, any attempt they make to do so will likely result in the bushel catching fire and attracting attention anyway. Aquarius III's may not have a whole lot of ideas about what to do with their energy, but Aquarius-Pisces will often point the way. Bursting with talent, this relationship succeeds best when restricting itself to one area of endeavor that it can pursue with unrelenting zeal.

Romances in this combination are likely to be torrid. This is underlined by the fact that the relationship is characterized by fire and earth, elements here indicating earthy passion. The partners must be careful, however, to keep the relationship from burning out too quickly. Marriages in this combination often aim for the dynastic, with children playing an important role and money matters arranged with succession in mind. Achieving social status is important here, but the relationship's elitist tendencies will rarely sit well with egalitarian Aquarius III's.

As family members too, Aquarius III's and Aquarius-Pisces are prone to building dynasties, so that they work well together. In certain cases business partners will move into the family sphere through marriage. Power struggles can emerge here, but more often an instinct for mutual benefit prevails. Friendships can lack the stability afforded by a group, and here the partners do best when they don't spend too much time alone but, if possible, take their place in a social circle of close friends.

Professional connections can be highly profitable and emotionally rewarding for both partners. Highly inventive, this duo can work for long periods in private together before emerging with a new discovery.

ADVICE: Seek group stability. Cement family connections. Focus your energies on a single endeavor. Don't try to hide your talent—it won't work.

Getting Goofy

These two have a great deal of understanding and appreciation for one another. Because of the extreme sensitivity their relationship involves, they have the potential to overcome tremendous cultural, age and personality differences. The relationship takes little account of conventional barriers and in many ways gives the impression of making a statement about tolerance or lack of prejudice. Actually, the partners are just acting naturally toward one another, without any preconceptions or doctrines in mind. A main focus in this relationship is humor. Laughter, or the lack of it, is an immediate barometer of the partners' prevailing mood.

Love affairs and friendships are often lively, flirtatious and infectiously funny. The mood here is decidedly unserious and upbeat. Aquarius III's contribute irrepressible energies and Pisces I's vivid emotional expression to what others may view as a zany and idiosyncratic relationship. This pair can really get crazy or goofy together and on occasion may even convince other people that they have totally lost it. The more serious or conservative can certainly find them offensive, and may come away from encounters with them feeling insulted.

Work relationships and marriages here are often highly unconventional, yet these matchups make the sometimes severe demand of themselves that they function well. They may insist on certain types of food, furniture, workspaces, colors and a whole host of peculiarities that allow them to feel comfortable but that often get others in the neighborhood quite uptight. Learning to compromise just a bit will help tremendously in allowing everyone to get along without constant friction. Siblings in this combination are likely to liven up almost any family gathering. The only problem—which, however, invariably arises—is how to get these two to stop once they have really gotten wound up.

ADVICE: Make sure other people are enjoying themselves, too. Don't monopolize the space. Tone down your act a bit. Don't be so demanding and needy.

Daily Routine

The biggest problem this relationship faces is being able to find or build a structure in daily life within which it can function adequately. Luckily, it provides itself with the impetus to do so. Aquarius III's and Pisces II's are not exactly on the orderly side; unless they give serious consideration to schedules and fixed duties, the result is likely to be projects or activities that are at best ineffective, at worst chaotic. Such relationships must submit to the establishment of daily routines, standard operating procedures and mechanized systems, or they risk failing to discharge their responsibilities.

Love affairs between these two are highly private and secretive matters. Hidden from the scrutiny of the world, they occupy a very special place in the hearts of their partners; although they are often ephemeral in nature, they will be hard to forget. Marriages are not recommended unless both partners can guarantee a firm commitment to take care of practical matters.

As family members and co-workers, Aquarius III's and Pisces II's do best when they are not required to work closely as a team. If they do have to collaborate closely, they will benefit from strict regulations of the amount of time they spend on their duties, the quality of work required and the quotas they have to meet. It is not to be expected that they will have enough self-discipline to function effectively on their own as freelancers. Friendships in this combination can be extremely pleasant, as long as expectations are not too high or responsibilities too heavy. Games, sports and other forms of play attract this duo, especially those including mysteries and puzzles, since accepting the rules built into the structure of these activities is not a problem for the partners and, in fact, enhances their enjoyment.

ADVICE: Try to get your act together. Put a little more energy into organizing your day. Making fixed commitments will help. Work as part of a group.

United by Differences

This relationship is characterized by a very close emotional or spiritual bond. This pair's differences of temperament seldom divide them but rather unite them, for there is a mutual fascination at work here. Intellectually they are a good match for each other, usually being able to understand each other's intention and line of thought, even if relatively unfamiliar with the subject matter. This kind of unfamiliarity is often a stimulus to learning; both partners often show great interest in acquiring more knowledge about their partner's area of expertise, although such areas rarely overlap. Consideration and sympathy are of the highest importance here. Should Aquarius III's grow impatient with Pisces III's, or should Pisces III's feel Aquarius III's are pushing them too hard, the relationship will suffer not so much from stress than from having to acknowledge a lack of understanding. This is a very loyal pairing, dedicated to helping out in times of crisis.

Love affairs here are often empathic, accepting and affectionate rather than highly sensual or passionate. They can go on for years, and if they have evolved from friendships, the couple may ultimately return to that role. Should lovers try marriage, their chances of success are excellent, since they are capable of showing so much consideration for each other. Should one of the partners fall in love with a third party, however, the primary relationship may be swept by storms of passion, and some hard choices will be necessary.

Friendships and sibling relationships between Aquarius III's and Pisces III's can be outstanding. The partners must be careful, however, not to isolate themselves from friends or family. Taking up fixed responsibilities in social or family groups, if possible, usually serves as a tonic to the relationship's health and the partners' well-being. In professional areas, these two make good business partners, or executive teams working in the service of a large organization, but do less well as lower-level co-workers.

ADVICE: Back off and give each other enough space. No one is the property of anyone else. Remember where your best interests lie. Seek challenge.

Role Reversals

The greatest danger in this relationship is that these two will link up their defenses and retreat behind them in an attitude of supportive self-pity. Extreme sympathy to each other's plight may prove a deadly poison indeed, since it will encourage withdrawal from the very types of confrontation that the relationship desperately needs. But Aquarius-Pisces are tough, and if these two are determined to bring down the walls of their self-imposed isolation, they may make quite a triumphant entry into the world. The great challenge to this relationship, and often its primary focus, is building bridges to society, making friends and setting up a rich and varied social life.

Love affairs and marriages between Aquarius-Pisces can be extremely interesting psychologically. Since both masculine and feminine character traits may be prominent in each partner, these two have many possibilities for interaction: they can easily reverse or modify the roles they play, opening up endless opportunities for change and variety. Yet what this relationship really cries out for may well be stability, and sooner or later this couple will have to come to a silent understanding in this respect. Such frequent change may also cause great confusion for children born into such a marriage. As friends, two Aquarius-Pisces magnify their individual tendency either to isolate themselves in a personal cocoon or to busy themselves with universal issues, ignoring the middle ground or the social side of life. Building new friendships, together and separately, is often the focus of their relationship, which strives for self-actualization and individual personal development. The partners may sometimes give too much emphasis to this direction, at the expense of the primary relationship, but some kind of swing in this direction may be necessary, and balance will usually be established over time.

Boss-employee and parent-child relationships in this combination can be highly ambitious, seeking the full expression of talents and the realization of dreams. These pairs must remain sensitive to both their own and other people's feeling, and should not be too tough or ruthless in their approach.

ADVICE: Make firm decisions and stick to them. Build a meaningful social life. Sympathy can be harmful. Don't protect each other from the world.

Hardheaded Attitudes

These two would seem to be sensitive individuals, very much taken up with aesthetic pursuits, but their combination is in fact a highly practical one. Both partners have a side that is good with money, and that their relationship magnifies, so that strong financial management, sensible tax structures and sensible insurance coverage are all part of the package. Pragmatic, hardheaded attitudes are the order of the day here. Aquarius-Pisces ambition is somewhat softened or diverted, however, by the Pisces I need for emotional contact and sympathy, which throws the emphasis somewhat on interpersonal rather than commercial interactions.

In marriage these two often try to combine the professional and the personal sides of their lives and to help each other out with their careers. They do also sometimes insist on a fairly strict separation of work and private life, but in either case heartfelt feelings, sympathies and support are never far away. Both partners may come to depend heavily on their relationship for psychological support and can suffer terrible letdowns in times of a crisis or separation between the two of them. Love affairs between these two are usually emotionally unstable and unable to sustain themselves for any period of time.

Family relationships can often be very helpful in handling the finances for older or incapacitated family members, as well as looking after the best investment interests of the family group. Although they are sensitive to the feelings of others, these two rarely let their good sense be swayed by emotional considerations. In this respect they may occasionally seem hardheaded in other people's eyes. Friendships in this combination may take part in organized activities such as clubs, teams and educational groups, but must be careful not to give up too much of their free time, or to let themselves be manipulated by more self-seeking individuals.

ADVICE: Be careful not to get too involved in other people's business. Don't always assume that you know best. What can other people do for you?

Other Ways Around

Lots of energy here! The focus of this relationship is a kind of steady stream of emotional expression, which seems inexhaustible. The partners can go on producing or contributing for years on end without getting tired or running themselves into the ground. Rather than feeling stressed, or pushing obstacles aside, they seem to be able to plug into some kind of universal energy source that carries them along with little effort. Both partners also have a natural feeling for kairos, the right time for an action to take place, so that they will usually have the patience to wait and to sense the best moment to make their move. They will rarely discuss or even verbalize these concepts but, rather, will live them, quite instinctively.

Friendships and sibling relationships are particularly favored here. Involvement or interest in artistic pursuits, especially music, dance and the performing arts, is characteristic. The couple's creativity is high and is not of the kind that imitates other people's; instead it tends to strike out on its own. Working to establish its unique vision within a given field of endeavor, and aiming for recognition and financial reward, are typical with this combination. If, in their formative years, they are faced with opposition from adults, they will tend to find other ways forward rather than turning rebellious or stubborn.

The success of work relationships is usually dependent on the partners' ability to get along emotionally. Pisces II's will sometimes want to be left to their own devices, and this can make being their co-worker extremely difficult for Aquarius-Pisces, who are often left with extra work, and resent it.

Love affairs and marriages here are rarely calm, since in these kinds of relationship the partners both provoke and overreact to each other. These responses are hardly positive ones, and in order to begin to diminish them each person may have to concentrate hard on becoming less oversensitive, making their buttons more difficult to push or growing a whole new set.

ADVICE: Stand outside the action and observe. Don't let others control you by making you irritated. It is also necessary to stand up and be counted.

Steps to the Underworld

This can be a very mysterious relationship—not a lot of people know much about it. But it reaches deep emotional levels, and at its core it offers ever more complexity and challenge for the partners to penetrate. It is a relationship in which adventure, danger and risk are conceived not in external but in internal terms. Aquarius-Pisces and Pisces III's realize that the great adventures in life are to be found within, and that the enormous risks (and rewards) in the inner search are not to be taken lightly. After all, they reason, a person can get lost, even die, in a wilderness, but to get permanently lost in the maze of one's own mind can become a more horrible living death. Nonetheless, this pair accepts the challenge gladly, and takes the first steps into the underworld with confidence.

Love affairs and friendships in this combination can occasionally be frightening, because of the monsters revealed to each partner in the mirror of the other's eyes. These two see themselves for what they are, stripped of any role-playing or pretense. Facing up to the more unpleasant aspects of their own personality is daunting indeed, but it is necessary if they are to attempt further personal or spiritual development. It is not the pleasure or satisfaction offered by these relationships that is so valuable to this couple, but rather the opportunity to take the first steps toward self-actualization.

Marriages and work relationships can either bring out the more practical side of both partners or else reveal its lack, in which case the relationship will founder and ultimately fall apart. The relationship is a test, then, that is either passed or failed. Family matchups are highly secretive, so much so that other relatives rarely realize that they go so deep. Their real strength, however, only emerges if they can be acknowledged and seen clearly by others in the light of day.

ADVICE: Don't be afraid to dig deeper—you will be protected. Don't slay monsters—make friends with them. You don't have to hide.

Finishing Up

This can be a slightly chaotic relationship if the partners do not fulfill their domestic responsibilities. Both have a tendency to walk away before the job is finished, not because they are shirkers but because they have simply lost interest. On the other hand, Pisces I's tend to live on a high philosophical plane, and to engage in activities that can be of great benefit to those around them. Service in its purest form, and in abundance, is something they have to offer their family or their social or work group. But the relationship's focus may be blurred, particularly in defining and articulating its real wants. The partners may be constantly giving up on what they really want to do as individuals in order to serve each other's needs, and their relationship can lack direction.

Love affairs between two Pisces I's are not very common, and when they do emerge they are highly complex emotionally. Needs and wants may become confused to the point where the partners don't really recognize the difference any more. It is not usually recommended that Pisces I's attempt marriage, for their mutable qualities are so pronounced that they usually have difficulty sustaining a constant level of feeling for very long, and are quickly lured away by new prospects.

Friendships and family relationships in this combination may suffer from being alternately overoptimistic and cynical, at one moment lost in the clouds, the next having a firm grip on things. When not balancing each other in this respect, the partners are susceptible both to getting carried away by a new trend and to sinking into a seemingly bottomless well of depression. In the professional sphere, two Pisces I's are of tremendous value to their work group. Service-oriented to the extreme, they can pull off minor miracles with a minimum of effort, and will rarely arouse antagonisms or jealousies by doing so. They do, however, have an undeniable air of infallibility, which can get other people uptight. A Pisces I duo has outstanding organizational abilities, seeing very quickly what needs to be done and offering constructive suggestions.

ADVICE: Distinguish between your desires and your needs. Form a clearer idea of what you want. Maintain emotional consistency. Don't be a know-it-all.

Unraveling Secrets

Puzzling to others, this highly personal relationship does not easily reveal itself to the world. A jealous guarding of its private life grants it an air of mystery—which only makes other people want to try to unravel its secrets. The depth of emotional profundity here can be extreme, with silence playing an important role. Partners are strong in the feeling realm but also in that of thought. Pisces I–Pisces II relationships can show great interest in historical, critical and technical matters and can share a lot of insights. The partners' social life is ordinarily restricted to only a few friends or family members. Most often, all this relationship really asks for is to be left alone.

Romantic tendencies can be marked in love affairs of this type, which are often highly affectionate. Sensuousness rather than passion is usual here, with the partners showing an interest in touching, tasting and, in general, experiencing the best that life has to offer. Yet another side can also surface here, a side that is self-destructive and uncritical, and that can move the relationship into dangerous waters without the lovers realizing it. Marriages can last for years, with few problems surfacing but many being hidden away.

Insecurity can be a problem in family relationships, particularly those between parents and children, where mixed signals and a high degree of empathy can obliterate individual boundaries and enhance mutual dependencies. Friendships do best when easygoing, but may not hang together for very long without some common interest or focus. Work relationships in this combination are seldom successful, for they can be lacking in vigor and initiative. Pisces I's and II's bring out each other's less ambitious side, but they can also make each other nervous when they have fixed deadlines to meet.

Pulling Back

These two can be extremely close yet still not get along well on a day-to-day basis. There is a marked tendency in the relationship for the partners to pull back from each other and retreat into their own private world. They can gain great satisfaction from being together yet at the same time can experience great loneliness when their needs are not being met. Part of the problem is that both of them have a deep need for each other's attention, which they simply take for granted most of the time, not noticing how much they count on it until it is withdrawn. They are extremely sensitive to each other's disapproval, which in certain cases can be wielded as a powerful weapon to gain the ascendancy.

Love affairs and family matchups, particularly parent-child pairs of the opposite sex, are emotionally complex. The partners in these relationships can be tremendously irritated by each other but may also show deep vulnerabilities, leading to pain and hurt. Extremely loyal, these two are proud of each other's achievements and steadfast in their support for each other. Interconnections and mutual dependencies often guarantee that they will stay together, although not necessarily in the greatest harmony or psychological health.

In the marital and professional spheres, Pisces I's and III's can be extremely effective in setting up and running a business, a family or both. As a couple they have strong nurturing qualities, with accompanying domestic and maintenance skills contributing to a stable and efficient home base. On another side of their relationship, however, their accepting and overly generous qualities can lead them into being taken advantage of by freeloading types.

Friendships in this combination are often pleasure-seeking, relaxed but also devoted to spiritualized, religious or new-age pursuits. Such relationships do best when the partners are free to withdraw from them for periods of time, without fearing accusations and without arousing feelings of rejection.

ADVICE: Be more selective about who you invite in. Give each other the breathing space you need. Beware of using disapproval as a weapon.

Think Twice

Pisces II's are among the most difficult and unusual personalities in the year, and the chances that one of these two will be a demanding person is quite high. This, then, would seem to be a relationship with a greater chance for trouble than other Pisces II matchups. On the other hand, Pisces II's have an exceptional capacity for acceptance and understanding, which can have the effect of counterbalancing this tendency. Whatever the case, this can be an unusual, even extraordinary relationship—if it ever develops at all. When two Pisces II's meet, they may recognize a kindred soul, but not necessarily one they want to get involved with. Another scenario is that along with the shock of recognition comes a decision to put off further contact until a later, less hectic time. In the family and at work, where choice is not involved, two Pisces II's can often make the best of the situation, despite their powerful disagreements and contrasting points of view.

Love affairs and friendships between Pisces II's can be passionate and claiming but also fun, whether they last for days, months or years. Turbulent emotions are likely to be aroused here, which knock the partners off balance and sometimes threaten to sweep them away. There is a strong feeling of having finally met a true soul mate, which, however, might later be recognized as somewhat illusory. Marriages based on such unstable ground are unlikely to work out unless the spouses are dedicated to discharging their domestic tasks and responsibilities, which can well be the case. A tendency to encapsulate the relationship in an isolated cocoon is perhaps unavoidable.

Professional relationships involving creative business endeavors or artistic pursuits can work out well between two Pisces II's. But co-worker or boss-employee combinations, carrying fixed and repetitive responsibilities, are not recommended. As family members, particularly sibling pairs of the opposite sex, dramatic and exhibitionistic confrontations are likely to alternate with withdrawal and depression.

ADVICE: Think twice before getting involved—it may not be the right time. Do your best to get along. Maintain objectivity. Beware of illusion.

Just for Fun

This relationship can prove extremely interesting and rewarding for both partners and often involves a shared pursuit of a highly factual, technical, artistic or even scientific nature, whether this is a hobby or a professional endeavor. Pisces II's and III's are likely to see eye to eye on many subjects. A Pisces III may tend to become something of a teacher or role model for Pisces II's, helping them to shape their ideas into a commercially salable form, and showing them how to bring these concepts to the attention of the world. The relationship may focus on mutual appreciation, and with it a desire to be of help whenever possible. This may unfortunately make other people feel excluded—there is a real danger that they will see the matchup as a closed society and feel envious and resentful.

As lovers Pisces II's and Pisces III's might have a warm and affectionate relationship, which could go on for years without experiencing many problems. Less passionate than sensuous, they will revel in the delights of table and bed, as well as a whole host of possible activities such as massage and mild drug use. Marriages between these two can easily become a mutual-admiration society, with unreal states prevailing.

Friendships in this combination are often filled with good feeling and the unmitigated pursuit of entertainment and pleasure. Excess can prove a real problem here, and in the end the partners will have to adopt some moderating influences. Professional matchups are often less successful than more casual ones when it comes to expressing interest in a given subject. Deadening routines may injure Pisces II–Pisces III relationships—these two suffer from fixed expectations and are usually more productive when sharing leisure time, working together just for fun, with few or no demands made. In this way the spirit of true investigation can flourish. Family matchups can be empathic and mutually enjoyable, but also irritating and continually fostering misunderstandings.

ADVICE: Keep it light. Seek the middle ground. Curb excesses. Beware of arousing the resentment of others. Remain open to human contact.

Fusing Thought and Action

This relationship can fuse thought and action at a very high level. Often extremely successful in commercial endeavors, two Pisces III's know how to make their ideas pay off; they usually see philosophical and financial speculation as not at all contradictory, considering the creative use of money a highly artistic activity. They must be careful, however, not to get carried away by their endeavors, which they tend to imbue with an unimpeachable status. It can also happen, on the other hand, that they may suddenly abandon a successful endeavor, or one heading in that direction, having tired of it over time, or even having entered a fit of boredom with it. Leaving a string of unfinished business, social or intellectual projects behind them can be characteristic of this combination. They must also fight a tendency to appear infallible or god-like, an image not always of their own fashioning. They should be very careful, in fact, not to attract a whole army of hangers-on, believers and dependents.

Friendships between Pisces III's often evolve into something else, whether a love affair, marriage or business endeavor. Trust and understanding are the crucial factors here, as well as a very special chemistry, which indefinably brings these two farther than most of their other relationships. It is possible for Pisces III's friends to spend hours, days and weeks in each other's company with few irritations or difficulties arising. Their bond is so close that they may sometimes be mistaken for siblings.

Romances between Pisces III's often have a strong aura of unreality, as hindsight may prove. Adoration, worship and unearned trust are the danger signals to be heeded. Actually these partners usually fall in love with their relationship itself, rather than with each other, and at a certain point they can find that they are intimately involved with a stranger. Marriages, too, they may estimate at an unreasonably high value that bears little resemblance to reality.

ADVICE: Don't get stuck on yourself. Beware of flattery and followers. Keep your flame pure. Follow your path. Illusion can lead you astray.

GARY GOLDSCHNEIDER, born on The Cusp of Energy, began his study of human personality as a young man with an interest in biographies and psychoanalytic theory. Goldschneider attended Yale Medical School for three years and studied psychiatry before deciding against a career in medicine. During this time he discovered his deep and abiding interest in astrology and its symbolic relationship to personality. Goldschneider is an accomplished pianist and composer. Since moving to Holland in 1985, he has given many concerts, frequently lectures at conservatories, and continues to compose. He also regularly writes an astrology column for a Dutch magazine.

JOOST ELFFERS, born in Amsterdam on The Cusp of Revolution, has created and produced numerous illustrated books over the past twenty years, including Tangram and Cat's Cradles. Elffers makes his home in New York.
